ON DUTY UNDER A TROPICAL SUN. BEING SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

FOR
The maintenance of Health and Bodily comfort and the Treatment of Simple Diseases; with Remarks on Clothing and Equipment for the Guidance of Travellers in Tropical Countries.

BY MAJOR S. LEIGH HUNT, Madras Army, AND
ALEXANDER S. KENNY, M.R.C.S.E., A.K.C.
Senior Demonstrator of Anatomy at King's College, London; Author of "The Tissues and their Structure."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"By attending to the instructions which are given in this eminently practical work, the traveller or sojourner in tropical countries will learn how he may not only tolerate but enjoy life in them."—Broad Arrow.

"This is a small book, but a very useful one, being full of valuable hints as to how Europeans may best preserve their health in hot countries. Of particular value are the chapters on diet, dress, and equipment, matters of the first consequence to the preservation of physical health."—Globe.

"The author's suggestions and remarks are based on the most practical experience. The book contains a good deal in a small space, and should be invaluable to all who have to go to the tropics."—Saturday Review.

"The value of the work is enhanced by the fact that the writers have limited themselves solely to suggestions which have arisen in their personal experience, and every intending visitor to a tropical climate would do well to take the book (which is small and concise) in his kit."—Morning Post.

"The soldier, the traveller, the sportsman, are told not only how to ward off the most common diseases and inconveniences, but how to deal with the forms in the absence of a medical man."—Vanity Fair.

"This is a small work, but it contains in less than 140 pages an amount of valuable information and experience that might well have filled a volume twice its size."—Overland Mail.

"Gentlemen whose duties may lead them to take up residence, either temporarily or permanently, in the East, will find a great deal that is useful in this volume."—Sportsman.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION
OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 20 millions of our fellow-subjects.

By

V. I. WEMIROVITCH-DAUTCHENKO.

TRANSLATED FROM THE RUSSIAN

By

E. A. BRAYLEY HODGETTS.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

St. James's Gazette.—"The new Biography of Skobeleff is . . . deeply interesting, and the translator has done well to make it known to the English public."
Contemporary Review.—"It is most interesting, as well as . . . instructive throughout."
Graphic.—"The subject is of abounding interest. . . Mr. Brayley Hodgetts deserves hearty thanks for bringing such a life so clearly before the public."
Academy.—"The account of the third battle of Plevna . . . is one of the most stirring pieces of military journalism that we have ever read."
Public Opinion.—"Such will suffice to give us an idea of the 'Reminiscences' of the man who knew no fear, who passed as by a miracle through every danger, and who, had he lived, might have become the greatest soldier of our age. . . The work is, in every respect, thoroughly well got up. . . Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. E. A. Brayley Hodgetts for the able manner in which he has translated the work into English, and who has succeeded in making it so interesting and readable."

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION
 OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, April 3; Madras and Allahabad, April 2; Calcutta, April 1.

A very important discussion will take place at Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon, May 5, at the meeting of the National Indian Association. Sir William Muir, K.C.S.I., will take the chair at 4 p.m.; and Mr. Narendra Nath Mitra will read a paper on "Child Marriage in India and its Remedy." No more momentous subject can possibly come under the consideration of an Association whose aim is to "aid Social Progress and Education in India;" and we cannot doubt that there will be a large attendance of members and their friends. It is a most hopeful sign when we find young Indian gentlemen of high education and good attainments devoting their attention to important questions of social reform—by which they can confer more solid benefits on the Empire, than by a thousand "talkee-talkee" deputations on difficult and complicated political questions to Lord Kimberley. Mr. Mitra has carefully studied the problem with which he deals in all its aspects; and his conclusions, whether he is able to convince his audience of their accuracy or not, will certainly be listened to with appreciation and respect.

Well may Lord Salisbury complain that the policy of the present Radical Government is simply a policy of after-thoughts. As Lord Ripon is somewhat more Radical than the majority of his colleagues at home, so we find this "afterthought policy" reaching its fullest development in India. What, for instance, can be more monstrously absurd, or more injurious to the interests of the Indian taxpayers, than this ridiculous business of the Quetta Railway? Only a year or two ago, the Government of India was to be seen busily tearing up the rails from the Quetta line, and disposing of all the valuable materials (collected by Lord Lytton's Government) for a few paltry rupees. Scuttling was the order of the day. Russia was Mr. Gladstone's dear friend; and to talk of a scientific frontier was to affront the dear Czar. The rupees, obtained for the sale of materials as old iron or in other ways, would help to conceal Lord Ripon's extravagances; and so the work of destruction went merrily on. Suddenly it is announced that Russia has taken Merv, and that the Cossacks are on the frontiers of Afghanistan. Hey presto!—everything is panic and confusion. The Ameer, at the first sound of the troubles ensured by Radical cowardice and folly, is bribed with an enormous subsidy wrung from the poor ryots of India. Next, Ayub Khan has to be bribed with another subsidy, to induce him not to break cover in Persia. Then, there is to be a demarcation of the northern boundary of Afghanistan. And lastly, the materials of the Quetta Railway dispersed or sold for old iron, are again to be collected at immense cost. A trifle of two millions sterling is assigned by Lord Ripon to the job; and we are to have a costly military frontier railway—a railway that will now cost huge sums to keep up, which would have secured for England and India the whole of the immense trade of Central Asia, if only we had not scuttled from Kandahar.

It is unnecessary for us to say that we entirely approve of the construction of this railway, costly and burdensome though it must now be through Radical folly. And under the wise and practical supervision of the Hon. Mr. Hope and Colonel Stanton, we have no doubt that all the arrangements for its construction and maintenance will be as good as human skill and foresight can make them. But what is heart-breaking to the true well-wisher of India about this business—as about nearly every other act of Lord Ripon's administration—is this, that the Midlothian craze has irretrievably lost for us all the most substantial and most important benefits that ought to have accrued to India from the statesmanlike measures of Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Lytton, whilst we find ourselves, after all, committed to all, and more than all, the difficulties and expense which might have attended the thorough carrying-out of their policy.

Again, consider the seizure of the Proclamations of the Mahdi in India, of which the telegrams tell us. This idiotic Government has been playing with the Mahdi for months and months past—sacrificing poor Hicks and his brave colleagues, General Baker's army, Moncrieff, Tewfik, and the martyrs of Sinkat, the thousands of Arabs and hundreds of Englishmen slain on the Red Sea littoral, the garrison of Shendy, and so on through a frightful butcher's bill—and then it suddenly wakes up, to find that the mischief it has been propagating in Africa has already spread to India! Does not every honest Englishman cry out, of this Government, as Cicero did of Catiline, Quousque tandem?

We learn from the telegrams that Mr. Hope and Colonel Stanton recently examined the entire of the Quetta railway, and found it practicable "at no prohibitive cost." It would be interesting to know what Lord Ripon would regard as a "prohibitive cost" in the matter of this railway. He can hardly expect to get the rails and other materials that were torn up by his orders and sold as old iron, brought back to him at the same price as that which he obtained for them. The whole of this transaction is curiously illustrative of Radical ideas on Retrenchment, nearly as good as the illustration of Radical notions of Peace afforded by the Soudan massacres.

The condition of the Calcutta Money Market corresponds to the general tone of public affairs throughout the Empire, and causes "serious disturbance to business." Among the causes assigned is, naturally enough, "the reluctance of European capitalists, to touch Indian speculations while the present uncertainties prevail."

To add to the disquieting character of the outlook, the continued drought in many parts of Bengal and Northern India is beginning to cause great uneasiness. The present Government of India has hitherto had the most wonderful good fortune in the way of favourable seasons and bountiful harvests; it would be a terrible thing for the country if natural and unavoidable calamities were now to be added to those artificial ones which have been due only to ignorance or incompetence.

We are glad to observe that Mr. J. M. Maclean's name is put forward to-day with approval by the Times, as that of the probable successor of Mr. Andrew Cassels in the Indian Council. Everyone who knows anything of India will heartily concur with the Times that no better appointment could possibly be made. Mr. Maclean possesses every qualification to do honour to the post, and to serve the interests of India. If Mr. Gladstone and Lord Kimberley desire to atone for the shameful wrong done to India by the outrageous appointment of Mr. Bertram Currie, the owner of Coombe Warren, the nomination of Mr. Maclean would be the best evidence they could offer of the sincerity of that desire.

MESSRS. WM. WATSON and Co., India Agents, of 27, Leadenhall-street, City, have on view a fine exhibition of Indian brassware and black wood furniture.

THE Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending April 1:—

"The demand for tonnage does not materially improve. Ready steamers have succeeded in raising their rates owing to a continual scarcity of space available for immediate loading, but the liners that have been trying to work forward for April have so far failed in obtaining anything like the prices asked. For sailing tonnage there has been a moderate demand for seeds for April shipment, which has resulted in the fixing of two vessels for London, one for the Continent, two for America, and two for Mauritius, all at about last prices. Our unfixed tonnage has decreased to about 38,000 tons."

We take the following on the Calcutta Tea Market from Messrs Carritt and Co's Fortnightly Report:—

"Small sales were held on the 20th instant, when 3,727 packages were catalogued, of which 3,724 changed hands. There was not much animation in the bidding, and prices were fairly steady at about previous quotations. The season is now virtually closed. Exports to Great Britain from 1st May, 1883, to date total about 57,500,000 lbs., leaving only a few odd shipments still to go forward. It is not thought the season will be so early as was anticipated, rain being generally wanted in the producing districts."

The Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending April 14:—

"General Sir Arthur Cunynghame, G.C.B.; Colonel C. T. Hitchens, District Superintendent of Police, Cuttack; Captain Richard Kennedy Gahan, Master Attendant of Cochin."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated April 20:—

"The Calcutta Englishman says that several proclamations of the Mahdi have been seized by the police in this country, and that his agents have succeeded in distributing the proclamation in many parts of Persia and Arabia."

"A Simla correspondent writes that the pilgrims from Balkh, Bokhara, Samarcand, and Cabul arriving in Peshawur all express the opinion that the Sultan of Turkey and the Sheikh Ul Islam instigated the war in the Soudan. This seems to be the prevalent idea in Central Asia, and is probably the result of Russian inspiration."

"The letter of the Government of India to the Secretary of State, forwarding the memorial of the Bengal zemindars against the Rent Bill, has been published in the local newspapers."

"In this letter, the Government, after passing by, as scarcely demanding refutation, the rhetorical denunciations contained in the memorial, proceeds to combat its serious arguments, and contends, first, that in considering the nature of an administrative measure like the permanent Settlement, it is open to the Government to consult the records, with a view to tracing the origin and object of the provisions of that settlement; secondly, that the Government never asserted that the zemindars were a body without possessory or hereditary rights before the settlement; thirdly, that the rights of the ryots were not finally and conclusively settled by the Permanent Settlement. Various objections of detail urged by the memorialists are then noticed at length, and answered; for the most part by reference to the Bengal Government's letter of September 27 last, which was published some time ago."

"It is believed that the Bill, when returned for report to the Bengal Government, will be accompanied by a covering letter from the Government of India, conveying the views of the latter on certain points of the measure. The letter will probably express a general approval of the amended Bill; but the views of the Supreme Government, are understood to be expressed in terms which seem to denote that it is still open to argument on many points."

"The reports as to the prospects of the crops, received from many parts of Northern India are still most disheartening. In Tirhoot the failure of the khariff, or rice, and of the rabi, or spring crop, seem to be widespread. Regarding the adjacent districts of Sarun and Chumparun, it is said that the expectation of half an average crop is a sanguine estimate, and that there will probably be much suffering. In Behar the prospects of the indigo crop may almost be regarded as hopeless. The drought in Darjeeling will interfere seriously with the opening of the tea season."

"Heavy rain fell in Calcutta on Friday evening, but it is not yet known whether it extended further inland. Assam and Cachar have had a fairly good rainfall, but the jute-producing districts of Eastern Bengal are suffering from drought. Simla is threatened with a water-famine, and although it has not yet been found necessary to carry out the proposal to send away the workmen employed in building the new public offices, it has been deemed expedient to issue strict rules for avoiding the waste of water."

"Complaints of the want of rain and of the failure of fodder for cattle come in from various parts of Upper India. So far the year has been characterised by excessive heat great drought, and, in most provinces, an exceptionally high mortality, due chiefly to cholera and small-pox."

"The condition of the money market continues to cause serious disturbance to business. The Bank rate is now 10 per cent. in Calcutta, and 11 per cent. in Bombay. Government securities and shares of all kinds are very low, and it is generally admitted that business has not been so slack for many years. Nor does it show any signs of revival. Various causes are assigned to account for this state of things—for example, the over-speculation of last year, the inadequacy of the present resources of the Indian banks and capitalists to cope with the growing trade of the country, the reluctance of European capitalists to touch Indian speculations while the present uncertainties prevail, and the grave apprehension entertained of the disastrous consequences which would result should the new loan be raised in rupees. Whatever be the true explanation, this, at least, is certain—that an early announcement by the Secretary of State of his intention to throw the loan on the London market would do far to restore confidence."

The Governor of Bombay has reconsidered the order passed against Dr. Banks, whose case I mentioned last week. Dr. Banks will now be transferred as civil surgeon to Surat, instead of being sent back to his regiment in disgrace."

"I am now in a position to state that the rumours regarding alleged negotiations for a reoccupation of Candahar are unfounded; as also those suggesting that the Government intends to send an agent to Herat or to lend British engineers to fortify that place."

"The Ameer, it is said, takes the annexation of Merv very coolly, and has not expressed any serious alarm at it."

"The demarcation of the frontier of Northern Afghanistan will probably be necessary sooner or later; but this is a matter of arrangement between the Foreign Offices of London and St. Petersburg. Apparently the only step which the Indian Government has resolved to take in the completion of the railway from Sibi to Quetta, by the Hurmai route. This will be taken in hand at once, and prosecuted vigorously. Mr. Hope and Colonel Stanton recently examined the entire route, and found it quite practicable at no prohibitive cost. The prospects of traffic from Pishin and Candahar are good, and if the irrigation of the Pishin Valley be improved there are fair prospects that its fertility will be greatly increased."

"An active search is being prosecuted for the large and valuable deposits of rock oil which are believed to exist in Belochistan."

"The road from Bokhara to Maimena is reported to be dangerous and closed to travellers. The Ameer's troops have suffered another reverse from the Mongols; but he is still sending arms and military stores to the spot. Protective posts and grain depôts for the use of travellers are being established at every stage of the Cabul-Peshawur road; but the Ameer is levying a duty of one rupee per head on all who pass."

"The Sirdars Raschid Khan and Abdul Gufar, respectively ex-Governors of Candahar and Jellalabad, have died in prison."

"The Ameer's sons, Habibulla and Narisulla, have been summoned back to the capital."

"The operations of the Afghan troops in Shignan and Roshan have been suspended. Intertribal disputes prevail in Bajour, Swat, Dhir, and the vicinity."

"A disastrous fire occurred at Rangoon on Wednesday last, over forty houses having been burnt, and the damage being estimated at from ten to twelve lakhs of rupees. The fire originated from some one dropping a lighted chereot upon a bundle of cane in a rattan store."

"The Kachyen rising in Upper Burma has been suppressed, and all the troops have been recalled except 500 men. The Monay Tsabwa declines to submit."

"A destructive fire has occurred in Mandalay, and the great temple of Guadama has been completely destroyed. All the gold leaf stuck on the brass image of the Guadama Buddha by successive generations of worshippers, and valued at from eight to ten lakhs of rupees, has been melted off by the heat. This result of the fire appears to have caused great consternation being held by the superstitious to be a sure sign of the downfall of the Burmese Empire."

The late Major Charles Covey, of the 1st Durham (68th), would have obtained his lieutenant colonelcy in October next, when Colonel Tucker completes his five years in command. The step will now go to Major R. A. Crawford, who commenced his service in the 2nd Queen's in 1858, exchanging to the 68th in October, 1872, as a captain; he rejoined the battalion after five years as adjutant of Auxiliary Forces in May, 1882; he served in the China War of 1860.

It is notified, in accordance with instructions received from the Government of India, that an officer who has received the reward of Rs. 500 for passing the examinations in Persian shall in future, on passing the examination in that language referred to in paragraph 4 of the Resolution of the Government of India, Home Department, No. 35—1307, dated 4th May, 1874, receive only the difference between the amount specified above and the full reward prescribed in the latter order."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

PETER THE GREAT.*

Mr. SCHUYLER has made for himself, as much as found, a great opportunity of historical distinction by these exhaustive volumes, describing perhaps, the most interesting and the least known periods in Russian history—that in which Peter moves as the central figure, devising schemes and formulating policies for the advancement of his people, and the expansion of his Empire. Mr. Schuyler's volumes are, strictly speaking, more a history of the period from 1660 to 1725 than a biography of Peter the Great; but as a contribution to knowledge they are scarcely less valuable, because conveyed in a rather heavier style and more diffuse manner than readers of biographies and popular lives usually look for. We are no longer dependent for the details of the great Czar's career on the inaccurate but very attractive pages of Voltaire, on the precipitate and biased decisions of M. Rambaud, or on the very thin and somewhat colourless sketch of Lord Dover. And although Mr. Schuyler would have obtained a more popular success by excluding, or greatly curtailing, many of the details, on the discovery of which he has a right to, and does, pride himself, the solid worth of his work will be recognised by all historical students, and will obtain for him permanent fame and recognition.

The life of Peter was one continual romance, in which the tragic element was never long or completely concealed. His childhood was passed amidst the turmoil and tumbles of a Court which itself had little or no authority except by the favour of the Streltsi, a militia or National guard, constituting the main army of Russia. Proclaimed Czar through the bodily and mental incapacity of his elder brother Ivan, he was in a few months deposed by the Streltsi, acting under the instigation of his half-sister the Princess Sophia, and obliged to divide authority with Ivan. Too young to realise the responsibilities of powers or to greatly appreciate its privileges, he retired into rural life, and passed his time first in playing at soldiers, then in forming the nucleus of an army, and finally in building and designing ships. Mr. Schuyler gives an excellent and most interesting sketch of those early passages in his career, as indeed he also does of his tour in Western Europe. He preserves all the authentic expressions of opinions passed by contemporaries on this young ruler who had just been admitted within the pale of European civilisation, and who seemed to the refined societies of London and Paris little better than a barbarian. We can also especially recommend those chapters which relate to Peter's many war, and foreign enterprises against Sweden, Turkey, and Persia. The difficulties against which Peter strove were many and severe, his principal credit was that he showed his countrymen how they might be vanquished. Success was often denied him, but what he never failed to do was to indicate the way in which it should be ultimately attained. The more closely the details of Peter's life are considered, the more readily will it be admitted that he was a remarkable man, while his place in history is assured as the true author of Russia's present greatness and position.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The Liberal Party in Chelsea must apparently be rather shy of dealing with the subject of practical English politics, when they are reduced to holding a meeting at the Kensington Town Hall "to urge the claims of India to the sympathy of the British people" and "to record their approval of the policy of Lord Ripon as Viceroy of India." There is surely no want of evidence of the broad sympathy of the highest classes in England towards the representatives of India, when H. H. the Maharajah Duleep Singh is to be seen in the halls of mourning at Windsor among the princes and potentates of the land. The history of the past century can exhibit a full record of the goodwill and sympathy of the English Rulers of India for the people committed to their charge, although sharply accentuated by the incidents of the Mutinies of 1857, when the serpent stung the hand of its preserver. But as soon as the fierceness of the conflict was over, the generous instincts of the English promptly asserted themselves towards the conquered and inferior race. From the days in which Lord Canning so boldly proclaimed a policy of clemency and conciliation, a long series of Viceroys including such men as Lord Lawrence, Lord Mayo, Lord Northbrook, and Lord Lytton without any consideration for English political and party feelings, were all conspicuous for their endeavours to promote the true interests of the dusky millions committed to their charge. How, then, does it come to pass that the electors of Chelsea and Kensington are now invited to urge the claims of India to the sympathy of the British people, and to eulogise the policy of the present Viceroy, Lord Ripon? The answer is unhappily not far to seek. It was reserved for Lord Ripon, as the representative of Her Majesty's present Liberal Government, to introduce into Indian administration an element which had previously been almost unknown in that system; and to endeavour to pervert the imperial authority of his office to the promulgation of the political creed which his party professes to hold. The Indian officials, the members of the famous Civil Services, had, as a rule, been colourless in their political opinions. They sought for promotion and honourable distinction, not, as the partisans of a Ministerial party, but by their good works and by their hearty sympathy for the welfare of the people of India. Under Lord Ripon's administration all this has been changed. Admittedly he was acting under instructions from Mr. Gladstone when he commenced his career by reversing Lord Lytton's policy in Afghanistan; and we have already begun to see the unfortunate results of this perverse and unwise political action. We are not going to galvanise the corpse of the defunct Ilbert Bill, a measure which was very simple and harmless in its initial stage, but in the hands of Lord Ripon and his partisans received a political colour and character, that promptly spread discord amongst all classes of Indian Society, and disclosed to view the bitter hostility which so many of the Natives, and especially those who have acquired a knowledge of the English tongue, entertain towards their European rulers. The exposure of Lord Ripon's administrative incapacity, and the enforced surrender of the dangerous and mischievous portion of the Ilbert Bill, might perhaps have served as a salutary lesson to some statesmen. Nevertheless his Lordship has introduced a Bill into his Legislative Council under the name of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, embodying some of the most fatal principles of the Irish Land Laws, and fraught with infinite danger to the true interests of the agricultural classes in the peaceful and prosperous province of Bengal. If Lord Ripon had contrived to alienate the loyal feelings of the English settlers in India by the Ilbert Bill, he has now been equally successful with his Tenancy Bill in sowing discord amongst the natives, and in arising their undisguised hostility to himself and his government. This then is the administration to which Mr. Firth, the Radical representative of Chelsea, invites the attention of his constituents, and which he paraded in evidence of the political wisdom of the party to which he belongs. One of the principal speakers at Mr. Firth's meeting was the Bengali gentleman called Lal Mohun Ghose, who, though verbose in speech, seems to be almost a prophet in his own country. He has now explained how it was that the Liberal majority was gained at the last election. According to Mr. Ghose, it was due to the prayers of the people of India. Mr. Ghose assures us (and how can we doubt him?) "that at the last general election, there went forth from every Indian home and heart a most fervent prayer for the success of the Liberal party. That prayer was answered." If a similar prayer is uttered by Mr. Ghose and his brethren at the next general election, perhaps a different answer may be given to it.—I am, yours truly,

THE DEFENCE OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

"Had the 10,000 men that had been told off on the north-west frontier to meet disturbance promptly marched on Mooltan in 1848 there would probably have been no siege, or at least the affair would have been as insignificant as it proved momentous. Decisive and energetic measures have never yet failed, though contrary courses have often brought us very near destruction. Arcot, Plassey, Buxar, Assaye, and Laswaree, tell their own tales, as do Ballie Monsoon and Elphinstone theirs. With less means than Monsoon Goddard successfully performed twice his task. By a bold front Goddard marched across the continent of India and carried everything before him. Monsoon by distrusting his troops, by retreating when he ought to have advanced, drew Holkar after him, and lost his army. A few hours' stand, or a single march in the right direction would have saved Ballie. A three mile movement would have preserved Elphinstone, even after months of insupportable union, the very first day he taught the Afghans their game." Page 376 of "Sir Henry Lawrence's Essays," Messrs. Allen and Co.'s edition.

SIR,—I wish to urge that prompt decision and rapidity of movement are essential in our dealing with disturbances in India. In former times Lord Lake had to depend on his good cavalry and artillery horses; now we are greatly assisted by railroads. A good system of military railroads ought to enable us to transport swiftly our artillery batteries from one end of India to another.

Rebels in India must never be allowed to consider themselves safe for twenty-four hours. They must be harassed every moment with the fear of being ridden down by dragoons and swept away by grapeshot.

Why then have we neglected to construct a military railroad from Jubulpore to Nagpore, by which North and South India could be connected?

Neither the East Indian Railway Company, nor the Great Indian Peninsula Company, considered that it was their business to make this railway; the former company understood that it was its duty to supply railway communication only north of the Nerbudda River; the latter company could not desire and construct two expensive lines from Bombay to Jubulpore. The Southern line would not be likely to pay good dividends, as the agricultural produce of the Nagpore and Jubulpore divisions is the same.

The British Government, which is responsible for the peace of the country, dream that as Lord Dalhousie did not require this line, why should they? Their mottoes are, "Let well alone, the present quiet will last our time, and sufficient for the day is the evil thereof."

Lord Dalhousie's Minute on Indian Railways was written previous to the Mutiny; he had no idea that such a volcanic eruption was about to occur; he was a civilian and ignorant of the language and brooding discontent of the Native Sepoys.

Had any other Government in the world been in possession of India, it would not have delayed for twenty-seven years to make a railroad from Jubulpore to Nagpore; war always finds us unprepared for it. The English are, and have been for 200 years past jealous of a standing army, and only love it when they are in peril. They, therefore, shut their eyes to the wants of an army during a time of peace, and no better illustration of this feeling can be adduced than the neglect during twenty-seven years to provide railway communication between the British armies of Bengal and Madras.

Our engineers have discovered a good line for a railway, on which the gradients will not in any place exceed 1 in 100; and the whole expense will be only 94½ lakhs, or say £800,000, see Colonel Stanton's Annual Report.—Your obedient servant, April 18.

P. S. Michelet in his history has informed us that the French lost the battle of Agincourt by sticking in the mud; the French army could not stir either to fight or to fly; the slowness of movement of the Madras Column in the Mutiny was very vexatious.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

MR. GRANT DUFF ON THE DIFFICULTIES OF GOVERNING INDIA.

MR. GRANT DUFF, in distributing the prizes to the successful pupils attending the Madras Christian College on Friday, March 21, put an obvious truth in the almost aggressively epigrammatic manner which occasionally atones for the effusive "cock-suredness" of his deliverances on political and social questions. One can forgive much to a man, even when he assumes the attitude of Jupiter talking to a black beetle, if he has the faculty of putting his unpleasantly dogmatic assertions in a new and picturesque light. And, therefore, there is a certain amount of gratitude due to the Governor of Madras for his suggestion that "all who have anything to do with the effecting of progress in this country are engaged in a unique work to which history supplies no parallel." This sentence embodies a concise statement of the theory which has been so elaborately worked up by Professor Seeley in the Indian chapters in his "Expansion of England." When Mr. Grant Duff went on to declare that, in his opinion, history supplies nothing which is strong enough to lead those who are interested in the effecting of progress in this country to expect success, he again restates, in a succinct form, the views which, with a certain amount of elaboration, have been formulated by Professor Seeley. The latest great authority on the philosophy of Indian history, and the possibilities of the political future of Hindustan confesses that, after a careful review of all the conditions which surround the existence of the British Raj in this country, he is unable to assume, with any degree of certainty, the position of a prophet as to the ultimate results of the extraordinary mission which, chiefly by accident, has been accepted by the English people with reference to the great peninsula of India.

It is this truth which seems to have impressed itself on the mind of Mr. Grant Duff, and which, with a certain amount of epigrammatic force, he has reproduced in his speech at the Christian College. He is, probably, right when he speaks of the situation as one into which the element of despair should not be permitted to introduce itself. But there is this to be considered—that both Professor Seeley and Mr. Grant Duff, evidently recognise that the enormous work, the outlines of which they have each endeavoured to describe, is one which must be done, comparatively speaking, in the dark. There is no light supplied by the precedents of history to guide even the most intelligent and patient of workers, who seek to perform the task of reconciling the active commercial instincts of the West with the graceful, but comparatively inactive instincts of the Indian civilisation. When Rome imprinted the marks of her social and intellectual strength upon the rude barbarians of Central and Western Europe, she had to deal with peoples who, even when clad in sheepskins and goatskins, were much more nearly alike in racial and in climatic conditions, with the inhabitants of the Imperial city on the Tiber, than are the native inhabitants of the Indian presidencies, even up to the present day, who, for a century, have had their political destinies directed by men who have graduated at Oxford, who have trained at Haileybury, or who have received their preliminary education at Addiscombe or Sandhurst.

It is a misfortune of Mr. Grant Duff—a misfortune which is not shared by Professor Seeley—that he approaches the difficulties of the subject under political conditions which render him incapable of adequately dealing with them. The Governor of Madras is unlucky enough—having regard to his position in this country—to belong to a party which habitually refuses to recognise the nature of the duty which England owes to India. The Radical theory of the relations between England and her great dependency is that it is in the nature of a misfortune that they were ever permitted to come into existence. This is a theory which Mr. Grant Duff, now that he finds himself supremely presiding over the destinies of the great province of Madras, would, no doubt, repudiate with all the energy which in his case, has been begotten by a youth and an early manhood, strengthened by the sea-borne breezes which blow across the hills of Morayshire and Banffshire. But, unfortunately, the suddenly-adopted belief of an individual member of the English Radical party, that it is for the interest of the English people that the relations between the United Kingdom and the Empire of India should be rendered closer and stronger, can avail but little to counteract the paralyzing influence of a general feeling, inspired by powerful Radical politicians, like Bright and Freeman, that unless certain abstract humanitarian theories can, in every case which comes before the Government departments, be fully realised, it were better that the limits of the British Empire should be circumscribed by the seas which dash upon the coasts of the British Islands. It is this deadening influence which renders the policy of the Foreign, the Colonial, and the India Offices, under every Radical Government, weak and vacillating. Nor can the evil which is thus created be remedied so far as regards the welfare of the province of Madras by the prettiest and the most epigrammatic speeches which by the aid of Mr. Grant Duff's rhetorical genius, may be made in the metropolis of his presidency.—Englishman.

THE "ENGLISHMAN" ON MR. SLAGG'S REFORMS IN INDIA.

MR. JOHN SLAGG's recent contribution to the literature of Indian politics takes the form of a little brochure, entitled "Reforms in India," published under the auspices of the "National Reform Union"—the quotation marks being specially necessary to indicate the ridiculous egotism of the persons who are prepared to cure earthquakes by the administration of patent pills. Mr. Slagg, however, notwithstanding his misfortune in being called upon periodically to address reform associations which have not the slightest sympathy with the feelings of the men who are endeavouring to develop the commercial resources of India, has expounded an idea which is, at all events, worthy of some serious consideration. The theory of the junior member for Manchester is, that a standing committee of the House of Commons should be appointed for the purpose of considering the political affairs of India. Mr. Slagg, in his laudable endeavour to make the politics of India a prominent feature in the business of the House of Commons, has the disadvantage of belonging to a political party, some of the most influential leaders of which do not hesitate, inferentially if not directly, to describe India as a dependency of the Empire which unnecessarily adds to the difficulties which have to be solved by the Administration. The questions which Mr. Slagg raises, and which have reference to the possible abolition of the London control over the Government of India, would be more effectively put if they were placed in the hands of a politician whose party were not pledged to the reduction of the limits of the British Empire to such a scale that the English taxpayer, who benefits by the commercial advantages of the Greater England, should not be called upon to bear certain imposts for the advantage which he thus receives.

But, at all events, Mr. John Slagg, in endeavouring to create in the House of Commons a spirit which will, if he be successful, introduce an added interest into the affairs of India, will have the advantage over some of his competitors who are working in the same direction, in being animated by an intelligent desire to promote the development of the commercial relations between this country and Europe. In this respect, he holds a position infinitely superior to that of certain of his legislative colleagues, who, as may be learned from certain public statements which have been recently made in India, are endeavouring to form what is called, by an abuse of the English language, "an Indian party in the House of Commons" and whose motive for doing so is, almost without disguise, described as a desire to promote the private interests of persons who are intimately engaged in the quarrels of some of the Native States of India. It is, beyond all question, desirable that the affairs of this country should be discussed in Parliament with a fuller and a more accurate knowledge that has yet been brought to bear upon the consideration of the question affecting the well-being of the great Eastern Empire over which the Queen of England presides. But in order that Indian business should be treated with adequate knowledge in the House of Commons, it is requisite that Indian questions should be put before the lower portion of the Legislature by men who may be regarded rather as the representatives of a great commercial community than as the agents of persons in India, who profess to have made themselves the champions of candidates for the acquisition of power in Native States. It is the misfortune, rather than the fault, of Mr. John Slagg, that he has attached himself to a party in the House of Commons which, from the nature of the support upon which it is obliged to rely, is incapable of dealing with great Indian questions with the strength which ought to belong to an administrative power, such as is capable of fully recognising, in the strength of its grandeur, the theory of a great British Empire. But, at the same time, there is every reason for wishing well to Mr. Slagg, in his endeavours to create, in the legislative body to which he belongs, an increased interest in the relations between the mother country and the Empire of the East. Mr. Slagg will, no doubt, encounter severe difficulties in persuading his political friends that the future relations between Calcutta and Downing-street are of more importance than the question whether a possible voter in an Irish county should be admitted to the privilege of the franchise. But his experience as one of the most influential members of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce has already taught him that the proper understanding of Indian questions in the British Legislature means an influx of wealth into the manufacturing districts of England, which would render, for the persons affected the study of economical science during the next half century almost a sinecure. If an "Indian party" is to be formed in the House of Commons, it must be created by the aid of men who, like Mr. Slagg, have a thorough knowledge of the possibilities of developing the commercial relations between India and Europe, and not by persons whose claim to a special knowledge of Indian affairs is based upon their privately-received information with regard to the backstairs gossip of the Court of native Indian potentates.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE "INDIAN STATESMAN" ON THE SUNSET LAW. WHATEVER may be thought of the principle of the "sunset law," under which, if the Government revenue be not paid before set of sun on quarter day, all leases and under-tenures on it become void and it is put up for auction sale free, of all incumbrances, all are agreed that it forms a most important part of our present economical system, and one which should be worked with much care. Izaak Walton recommended that where a live worm was used as a bait, it should be put on the hook as tenderly as the nature of the act permitted, and we have no doubt he would, on the same principle, have considered that where the auctioneer's hammer not only disposes of landed property, but beats down and extinguishes all tenant rights on an estate, it should be wielded with discretion. It is therefore not strange to turn for a moment to the official notifications of these sales in the last Bengal Gazette, as giving as a glimpse at the practical working of the system under which four-fifths of the land of Bengal has changed hands during the last half century. We do not pretend to be able to gather much from mere advertisements, but we must take our chance with our readers in this respect, as there is nothing else to go upon.

The first condition of a fair sale of landed property is that timely notice should be given to enable intending purchasers to make inquiries. To use an old saying, no one cares to buy a pig in a poke; and an estate as to which one has not the time to learn anything is quite as hazardous an investment. Hasty sales end in inadequate prices, to the loss of those whose rights are disposed of. As an illustration of this principle, take the proclamation of sale of five estates in Chittagong, one of which pays Rs. 6,540 revenue, and is therefore a large and important property. The advertisement appears in the Calcutta Gazette of the 19th instant, and the sale is announced for the 24th, giving the Calcutta purchaser five days to get to Chittagong, and make his inquiries. Beyond Chittagong lies Cox's Bazaar, at which place there will be, according to the proclamation, another sale on the same day. Capitalists are enterprising, and there is no reason why some of them should not get to Cox's Bazaar in five days, if after the sea voyage to Chittagong, they can get relays of horses, and do not mind travelling at a gallop without food. The Collector of Tipperah does not hold his auction until March 21, so that Calcutta purchasers had a whole week to make their arrangements. They had however best lose no time, as the route from Naraingunge is difficult, the Ganges there being often scarcely passable, and there are no conveyances on the other side. The collector of the new district of Khoolna was to hold his auction on the 20th, the day following the advertisement. He does not say at what hour, nor do any of the other collectors commit themselves on this point. It is, however, of some importance, as the Bengal Gazette is delivered late on the morning of the 19th, and, if morning office hours have been introduced at Khoolna, the investor would arrive too late on the 20th. The collector of Moorsheadabad however, beat all his brother officers, and panting time toils after him in vain, for he advertises on the 19th in Calcutta, that he will sell on the same day at Berhampore. He had to sell eight estates, one of which pays more than eight thousand rupees a year of revenue.

Precision of description is another essential in an auction advertisement, and there is little room for error in this respect in the proclamations, as no information is given except the name of the estate, its revenues, and the arrears due. We do not object to this, as it might be hard to give details, but when there is any room for confusion, a share only in the estate being for sale, the advertisers avail themselves of the opportunity. Thus opposite a very large estate advertised for sale at Bhangulpore, we find the note "This estate is to be sold, excluding the shares of Buldeo Sing, &c.," no mention being made of what share the privileged Buldeo Sing may be possessed of. This is an error which runs through nearly all the advertisements, and it is quite unnecessary, as the same record which shows Buldeo Sing's share to be exempt, shows also what that share is. On the estate Baryarpur, in Saran, we are told "the separate share will be sold," without any information as to what amount that share may be. It may be three-quarters, or a one-hundredth part, let the auction purchaser take his chance. In this district the list of properties for auction is very long, including forty-one estates, and we notice that one of them bears the suggestive name of Salepur.

We observe that the arrears for which the sales are to be held are not always large when compared with the revenue, the index to the value of the property. The arrears on many estates of considerable size amount only to two or three rupees. The entire estate of Saristonayar, with a revenue of five hundred and sixty-four rupees, is to be sold for a demand of five annas and three pies. In the same district, Beerbhoom, a larger property, having a revenue of one thousand one hundred and forty-three rupees, is to be brought to the hammer on account of an arrear of one anna and three pies. We see the Receiver under the High Court and a European firm, entered among the joint-owners of an estate, with two thousand seven hundred and twenty rupees revenue, to be sold by Mr. Wilson, Collector of Midnapore, for an arrear of fifteen annas and six pies. The same officer announces for sale an estate with a revenue of four hundred and forty-one rupees, for an arrear of four annas and six pies, he himself as official manager for the minor 'ward' Haripado Mosanto, being entered as a joint owner of the defaulting property. We would point out that collectors have a discretion as to the realisation of arrears, and are particularly instructed not to sell estates for very small sums. Probably they consider anything over an anna a considerable demand, but landowners will hardly endorse this view. If these statements are read in England, it may there be thought that it is not quite consistent with the character of a paternal Government to sell a large property, and crush out all subordinate rights on it, for a public demand of a penny half-penny, or with the position of a District Officer to sell up himself for sixpence. It will be said that the financial year is drawing to a close, and that Sir Auckland Colvin wishes the result to be as favourable as possible. We own the importance of this consideration, but think it possible that the revenue might sustain the delay of collecting a few rupees, until some less severe method of realisation could be put into operation. Nothing strikes one more in the list of the owners of the estates to be sold, than the number of names of women and children. Taking at random the Nuddea and Jessore notices, we find that some of the owners of every estate advertised for sale are of this class, except that in few cases the shares are not specified. The peremptory sale of property for revenue is certainly harsher where the owners, on account of youth or sex, are disqualified from looking after their affairs. Hard cases, they say, make bad laws. But the ruin of widows and orphans by Government demands will always excite sympathy. The Court of Wards only interferes in exceptional cases; the majority of these helpless persons are left to sink or swim, as best they can. We do not profess to be able to draw much information from mere advertisements of sale, but something, we think, can be inferred from them as to the way in which this terrible engine for the realisation of public demands is handled. The notice of sale given is not sufficient to allow of purchasers making any inquiries, in some instances even of their being present. No hour for the auction is ever fixed. The description of the property is vague and misleading. The sales are made for the most trifling amounts, such as could easily be recovered by the distraint of movable property, and which must generally have been left unadjusted merely by some miscalculation or misapprehension. If an auctioneer sold horses on such a system, he would find few customers. Finally, the estates are generally owned in part or altogether, by minor children or native widows who cannot be expected to realise the consequences of an arrear of an anna. Considering that these sales are the key to the land revenue of Bengal, and the foundation of the title of many of its landholders, we think that their conduct needs more attention.

THE "INDIAN SPECTATOR" ON MR. WEBB'S INDIAN LYRICS.*

Good poetry needs good verse. But English versification is generally so difficult that unusual care is needed to produce good verse. Those alone can succeed who have a natural turn for numbers, and can thus easily obey elementary laws of versification. The difficulties in the path of the ungifted are insuperable. English poets, as a rule, have been erratic in the matter of versification. They have not bound themselves by any consistent standard. Still, some test of the excellence of verse can be laid down. It has been observed by an able writer on versification that "the human ear is beyond doubt the supreme judge. If in any language the melody of verse be such as to leave the most sensitive ear nothing further to desire, the verse of such language may safely be held to furnish the standard we are seeking; nor will there be any difficulty in defining its laws, since the laws of such verse will ever be found uniform and consistent: indeed, were they not so, the ear's judgment might be questioned; for if the true test of a good verse be that it satisfies a perfect ear, the true test of a perfect ear is that its judgments, if analysed, shall be found based on definite laws consistently applied." Now, it would be hypercritical to apply this test to the volume of "Indian Lyrics" which we have for more than a month resisted the temptation of opening. We do not propose to base our criticism on the purely academic ground. It is enough to say in this connection that Mr. Webb has brought to bear upon the composition of his lyrics scholarly ability such as reaches the ordinary standard of English versification. If the poems are to be judged by their melody, we must willingly accord them fair excellence. It is not expected that Anglo-Indian poetry should rise to the standard of excellence which could satisfy the perfect ear—the ear that is scientifically attuned to the harmony of numbers, in quantity and accent. Mr. Webb would be the first to disclaim that his verses are so good that he would have them judged by the standard of "perfect ear." Here is an accomplished educational officer who, having discovered in himself a talent all his own, has attempted to beguile his leisure hours in the coolness of an Indian spring in stringing together some airy sketches of the life and manners of Anglo-Indian society in versified composition. But we can assure the reader that they are far from the "idle themes" which the modesty of the writer suggests in the third stanza of "Envoy" which concludes the handsome volume. No doubt it is a herculean effort for the Anglo-Indian don, who bends the young Babu mind to Western modes of thought and action, to be at all composing poems.

"When heat is roasting us alive, (Thermometers at ninety five.)"

That is scarcely a condition under which to invoke the Muse. The writer's humorous apology for dabbling in rhymes is best seen in his "Album Verses."

"But ah! 'tis vain to plead excuses,
Men have their fates, and pen their uses.

And mine it is to take the latter,
Collect ideas begun to scatter,
And versify (a thought how horrid!)
In zone that's fitly classed as torrid."

And here is the fashion in which he sets about his appointed task.

"Ye Muses nine,
And, Bearer mine,
Divest me straight of coat and collar,
And come thou nigh, O punkawallah;
In yon verandah take thy s'atus,
And pour upon me such affatus,
As represents the combination,
Of coolness and inspiration.
'Tis much, I grant you, in the tropics,
To write without a want of topics."

The volume gives ample proof of the abundance of topics therein treated. And we should think every Anglo-Indian ought to possess a copy of the Indian Lyrics to while away a few hours during the approaching heats. The "worthy lays" he has fashioned deserve to be widely read. They are most of them bright and sparkling. They will serve well as a sort of light intellectual tonic. In this sultry weather they will act on the languid mind as Kemp's refreshing non-alcoholic beverage, Vivone. The poems have none of the giddy effects of firing champagne. These are sure to wake in the mind of the reader "random music."

"Light subjects of lighter strains,"

"Perchance some note for tired ears,
To soothe a languid hour, or break
The Indian sameness of the years."

It will be impossible in the brief space we can afford for a review to more than point out the humorous as well as the serious thumb-nail sketches the writer has woven into song. The first part consists of sonnets on Indian domestics generally employed in the family of an Anglo-Indian of position. The Punkawalla, the Khansamah, the Kitmutgar, the Bowarchi, the Ayah, the Coachman, the Bhisti, the Durwan, the Mali, the Chhaprasi, and others are very well hit off. The descriptions are true to the life. The distinct trait of each "object" is well set out with rhyme. Englishmen at home consider servants an annoying and "spying" tribe. They may be astonished to read here how many servants are to be found in an average Anglo-Indian household, and how docile they generally are. The piece called "Song," which pleasantly describes life in India, contains the following verse on Indian domestic servants:—

"Think too of the servants that here we possess;
A butler to feed you, a valet to dress;
A porter to guard you, a coachman to drive,
And a wallah to fan you and keep you alive;
A groom for your horse, and a nurse for your son,
A messenger swift on your errands to run;
A gardener, a cook, and a man with a broom,
To look after your dogs and to sweep out your room."

The writer has keen sympathy for the Punkawalla, without whom, it would seem from internal evidence, life for him in India would hardly be worth living. He has such genuine appreciation of the patient services of his knight of the fan, that we find the latter is twice sung and casually mentioned in half a dozen different sketches. His reflections on an old Punkawalla who died almost at his post pulling the punkah have a touch of true pathos. In fact this poem on "The Old Punkawalla" (p. 65) is one of the gems of the book. It very much reminds one of the godly man of Islington immortalised by Goldsmith.

"There was a man, an aged wight,
He was not stout and strong;
Who went to pull, as best he might,
My punkah all day long.

One day I wondered much to spy,
My purkah's motion stopt,
Dozing that aged man, thought I,
At last his rope has dropt.

Soon his resting place was known,
Nor was he far astray,
For in an outhouse all alone,
Stone-dead the old man lay.

The measure of his toil was full,
He felt his hour was nigh;
He gave his rope one final pull
And then retired to die.

And hence I said we well might learn,
From humble lives we shun,
How uncomplaining toil may earn
The crown of duty done."

But to pass on to other sketches. The speculations of the cunning Khansamah, who is entrusted with the bazaari supplies, the story of the Kitmutgar as to a greedy kite swooping down on the meat on its passage from the kitchen, across the open compound, to the dining room, the cook who "with scant supplies and crudest gear" spreads before you a "luxurious meal," the Ayah who laughs with the bearer or is engaged in confidential chitchat with him while the children playing on the Maidan clamour for return to the Bungalow, the weakness of the coachman for buying any number of whips, and that of the Syce to share the grain and fodder with his horse, the Durji who can never make a decent dress, but is always making and unmaking it; all these and other commonplaces of Anglo-Indian domestic life are portrayed with a light finger in excellent rhyme, and with genuine kindly humour, which is the special charm of the sketches. The writer's love for the poor servants peeps through all the sonnets.

In the second part are given short descriptions of "Ourselves and Others"—the heavenborn Civilian, the town Doctor in large practice, the dignified Judge who thinks of retiring on a substantial pension, the briefless Barrister who somehow is pitchforked into a snug berth on a handsome salary, the elderly Indian Colonel who drinks his pegs, smokes his pipes and marries a young wife, the station Chaplain and his irreligious audience, the hopeful Missionary, the unfortunate Eurasian discarded alike by European and Native, the fat-paunched but lean-shanked Zemindar, greedy of the gains which the Permanent Settlement brings him, the poor, patient, ill-used Ryot, and the voluble Bengali Babu, of supple mind and versatile, assiduous in conciliating the Sahib—each and all are treated in a pleasant manner with a dash of sly irony underlying them. These sketches may not come up to the rich poetic prose of Ali Baba. We miss in them his clever vivisection of the Anglo-Indian official characters. Neither do we find here his satire, generally so adroitly aimed that it must be well examined to convince you of the wound inflicted by that velvet hand. Still, Mr. Webb's sketches have sufficient merit of their own, especially when it is remembered that the writer is obliged to confine himself within the orthodox number of lines allowed to a sonnet. The Civilian is well described as all mankind's epitome:—

"Lo, the Civilian! Now he sitteth down,
And writes Reports full long; anon the quest,
Of murders foul doth fill him with unrest,
Gauging right well official smiles and frown,
For, versatile, he mounts with equal ease
The Bench or saddle; here inspecteth swift,
A gaol, and there a school; or doth uplift,
A voice of warning on the things he sees,
Finance or Famine."

What a commentary the following is on a Church audience! The Chaplain feeds

"A flock that little heeds his care,
.....till to its ear,
Repentance seems dream, and Faith a name."

Scarcely better is the fate of the Missionary who feeds valiantly on hope,

"His heart, at starting, with despair is numb,"

However, with the lapse of time he is able to achieve something which is, of course, better than nothing.

"His sober days he passes, hoping still,
Of the vast harvest here before him spread,
To reap some ears, though few."

Here is the Zemindar:—

"In house whose walls are weather-stained and dank,
.....abides,
The Zemindar.....
There with him lodged dwell all his kin besides,
A greedy crew; on what his wealth provides,
Slothful they live their life, an aimless blank,
Meanwhile his neighbour Zemindars he eyes,
With looks askance, oft spending his estate
In suits litigious; jealously he tries
The local school perchance to dominate,
Strong in the landlord gains and feudal state,
Which that Perpetual Settlement supplies."

We respectfully draw the attention of Mr. Roper Lethbridge and the Hon. Mr. Stanhope to these lines.

"Palm shadowed, on the vast Gangetic plain,
Stands his low clay built cottage, thatched with reeds,
Its one room holds the little that he needs,
.....He scantily heeds.
So food suffice, too simple to complain.
And sometimes, mid his fellows, as they troll,
Their rustic songs at eve, in mellow mood,
He half forgets the ills that tame his soul,
The nightly tiger thirsting for his blood,
The ambushed cobra gliding from its hole,
Nature's blind force, the famine, and the flood."

Part 3 contains miscellaneous sonnets. We think these are of the least satisfactory. The descriptive passages lack the warmth of imagination. One may well feel disappointed with the very first of the series Mountain Ranges. There is nothing awe-inspiring; nothing of the grand sublimity for which "the father of mountains" is famous. Edwin Arnold might have done better justice to the Taj Mahal and the Kutub Minar. "Modern Bengal" may be taken as the most interesting of the sonnets in the third part. We suspect the author's prejudices have betrayed him into giving an incomplete picture, so to call it, of the average Bengali. Still, his advice to the Chatterjis, the Mukerjis, and the Bannerjis is not without value.

"Orators, Editors, who would lead the van,
Of India's march, yourselves be just and true,
Manners I ween, not rhetoric, maketh man,
And his best hope soars higher than rupees,
Ye talk and scheme—when will ye rise and do,
Bannerjis, Mukerjis, and Chatterjis?"

Mutatis mutandis these verses are fairly applicable to our local lions also.

The fourth part of Mr. Webb's book contains lyrical pieces, some of which are of considerable merit. The poem on the Mosquito is admirable, and may be read with particular interest just now when the tormentor of the Indian race attacks us on our bed frontier during these dog days. The description is exact and full of humour, and will be much appreciated. The mosquito is a "little plaguy creature

"Forth on pinions pliant, Like the fabled giant."

He roves on the

"Scent of English blood reliant."

He is an ethereal creature with the greed and thirst of the vampire,

"Foraging for dinner,
Like a worldly sinner.
Maiden young and vernal,
Babe or shrivelled Colonel,
All alike are spoil for thee, thou imp infernal!"

He is again thus addressed as a marauder:—

"Profligate marauder,
General defaulder,
When wilt thou begin to set thy house in order.
Must, on river stations,
Sailors of all nations,
By thee tortured, utter painful imprecations?
Still must maiden tender,
Fresh from England render
Up to thy defacing touch her beauty's splendour?"

Here is the moral:—

"Vain is all repining,
For, to my defining
E'en mosquitos small must, like men, be dining.
Mixed with gold their dress is,
Life must have its crosses.
And our frames endure the prick of thy proboscis!"

The "Crow" is another good piece; and so are verses on Babu Keshub Chunder Sen, the Gorgeous East, the Dawk Bunglow, and the Song of Death. These are all handled in a deft manner in the best of the gentle, humorous vein with which the writer is well endowed. The part containing P. and O. rhymes are also very readable. But all these and many more must be read in the original. We will conclude this notice with some extracts from "Song" which describes life in India as pleasant and not so irksome as the perpetual grumblers on fat salaries, ever anxious to complete their term and retire, depict. The contrast between English and Indian life and climate is fair, and we may add, generous.

"Don't talk of old England in patriot vein,
I'm sick of its clouds, and its fogs, and rains,
For a climate that's cheerful, not fickle and drear, Give me the clear sky that shines over us here."

"You may brag of your sport, but pray isn't it true,
That your only wild boar is shut up in the Zoo?
And as for your hares and your foxes, I find,
A good honest tiger is more to my mind."

"In your routs and your balls you may take a delight,
In your club-rooms by day, and your concerts by night,
But where are your canterers o'er meadow and lawn,
When the peepuls are whispering their joys to the dawn?"

And so on, concluding with the following.

"Then here's to the land of the peg and the pipe,
Of moonlight and mangoes, siestas and snipe,
Its mornings of sunshine, its evenings of calm,
Here is health to the home of the lotus and palm."

As to the future of his lyrics Mr. Webb is not very sanguine. He is apprehensive lest the pages may be put to some base use. So he playfully addresses the trunk maker in the "Poem" in the following strain:—

"Polite trunk maker, who dost line
Thy boxes with such ware as this,
If thou shouldst find these leaves of mine,
Prove for thy purpose not amiss;
I prithee, if it ever be
My critics' page my fortune shares,
Paste not the sheets inscribed by me
In the same trunk that harbours theirs."

Here we are happy to be able to differ from the modest view taken by the author. His sketches will have permanent value for some historian of the next century to describe Anglo-Indian life in 1884. Some able writer, like the author of the "Book of Bombay," may be found to do justice to the contemporary events portrayed in his "Indian Lyrics," which have given us more pleasure than we remember having received on perusal of more pretentious efforts of the kind.

LETTERS BY GENERAL GORDON.

THE following unpublished letters, addressed by General Gordon to a gentleman then in Egypt, but now in Bombay, have been placed at our disposal:—

Cairo, Feb. 15, 1877.

My Dear Mr.—, The Khedive has given me over the Soudan, in addition to the provinces of the Equator, and with full powers of firman, &c. So there is the end of slavery, if God wills; for the whole secret of the matter is in that government, and if the man who holds the government is against it, it must cease. Excuse my writing more now. I will write after my departure, which will be on Saturday. Believe me, &c.

C. G. GORDON.
Feb. 18, 1877.

My dear Mr.—, I have received my firman, and it is a very full one. One of the greatest comforts about my appointment is that it was an entirely spontaneous act of his Highness, which makes its value a hundred-fold greater than if it had been extorted.—Yours, &c.,

C. G. GORDON.
Khartoum, Sept. 1, 1878.

My dear Mr.—, I wrote you a letter the day before yesterday, but tore it up, and wrote to Rivers Wilson on the subject. To-day by a mere accident I came across the "Gazette des Tribunaux," and I found you had my ideas completely on what was necessary for the country, i.e. that the tribunals should judge the cases between the authorities and the natives. It would be the salvation of the country up here to establish such a tribunal. At present I find it quite impossible to legally convict a bad governor if I send them to Cairo, they are never punished, but generally are promoted. In fact so convinced am I of the inutility of getting anything done, that I illegally punish them myself, with every punishment I can think of. Rivers Wilson will tell you what I have written to him. You see nearly every employé here fears to serve me faithfully, for he knows I am ephemeral and thinks of the future. The only way to stop this, and to insure a faithful set of governors, is to establish a tribunal here, and even if it cost £10,000 a year, I would not grudge it. You have but little idea how this would cut at the roots of injustice, and how the country would gain thereby. Carry out what you have written in "Gazette des Tribunaux" and form a tribunal at Khartoum, and you will confer an estimable boon on yours sincerely, C. G. GORDON.

P.S.—The tribunal may consist of three Europeans and three Arabs natives of this place the president with casting vote. C. G. G.

Khartoum, Sept. 5, 1878.

My dear Mr.—, there is another very important point which should be regulated and should be in the jurisdiction of the tribunals, viz., the establishment of a scale of pensions for old employes. You see men are dishonest in these countries, because—(1), they may be turned out at a moment's notice, so they rob while they can; (2) they may serve faithfully for years, and, when useless, they are turned off like dogs. I have made, for the Soudan, a scale of pensions, but I expect the authorities do their best to prevent its execution, and, in general, it is looked on as a fantasie, while they reason a bird in hand is better than two in the bush.—Yours, &c., C. G. GORDON.

Khartoum, Nov. 10, 1878.

My dear Mr.— Could you do anything to get me a decision on the following matter? There are some fifty or sixty prisoners for manslaughter in the Soudan prisons. Some have been there for ten or twelve years, waiting till the heirs of the deceased men turn up, and as this is virtually imprisonment for life, it seems hard. I have asked Nubar and the Khedive for an answer; they neither of them care to give me one. In the Code Penal, page 494, the crime of manslaughter, No. 273, is punished by six months to two years' prison, but page 497, Art. No. 227, your code refers to the "Cheri," and that puts me out. My people up here are dead against the release of the men, for they say that the canon of the Padishah says they are to be kept in prison till the heirs of the deceased man turns up, although it may be the deceased man had no heirs. Read the Treaty, 17th August 1877, Arts. 1 and 2. Read the decrees of H. H. of same date, Arts. 1 and 2, Slave Convention. You will see by the treaty slavetraders are to be punished for vol avec meurtre, the punishment of which is death all the world over, yet the decree says it is to be punished with five months' to five years' prison. Again the decree says, till seven years have expired in Egypt, and twelve years have expired in the Soudan, then the prohibition to buy and sell slaves is to come in force, so that as those terms of years have not expired, the prohibition is not in force, and if it is not in force, then the sale and purchase of slaves is legal. Well, if it is legal, why seize A if he crosses over to Jeddah with his four slave-servants? Supposing there are eight A's in the boat with 32 slaves, they would be all seized and punished. This is most unjust. Again A may buy three slaves in Cairo from B, why should he not buy four slaves at Shaka from B? It is equally legal, yet if A is caught on the road, he is punished. As for the slaves being ironed, it proves nothing, for slaves who run away are ironed all over Egypt. The vital question to determine is are slaves to be considered property till the term of years are ended? If so, you must leave them alone till the time comes to liberate them, but to prevent any new slaves being acquired, the existing slaves should be registered, and no unregistered slave should be recognised. Possessors of unregistered slaves should be punished. C. G. GORDON.

Khartoum, Dec. 2, 1878.

My dear Mr.— Thanks for your letter of 27th October. The great difficulty for a tribunal here, with Europeans, is this fearful climate. This year has swept off nearly all the newly come Europeans, and has been terrible for the Arabs. As for usury, I settle that matter very quickly, for I simply ignore any debt with interest of more than 1 per cent. per month. You will be glad to hear that we have scotched the slave trade. We caught forty-two caravans since June, and Wyldé says Jeddah is very angry at it. If not turned out, I shall stay on here for years, though I have little hope to do any permanent good. My successor will always in three months be able to obliterate what I may have established. I have my lot cast here, and I cannot think I can better it, dull though it is.—Believe me, &c., C. G. GORDON.

P. S.—The slave dealers with their armed slaves are in revolt in Bahr Gazelle, but I have hemmed them in, and they must break ere long. The Sudd or grass obstructions in the Nile, which gave Baker so much trouble, have formed again and stop the route to the Equator, but I am at work to remove them. C. G. G.

THE SLAVE QUESTION.

The slave question must be divided into two: the slave hunting expedition and the domestic slavery. The first, viz., slave hunting, will be immediately checked; the second, domestic slavery, is more important and difficult to deal with. Slaves in possession of individuals were considered, previous to, and at, abolition of slavery, to be property, otherwise why did England compensate slave-holders in the West Indies? In the same way they are considered property in Egypt. At present, any slave who is ill-treated, can complain to the Government, who, on investigation and proof, can liberate the slave. In this Egypt compares favourably to our law previous to the Abolition Act. The difficulty is how to abolish domestic slavery; it can be done by paying compensation, some millions, by an arbitrary use of force, or by allowing a time to elapse, after which the holding of slaves will be illegal. The two first modes are out of the question; the last mode is the only available method.

MEMORANDUM ON THE BAHR GAZELLE.

In 1858, or thereabouts, Consul Petherick pushed up a hunting party for some distance up the Bahr Gazelle, and from year to year, up to 1867, he with other foreigners used to work those lands; they hired Donglowi, &c., of the Soudan, to garrison their posts, and used to barter beads, &c., for ivory. At or about 1867 it became evident that these stations not only went in for ivory, but also for slaves, and the Europeans left off their transactions, handing over their stations to Arab merchants at Khartoum, who agreed to pay the Government of the Soudan a yearly rental for their stations. Of course, under the Arab merchants, the slave trade became the paramount interest, and the free brigand life, which these bands led, became very attractive to the Donglowi, &c.

The Arab merchants lived at Khartoum, nominating vakeels or agents to look after their interest at Bahr Gazelle. (For greater details on this subject see Baker's "Albert Nyanza.") Among these vakeels was one whom the others reverence for his pluck and longer experience; his name was Zebehr Rahama. The Arab merchants, who were heads of these brigands, resided at Khartoum, and were, in return for yearly rental, allowed to send up powder and arms to these stations, which increased year by year.

In 1869 Guffer Pasha, Governor General of the Soudan, thought it advisable to send up and try and get these countries more under his authority, so he sent up Kutshuk Ali, one of the largest proprietors of these brigand stations, to the Bahr Gazelle. With Kutshuk Ali went an Egyptian captain, and a company of Arab troops and a black officer, Bilal, with a company of black troops. (Bilal had had a queer history; he had been the secretary of the Sultan of Darfur; he then left Darfur and went to Cairo; he then forged the Viceroy's seal (Said Pasha) and made out he had powers to raise a regiment. Said Pasha forgave him.)

The expedition of Kutshuk Ali had hardly reached the Bahr Gazelle, when Kutshuk Ali died; and a feud broke out between the Egyptian captain and Bilal as to who was to command. Of course, Zebehr Rahama and the other chiefs of these stations were dead against coming under the direct rule of the governor, and looked with evil eyes on the expedition. The Egyptian captain felt his importance and made friends with Zebehr, while Bilal was antagonistic to him. The black troops being under Bilal took to plundering the tribes round Zebehr's station which ended in Zebehr's (with or without the connivance of the Egyptian captain) falling on him and killing him, getting wounded in the leg in the engagement. (For all this see Schweinfurth's "Heart of Africa.") Whether Zebehr got rid of Bilal, he was supreme, as the Egyptian captain collapsed.

It should be understood that up to the arrival of Bilal in Bahr Gazelle, the Sultan of Darfur had been friendly with Zebehr, but when he heard Bilal, his runaway secretary, was there, he cut off all relations with Zebehr, and would allow no grain to pass down to him. Then Zebehr began invading his fortress, and this went on from time to time till 1871, when the Sultan sent a large force against Zebehr, which Zebehr defeated, and then occupied Shaka. The Egyptian Government now began to see that Zebehr was a factor in the Government, and that it was necessary to decide vis à vis de lui. Ismail Pasha Yakub, the Governor-General of the Soudan, said assist him, so he was made Bey. The Sultan of Darfur, not content with the defeat he had encountered, decided on sending another army against Zebehr Bey. This expedition was defeated by Zebehr Bey, as he had the assistance of the Razagat Arabs of Shaka. His Highness the Khedive seeing that if he did not take action it was probable Zebehr Bey would push on and conquer Darfur, decided to send a force against Darfur, and thus prevent Zebehr's occupation. Ismail Pasha Yakub, the Governor General of the Soudan, was thereupon sent with orders to co-operate with Zebehr, to occupy Darfur.

In 1875 Ismail Pasha Yakub with a force of Egyptian

Regulars advanced against Darfur, while Zebehr Bey advanced from the south to co-operate. Zebehr Bey outwitted Ismail Pasha Yakub in an engagement near Maniwaahi. The Sultan Ibrahim of Darfur was killed with his two sons, and thus the rule in Darfur fell into the hands of Egypt.

Zebehr Bey, made Zebehr Pasha, for his services, quarrelled with Ismail Pasha Yakub and appealed to the Khedive, and asked to come to Cairo to plead his cause. His Highness permitted this, and sent for Ismail Pasha Yakub to answer against the charges of Zebehr.

No result being possible between the two, Gordon was appointed Governor-General, and Zebehr Pasha was kept at Cairo.

Gordon, on his accession to office, had the revolt (which broke out in Darfur) to deal with, in which there is no doubt Zebehr had some hand, hoping by this means to get back.

The revolt in Darfur having been put down, Gordon treated with Zebehr's son, and thinking, idiotically, that he was truthful, Gordon trusted him, and the consequence was that Zebehr's son in the spring of 1878 broke into rebellion. Gordon sent Captain Gessi with some troops to coerce him. Zebehr's son attacked Gessi, who is a captain in the Italian army, on Jan. 1, 1879, and got defeated. Gessi followed up the defeat and killed ten Chiefs of Zebehr's, and from 2,000 to 2,500 of his troops, and is now pursuing the son of Zebehr.

The root of the slave trade is in these people; destroy the brood of Zebehr and Co., and the kidnapping of slaves is at an end.

It is owing to the enterprise of the English and other Europeans that these countries are even opened. It is owing to the short-sightedness of the Egyptian Government in taking rent from their successors, the Arab merchants, that it, the slave trade, has been continued.

With the destruction of Zebehr's son, and the brigands with him, the slave-trade ends.

No man on this earth has been the cause of so much misery as Zebehr Pasha Rahama, who walked at large at Cairo. He is the essence of the slave trade, and it is a disgrace he is not seized and imprisoned for life.

Jan. 24, 1879.

C. G. GORDON.

I will add the sequel to the story when I hear. I mean to evacuate all these lands, where Egypt has sown nothing but misery.

Khartoum, Jan. 25, 1879.

My dear Mr. —, I add these few lines to my memo. The conquest of Darfur was forced on Egypt, for had not Egypt acted, then Zebehr would have conquered it, and would have probably not rested quiet there. Further, owing to the power of Zebehr, when in Bahr Gazelle it was quite impossible for Egypt's Khedive to stop the slave trade, for it was Zebehr who fed the trade, and Egypt could not get at him—he was too powerful. It would have been better for His Highness to have explained this state of affairs when pressed to break down the slave trade. You see indirectly we owe all this slave trade and this revolt indirectly to Petherick's and other Europeans' energy in going up to those countries. Had they never gone up there, the Arabs would never have followed them, and the vast emigration of the Soudanese natives would not have taken place to those lands. In fact, the occupation of the Bahr Gazelle was in reality an emigration of the restless members of the banks of the Nile from Dongola, Berber, Senaar, &c. These men emigrated and have left large tracts depopulated. If you ask, "Where are the owners of these empty houses?" The answer is, "They have gone to Bahr Gazelle."

Baker describes well the murders, &c., &c., and crimes of all kind which went on there under the rule of brigands. What has angered me with Nubar, who well knows all this, is that he proposed to me, "to send back to Zebehr, whom he had seen, and who had promised him that he would give the Government a tribute of £25,000 a-year if he was allowed to go back." Now, Nubar knows there is no trade in these lands, therefore, any tribute must come from slaves, for in their razzias, nominally for ivory, they capture these herds of slaves, and enormous countries now lay in waste through it. Even if Zebehr could give them what he says, one could never suffer it from such a source. Coulez qui coulez, we must destroy these brigands; but I will tell you frankly it is not a popular measure in Cairo. Very few are glad of Gessi's victory. Indeed, they wish he had failed in general. He has done first rate; for the least force the Egyptians asked me to send was 8,000 regular troops and 1,000 irregulars. What would that have cost me, when Cairo would not aid me with a pound or a man, and were recommending me to let the head ruffian return?—Believe me, &c.

C. G. GORDON.

Port-Louis, March 3, 1882.

My dear Mr. —, . . . As for the slave-trade nothing can be done. I feel sure you see what a state the Soudan is in by this revolt and with the forays of Abyssinia, and one can scarcely hope they will do anything. Also it seems to me that death is no such dreaded event. I believe we will wonder we ever feared it, and so if these blacks die it may be a kindness.

So little does one know of the future. I will write to you letter for letter and tell you how I fare.—C. G. GORDON.

March 13, 1882.

My dear Mr. —, You may be sure that the revolt in Kor, dofan, of Achmut the Mahdi is connected with the remains of the slave hunters' gang, and that the vines are being pulled by Zebehr Pasha, who is working to go up to the Soudan again, even if he has not gone. He will try and go up, and that under pretext of putting down the revolt, and will then simply throw off the yoke of Cairo, for there is no sympathy between the two peoples—the Soudanese with Cairo, and vice versa. Now, would this be very prejudicial? Think over it. Of course it means the renewal of the slave trade, and consequent suffering of the Central African tribes, but it will work its own remedies, for in the long run the slave will rise and destroy their own bondage. That even the slaves will be liberated of the free will of their owners is now no longer to be expected. The time has past, for now the people have their own fate in their hands, and it is not likely they will give up their property, for such the slave essentially is (I send you some extracts showing how Gladstone looked on slaves in 1830. Send them when done with to my brother, Sir H. W. G.) Therefore, you may make up your mind that the slave trade or slave holding will never be put down, and there is no use bothering about it. The slaves by this popular movement will soon prick up their ears and rise, though it may take ten years. It is no use crying over spilt milk, and these things are ordained. If you read the occupation of Egypt and its revolts under Napoleon I., you would see the writer says these revolts were owing to the interference of the French with the Coptic accounts. The history I mean is the Univers Pictoresque Egypte Moderne, a capital book. My opinion would be to leave things to work themselves out and to abandon any direct action in Egypt, beyond keeping other Powers from interfering. We went in for money, it was the bondholders who have ruled and brought us to this pass.—Believe me, &c.,

C. G. GORDON.

Students of the Rig-veda will be glad to learn that Mr. Frederick Pinott has made an important discovery with respect to that venerable collection of poems. The hymns have been supposed to have been placed together promiscuously, or, according to some principle, the clue to which has been hopelessly lost ages ago. Mr. Pinott has, however, just discovered the system on which the whole is arranged; and his views on the subject will shortly appear in the journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. In the interim, we may state that he establishes the important fact that, the first mandala, or book, is a ceremonial liturgy, and is, so to speak, the prayer-book of the ancient Brahmans. The next seven Mandalas are also arranged in a liturgical order; the ninth Mandala has its hymns arranged according to the mitre, and the tenth Mandala consists of two separate collections of hymns. Each individual hymn in all the Mandalas is placed where we find it according to a precise law deduced from the Rishi or poet, the Deity to which the poem is addressed, the length of the poem, and its metre. When these circumstances are known, and the use made of them for purposes of arrangement, it is found that each hymn fits exactly into the place in which we find it in the Rig-veda Samhita. It may with confidence be expected that this important discovery of Mr. Pinott will give a fresh impetus to Vedic studies, and lead to other unlooked for results.

"Scenes in the Commons" is the title of a volume, in the press, shortly to be published by Messrs. Kegan, Paul, Trench, and Co. The author, Mr. David Anderson, for several years past political correspondent and leader writer on the staff of one of the principal London daily newspapers, has enjoyed special opportunities of observing all that goes on within the shadow of the mace. Mr. Anderson's work, we are informed, begins with a portraiture of the inner life of the House of Commons, and an explanation of its rules of procedure and ancient forms and ceremonies. It sketches the prominent Parnellites, and shows the meaning of Parnellism; draws the three figures of the Fourth Party, and traces the rise and progress of the Bradlaugh scandal. Under the heading of "Men of Light and Leading" it pictures the foremost statesmen on both sides of the chain. The writer's personal impressions of "Scenes," take in all those eventful, stormy, and protracted day and night sittings which led to the Clôture. The book, abounding in anecdote, promises to be the narrative of an eye-witness, who is also an expert.

Colonel T. N. Harward, B.A., has vacated the command of the Royal Artillery, Lahore Division, on completion of five years' command. Colonel C. W. Wilson, temporarily commanding the Royal Artillery at Campbellpore, succeeds Colonel Harward in command of the Royal Artillery, Lahore Division.

Lieutenant E. W. Brodie, 4th Battalion, King's Royal Rifle Corps, is reported to have met with a gun accident a few days ago at Loodhiana. This officer was under orders to proceed to Egypt, and at the time of the accident was en route to Bombay. It is not stated whether Lieutenant Brodie's injuries are so serious as to prevent his going to Egypt.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 1884.

LORD KIMBERLEY ON THE ADMISSION OF NATIVES TO THE CIVIL SERVICE.

We noticed last week the decision at which the Government has arrived in regard to the limit of age for admission to the Civil Service of India. We pointed out that that decision could hardly be expected to be received with approval by the Native community, unless it were supplemented by some revision of the arrangements under which "statutory civilians" are now appointed—for, otherwise, the doubt which exists as to the qualifications of those who have been already appointed will tend to defeat the liberal intentions with which Lord Lytton framed the rules. The honest and manly course for the present Government to pursue, when it has arrived at an unpopular decision and is compelled to announce it, would be plainly to state how and by what measures it proposes to mitigate the hardship involved in that decision. But instead of that, we find Lord Kimberley adopting the characteristic course of feebly endeavouring to shift the blame on to the shoulders of the late (Conservative) Government; and, as usual, facts are twisted to suit this theory in a way which would have been incredible a few years ago, before the age of Kilmainham Treaties and Garbled Telegrams. The following letter from Lord Lytton, which appears in the Times this week, exposes one of the most extraordinary mis-statements we have ever met with:—

"Sir,—I have only just seen the report in the Times of the 4th inst. of Lord Kimberley's reply to a deputation from the Indian Reform Association, which contains the following paragraph:—'Lord Kimberley said he was aware that Lord Lytton had written to Lord Cranbrook to get an Act passed to prevent natives becoming civil servants, but, if that could not be done, then the age for passing an examination should be lowered, which would practically have the same effect.'

"In this paragraph there are two statements which I beg leave to correct. I did not ask Lord Cranbrook to get an Act passed for the exclusion of natives from the Indian Civil Service, and I did not propose that if this could not be done, the same result should be effected by lowering the standard of age.

"From the date of the Queen's proclamation, communicated to Her Majesty's Indian subjects by Lord Canning, her first Viceroy of India, down to the commencement of my own Viceroyalty no serious effort had been made by any Indian Government to give systematic and regulated effect to the principles put forth in that proclamation respecting the employment of the natives of India in the Civil Service of the Crown. Not the least assiduous efforts of my own Viceroyalty were directed to the attainment of this object, and guided mainly by the views expressed in a singularly wise despatch addressed, I think, to the late Lord Mayo by the Duke of Argyll. The result of them was embodied in a long and elaborate minute, and what I proposed to Lord Cranbrook was, not the exclusion of natives from the Civil Service of India, either by Act of Parliament or by lowering the standard of age, but the exclusive reservation to natives of a large number of civil appointments previously held almost entirely by European members of the covenanted service together with the withdrawal from the uncovenanted service of certain other appointments, to be held henceforth by natives only, with an official status equivalent to that of a covenanted service.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"LYTTON.

"Hotel Tramontano, Sorrento, April 13."

Of course, we do not for a moment suppose that Lord Kimberley, when he uttered the rash words which he must now so deeply regret, was actually cognisant of the fact that he was saying "the thing that is not." We have no doubt that the incident is simply one more illustration to be added to the long list of the last few years, of the recklessness with which modern Radicalism shapes its facts according to its party-exigencies for the moment. So, probably, the author of the famous Garbled Telegram looked upon himself merely in the light of an uncommonly smart advocate, a sharp practitioner, whose cuteness might commend the Ilbert Bill to the easily-gulled British public. But surely, we have now had enough of this kind of smartness. It is really no discredit to honourable men if they find themselves not altogether a match for such queer tactics—as we have no doubt Mr. Evans felt, when he was very nearly "walked round" by Mr. Ilbert in regard to the wording of the Concordat. But we have no hesitation in saying that it will be discreditable in the highest degree to the Radical Party if their leading statesmen do not soon realise that sharp practice is altogether out of place in those political contests of which the very fundamental principle ought to be that both sides—each according to its lights—are equally striving for the public good, and not simply for a mean advantage over an opponent.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

At last there is a sign that Lord Ripon is beginning to perceive the enormity of the blunder he has committed in endeavouring to force on the quiet and loyal agriculturists of Bengal the revolutionary measures which have produced such disastrous results in Ireland. The letter of the Government of India which is to express a sort of general approval of the modified Tenancy Bill as amended in Select Committee will, we are told, "be expressed in terms which seem to denote that it (the Supreme Government) is still open to argument on many points." So says yesterday's telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times; and it is to be hoped that the change of tone on the part of the Government of India which seems to be here indicated, marks the conversion of Lord Ripon to more wholesome views on the general question. The poor ryots of Bengal, whom Mr. Ilbert wishes to hand over to the tender mercies of rack-renting land-jobbers, will have deep cause, not less than the zemindars themselves, to be grateful to the Maharajah of Darbhanga, to the Hon. Kristodas Pal, and to the other courageous leaders of the opposition to this most pernicious Bill if—as we trust is now likely—the Viceroy is brought to see the error of his ways and to amend. Lord Ripon will live in history, for he has already done more harm than any other person who ever went to India, and has achieved more failures in three years than any ordinary person could achieve in a dozen.

The present mail has brought with it the Gazette of India of March 29, 1884, containing a copy of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee—together with the dissents of the Hon. Kristodas Pal, the Hon. T. M. Gibbon, and the Hon. H. J. Reynolds. The dissent of the Hon. the Maharajah of Darbhanga, though published in Calcutta last week, will, of course, not reach England for a fortnight yet. We propose next week to issue a special supplement containing the dissent of the Hon. Kristodas Pal, which is a masterly exposition of the views of the enlightened Native community on this unfortunate measure. It is becoming more and more evident that the whole Native community is dismayed at the prospect of endless litigation and anarchy that is opened up by the Bill. With the exception of a few unquiet spirits who have nothing to lose and much to gain from a general upset—aided, perhaps, by a small clique of theory-mongers, who desire only to air their very vague and shallow notions of political economy—the Bill is condemned by every Native gentleman in Bengal. The Hon. Kristodas Pal hits the very worst blot on the Government proposals when he says, “The middle-man, of course, gains much more than what he has under the existing law, but the bona fide cultivator, in whose behalf the greatest anxiety was evinced in the Committee, will, I fear, be practically worse off than he is at present.”

This is how the hon. member summarises his main objections to the bill :—

“Firstly, because it goes against the ancient and existing land law of the country, taking away on the one hand, and conferring on the other, rights which are inconsistent with that law; secondly, because it assumes a construction of the regulations which is opposed to judicial decisions, and takes for granted statements and facts not supported by evidence; thirdly, because it does not fulfil the primary object for which it was originally sought, namely, the simplification of the procedure for the settlement and realisation of rent; fourthly, because it is calculated to sow dispute and dissension between the landlord and the tenant, and flood the land with litigation to the detriment of the peace and welfare of the agricultural community; fifthly, because it will tend to reduce a large proportion of cultivating raiyats into agricultural day-labourers; and, sixthly, because by abolishing the freedom of contract between landlord and tenant, and by making the Court of the Revenue officer the referee and arbiter in all matters of zamindari management and raiyate action, it will neutralise the vital principle of self-reliance in the agricultural population and destroy its backbone, hamper the free operation of economic laws, and stereotype the patriarchal phase of government with the aggravating evil of litigation at almost every step.”

Lieutenant Heenan, has been promoted Captain of the 5th or Chadarhat Company of the Hyderabad Volunteers Corps, vice Captain Coope resigned. Volunteer J. Buchanan, has been promoted to Lieutenant in F Company.

The services of Captain S. H. F. Greaves, Bengal Staff Corps, Wing Officer 26th Bengal Native Infantry, employed in the Home Department, have been replaced at the disposal of the Commander in Chief.

The command of the Bombay Sappers and Miners falls vacant on the 1st proximo, on the expiration of Col. Hill's tenure of the appointment. The present commandant, Lieut. Col. North, R.E., will, it is said, be confirmed in that position.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 35,00,000 in Bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—In telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 2,00,000, average rate 1s. 7.8125d.; and on Bombay, Rs. 34,00,000, average rate 1s. 7.84d., or a total of Rs. 36,00,000. Tenders on Calcutta and Bombay at 1s. 7.13-16d. will receive about forty per cent. and above in full. Later in the day the Council disposed of two lakhs of transfers on Calcutta at 1s. 7.27-32d., and five-and-a-half on Bombay, three being sold at 1s. 7.27-32d. and two-and-a-half at 1s. 7.7d. They also sold bills for Rs. 25,000 on Bombay at 1s. 7.23-32d., and for Rs. 37,000 on Calcutta at 1s. 7.7d. The amount sold up to last night since the commencement of the financial year reached Rs. 92,78,000, realising £761,371.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—The 30th ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this company was held on Wednesday at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. W. Paterson presided, and in moving the adoption of the report thought it presented fair grounds for congratulation in view of the unsatisfactory condition of business generally during the past year. Being aware that the India and China trade had not been exceptional in that respect, he had no doubt that they had felt satisfied with the balance-sheet. He was glad to say that, having made provision for the probable losses they might sustain by the failures recently announced, a balance of over £7,000 would remain to the credit of the current year. Their reserve fund continued to be built up in the manner sanctioned by the shareholders for some years, and by the addition now proposed, of £30,000, that very important fund would be raised to £250,000. These assets, whether abroad or in this country—in fact, all the items brought into their balance-sheet—stood at their current value and the ruling rates of exchange. The figures on both sides indicated their strong position, and with such an excellent staff as the bank possessed, he thought the shareholders might venture to look forward hopefully when times improved. The past year had certainly been a trying one for all of them, but especially for their chief manager. The charter of the bank would expire at the end of the year, but they virtually got it renewed in accepting the model charter which the Government had agreed to issue. He might state that it was almost identical with the existing charter of the bank.—Mr. John Jones having seconded the motion—Mr. Morrison expressed satisfaction generally with the report, but thought an additional 1 per cent. dividend might have been proposed on the present occasion.—Mr. Surtees dissented from this view, and spoke of the essential importance of a strong reserve fund to a bank. He was as anxious as any of the shareholders to have as large a dividend as possible, but he trusted that the reserve fund would be increased by another £50,000, which he was sure would benefit the shareholders more than an increase of 1 per cent. in the dividend.—Major Cotton supported the remarks of Mr. Surtees, and alluded with satisfaction to the progress of the bank. Since 1879 they had, he said, more than doubled their reserve fund; and while the expenses had increased very slightly, the nett profit had grown from £92,000 in 1879 to £116,000 in the past year. For these results he was sure they were very much indebted to the directors, Mr. Gwyther, and the staff.—A shareholder asked for an explanation as to the large amount written off to meet bad debts—£29,500; and another shareholder desired to know whether the bank had escaped loss since the close of the year.—The Chairman, in reply, said he cordially sympathised with the desire of Mr. Morrison for a larger dividend, but he trusted that that gentleman would admit that the policy enunciated by Mr. Surtees was the right one in the present condition of trade. He hoped, however, before long that they would arrive at a higher dividend. There was no additional liability on the shareholders under the new charter on account of note circulation. The amount of Government securities held by the bank varied. It was not their policy to hold a large amount of 4 per cent. paper when they could employ their money better. Their losses had certainly been considerable during the past year, but he thought they might congratulate themselves that they had not been more, and that they had been able to provide for them as he had stated. The losses since the turn of the year had been provided for in the balance-sheet, before closing their accounts. Their securities were chiefly kept at their bankers—nearly all of them, and a certificate of their bankers was produced to the auditors, which he thought was better even than inspection by those gentlemen. The motion was then adopted unanimously, and resolutions were afterwards passed declaring a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum and re-electing the retiring directors and auditors.

OBITUARY.—The death is announced of Major General Charles Vaughan-Arbuckle, late R. A., who received his commission in the Bengal Artillery in 1851, and became captain in 1860, major in 1872, colonel in 1876, and retired in 1883 with the rank of major-general. General Arbuckle was the fifth son of the late General B. H. Vaughan-Arbuckle, R. A., J. P., of Little Heath, Old Charton, Kent. The deceased officer, who had just completed his fifty-second year, served in the Burmese war 1852-3, for which he received the medal, with clasp for Pegu. He was aide de camp to General Cannon, and served with him in the Crimean campaign 1855-6, including the siege of Sebastopol, for which he received the medal with clasp, also the Turkish medal. He commanded a company of cadets at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, during the periods in which His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and the late Prince Imperial were pursuing their studies at that institution.

ARMY AND NAVY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY (LIMITED).—At a special general meeting of this company held on Monday in the Board room, Victoria-street, Westminster, the Hon. R. W. Grosvenor presiding, the resolution passed at the annual meeting on the 27th ult. was confirmed. The resolution was for making certain alterations and additions to the articles of association of the society, to render them clearer in regard to the deferred bonus fund.

THE STRANGERS HOME.—The annual meeting took place on Wednesday the 16th instant, of a most valuable institution, the Strangers Home for Asiatics, Africans, and South Sea Islanders. The meeting was held in the large hall of the Home itself (an imposing building in the West India Dock-road, Limehouse, which was well filled by an interested audience. The chair was taken at 3 p.m. by Lord Napier of Magdala, and after prayer by Dean Bagot, the report was read by the hon. secretary, Mr. J. H. Ferguson. The number of inmates admitted into the Home, during 1883, it was stated, had been 901, which was a considerable increase on that of the previous year. Besides disposing of the 31 men remaining at the end of the year 1882, the directors had shipped 815 of the 901 admitted, leaving 86 on hand at the end of 1883. Of those admitted 116 were destitute, and 58 shipwrecked sailors, the loss under this head being £184. The number of depositors, and the amount deposited with the directors, showed a large increase, 327 men having deposited £3,298 6s. 10d. In lieu of the late Mr. W. E. Hubbard, an esteemed and active director, Mr. Jeremiah Lyon, of Lombard-court, has been elected to fill the vacancy on the board. The receipts during the year 1883 amounted to £3,488 11s. 11d., which, with the balance from 1882, made £3,635 18s. 11d., inclusive of a legacy from the late Mrs. R. Smith, of Hull. The disbursements, amounted to £2,715 13s. 6d., leaving a balance of £920 5s. 5d., it being the first time since 1877 that the directors have had a balance in hand to commence the year with. The meeting having been addressed by General E. Davidson, R.E., Capt. East, R.N., Mr. C. E. Chapman, by two Parsee gentlemen (Messrs. M. M. Bhowmallee and J. Dosabhooy Franjes) and the Chairman, Lord Napier, then presented to the Rev. G. Small, Missionary to the Institution, a vellum certificate of the Royal Humane Society for having last year saved the life of a lad of twelve when bathing together off the Pier at Clacton-on-Sea. Votes of thanks to the honorary secretary and the noble Chairman having been passed, the meeting closed.

THE SILVER MARKETS AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGE.

TUESDAY.—The market for bar silver is firm at 50 11-16d., but the arrival of Mexican dollars per Ville de St. Nazaire has not yet been negotiated, and the nearest nominal price for coined silver is 49 3/4d. per ounce. Indian exchange rates are strong at 1s. 7 23-32d. in both Bombay and Calcutta, but there is still no change in China rates. Rupee Paper is firmer, the Four-and-a-Half per Cents, closing at 81 3/4 82 3/4, and the Four per Cents. at 78 3/4 79. The Indian Council have sold telegraphic transfers on Bombay for Rs. 9,50,000, at 1s. 7 25-32d., and Rs. 2,50,000 on the same Presidency at 1s. 7 13-16d. per rupee.

WEDNESDAY.—The bar silver, ex Valparaiso, was delivered in London on Tuesday. The consignment, however, amounted to only a little over £40,000, while a great deal more had been expected, and the market has hardened in consequence, the whole of the available supplies being cleared at 50 3/4d. per ounce—showing an advance of 1-16d. The Mexican dollars, ex Ville de St. Nazaire, have also been disposed of at a proportionate advance, the current quotation being 49 9-16d. per ounce. Indian exchange rates are strong at 1s. 7 3/4d., and the Shanghai quotation is higher at 5s. 0 3/4d. Rupee Paper closed at 81 3/4 82 for the Four-and-a-Half, and 78 3/4 79 for the Four per Cents.

THURSDAY.—There is no change in the position of the Silver Market. Business could not be entered into to any great extent because all recent arrivals of bars and dollars had already been well nigh absorbed, but for some small amounts of both kinds of the metal which did change hands yesterday's prices were obtained. India and China exchange rates continue firm. As regards the former they are now quoted at 1s. 7 25-32d., and 1s. 7 13-16d. in Calcutta and Bombay respectively, the Shanghai quotation being 5s. 0 3/4d. and Hongkong 3s. 8 1/4d. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper is not quite so firm at 81 3/4 82, but the price of the Four per Cents. is maintained at 78 3/4 79. The India Council have sold three lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Calcutta at 1s. 7 15-16d. per rupee.

FRIDAY.—The Silver Market is firm, but owing to the very small supplies on hand, business has been limited in extent. Prices are unchanged at 50 3/4d. for bars, and 49 9-16d. per ounce for Mexican dollars. Exchange rates from India are again a shade higher at 1s. 7 27-32d. in Calcutta, and 1s. 7 13-16d. in Bombay, the Hongkong quotation having advanced 1/4d. to 3s. 8 3/4d. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper is rather firmer at 81 3/4 82, and the Four per Cents. have been in good demand and rose 1/2 to 79 1/2.

SATURDAY.—Very little business of any kind has been done in the Silver Market to-day, because of the scarcity of supplies. The price of fine bars is now, however, quoted at 50 13-16d., Mexican dollars remaining at 49 9-16d. per ounce. The market is likely to continue bare for some days, as no fresh arrivals are expected until the middle of next week. India and China exchange rates are unaltered, but the tendency of the former is, if anything, rather easier. Rupee Paper shows no change, prices being again quoted at 81 3/4 82 for the Four-and-a-Half, and 79 7/8 79 1/2 for the Four per Cents.

MONDAY.—Saturday's prices of bar silver and Mexican dollars have been repeated, but business continues very limited pending the receipt of the fresh arrivals which are expected in the course of the week. Both the Indian Exchange rates are now quoted at 1s. 7 13-16d. China rates are unaltered at 5s. 0 3/4d. in Shanghai, and 3s. 8 3/4d. in Hongkong. Rupee Paper is firmer, the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. closing at 82 8 1/2, and the Four per Cents. at 79 3/4 79 3/4.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The markets are thinly attended, and business will not be fully resumed until next week.

SUGAR.—The transactions include 50 casks Jamaica, at 15s. A floating cargo of St. Kitts sold in Liverpool at 14s. 6d., and 800 tons Manila off the coast, at 14s. 4 1/2d., Ylodio. Beet sugar is the turn easier. In the refined market to-day, goods have sold at a partial decline. The Clyde market telegram advises a steady tone for pieces, and quotations maintained.

COFFEE.—A holiday market. Arrivals are large.

SPICES.—Small sales reported in black pepper at previous terms. Cloves rather firmer.

RICE.—There has been a floating cargo of Bassem, per sailor, sold at 8s. 3d. open charter.

SHELLAC.—Some business has been done at previous terms, including 500 chests fine Orange, at £5 per cwt., said to be for the United States.

JUTE.—Since last week the transactions have amounted to 4,500 to 5,000 bales in dock and to arrive at late rates.

COTTON.—There is a strong market at hardening rates, prices of all descriptions being about 1-16d. dearer. The sales amount to about 5,000 bales, including Tinnelly, at 5 7-16d. to 5 3/4d.; Western, 3 3/4d. to 4 1/2d.; and Bengal, at 4 1-16d. to 4 1/2d. per lb. For arrival, Tinnelly-May-June, Suez, 5 1-16d. for good fair, 5 1/2d. for fully good fair; forward delivery American, May-July, 6 16-64d. to 6 21-64d. for middling l.m.c.

THURSDAY EVENING.

TEA.—The China market has re-opened with rather a better tone, more disposition being shown to do business by private contract, and the public sales, which consisted of 2,890 packages Ceylon and assorted teas, passed at rather firmer rates. The Indian auctions comprised 2,203 packages, which were well competed for, prices ruling firm all round; 500 chests of Java Purakanalek Souchong sold rather easily at 8 3/4d. to 8 7/8d. per lb.

SUGAR.—There have not been any sales effected in West India, and other descriptions remain dull. A considerable quantity of crystallised Demerara &c. declared for to-morrow on the re-opening of the market. Beet quiet and easier. In the Clyde market pieces are firm, with a good demand. M. Bertrand Silz wrote as follows from Paris on the 16th inst. :—"The market has re-opened after the Easter holidays, and again under unfavourable impressions. This has been caused by the official publication of the production from the 1st September to the 31st of last month, showing that the surplus up to the end of March, was 14,000 tons more than the corresponding period of last year, and that stocks to the end of March showed a surplus of 4,000 tons. This, coinciding with the bi-monthly liquidation of April, when 32,000 bags were rendered, which had to be received to-day, brought a new depreciation by forcing holders to sell immediately, or to take delivery. Rates have given way, and we have to report a fall of 50c. to 75c. compared with the prices of a week ago."

COFFEE.—The public sales have gone at irregular prices, but without material alteration for Plantation Ceylon, of which 671 casks, 166 barrels and bags sold; small, 56s. to 59s.; low middling to middling, 62s. to 66s. 6d.; good to fine middling, 67s. to 70s.; and bold, 75s. to 80s.; fine, 85s. 4d.; 186 cases, 5000 bags East Indian, chiefly withdrawn; 2,392 bags Guatemala, about two thirds sold rather lower in some; mixed to good ordinary, 55s. to 55s. 6d.; middling, 59s. to 60s. 6d.; colory Costa Rica brought full prices; fine bold, 76s. 6d.; middling to good, 60s. to 66s.; fine ordinary, 52s. to 56s. per cwt.

RICE.—Firm. A cargo of 900 tons Rangoon sold at 8s. 4½d. open charter. Rather higher rates are demanded.

FRIDAY EVENING.

CHINA TEA.—About 2,000 boxes new seasons new make Congous (1884-5) have been placed on the market. The quality is disappointing, and only about 500 boxes have found buyers, and those mostly at public auctions, at from 8½ to 11¼ per lb. Some bids of about 1s. 1d. have been made for the better parcels, but at present no business has resulted. These teas have arrived fully three weeks earlier than last year.

SUGAR.—The market reopened to-day after the Easter holidays with several sales of crystallised Demerara. There was a moderate demand, and part of 1,230 casks 670 barrels and bags sold at irregular prices, fine qualities being steady, at 24s. to 24s. 6d.; a lot or two, 25s. to 26s.; brown crystal 3d. to 6d. lower, ranging down to 20s. 6d. to 21s. 6d. The week's business in West India amounts to 852 casks 8,000 barrels and bags. The Clyde market for pieces is unchanged. Beet is easier, with sellers at 4½d. per cwt. under the closing quotations on Friday last, viz.,—15s. 4½d.

COFFEE.—At the public sales a flat tone prevailed, and prices showed a further decline, making a fall of 2s. per cwt. for the week; in many cases, 473 casks 412 barrels and bags plantation Ceylon partly sold—low middling to middling grayish, 61s. to 63s. 6d.; middling colory, 65s. 6d. to 66s. 6d.; fine middling, 70s. 6d. to 71s.; to bold, 81. to 83s.; superior, 88s. 6d. to 91s.; 18 cases 744 bags East India, few lots medium Travancore, 65s. 6d. to 66s.; 232 half frizzle 275 packages Mocha withdrawn. Of 3,255 packages foreign, small portion sold—fine ordinary to middling Guatemala, 54s. 6d. to 59s. 6d.; good middling, 62s.; greenish to colory Central American, 56s. 6d. to 61s.; Costa Rica chiefly withdrawn.

RICE is firm, and Burmah afloat 1½d. to 3d. dearer than last week. A cargo of Bassein reported at 8s. 3d., open charter.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDs, STOMACH,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C.
BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff)
DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORO-DYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE IN-VENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr.
Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.
This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS
BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, and that the whole story of the defendant's pretense was deliberately untrue, and he swore to say it had been sworn to.
See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOILS OF HEALING.
LONDON. REPORT that it ACTS as a
CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETE-LY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."
From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical
Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their solution there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of the efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa, and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia,
the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 100, Russell St., W.C.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC
CHOLERA.
We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis
Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith
on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is the TRUE
PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts
short all attacks of PILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUB-STANTIAL IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists.

 Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 73:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my father's medicine man had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, April 10; Madras and Allahabad, April 9; Calcutta, April 8.

THE Indian Spectator, the leading Native journal of Western India, has the following kindly paragraph on Mr. Roper Lethbridge's candidature at Whitby:—

"Mr. Roper Lethbridge has more chance of entering Parliament than many other Anglo-Indians who have been threatening an invasion in that direction. We wish him all success, not indeed for his share in the discussion of the recent policy of the Government of India, in which we take him to have become almost demoralised. But we could afford to overlook worse faults in a friend—a true and a constant friend of the country, and one to whom our educated men owe much for his advocacy of high education."

THE letter we publish elsewhere on Mr. Pedder's paper at the Society of Arts, last Friday, is from one of the highest living authorities on the subject of which it treats. We hope to deal with Mr. Pedder's paper, which is one of great interest, and shows a remarkable grasp of the question, in an early issue. Meanwhile, we would notice that both the paper itself, and the discussion which followed it, afforded the most remarkable illustration possible of the hollowness of the pretended demand for the confiscatory legislation that is embodied in the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

CONSIDERING the exalted official positions held by Mr. Pedder and Sir Ashley Eden, it is impossible to imagine anything more nearly approaching a "damning with faint praise" than the coy treatment of the Bill in the paper of the former, and the able and judicious speech of the latter. Sir William Rose Robinson's views on the Bengal Land Question are a happy combination of those of Lord Ripon and Mr. Henry George, tempered by that contempt for all things Bengali which comes natural to a Madras administrator; and his unsparing condemnation of Mr. Pedder's paper, and his demand for a return to "the ancient Hindu law of landlord and tenant," conclusively show how little satisfaction is likely to be afforded to the Socialist party in India by the timid concessions of the India Office, even under a Radical Secretary of State.

SIR WILLIAM ROBINSON'S ideas of the "ancient Hindu law of landlord and tenant" are probably based on those pretty pictures of early Aryan civilisation, the working of the laws of Manu, and the other pleasing figments evolved out of the inner consciousness of our most enthusiastic and imaginative Sanskritists. It would be heretical, we suppose, to suggest that Sir William's "ancient Hindu law of landlord and tenant" would turn out to be something not very different from "The good old rule, the simple plan,

That they should take who have the power,
And they should keep who can."

THE absurdity of these extreme views on the subject was further accentuated, at the meeting of last Friday, by the impassioned objurgations of a young Bengali student who got up to address the meeting. That this young gentleman's words were intended to be of the nature of impassioned objurgation was evident from the fact that they were generally unintelligible, with the exception of a remark about "the dumb millions of Bengal," and "the oppression of the zemindars," which was received with unseemly laughter. But it is a serious fact that this youthful orator is understood to be the chosen mouthpiece of Mr. Seymour Keay's and Mr. Fogg's "Indian Reform Association," and to be backed by Mr. Borlase, Mr. Firth, and other Radical members of Parliament.

It is somewhat odd that, whilst the so-called "Indian Reform Association" in England is crying out for what amounts to a repudiation of the Permanent Settlement, Mr. Surendranath Banerjea and the little clique of Lord Ripon's disciples in Calcutta are declaring that "A Permanent Settlement for all India" is one of the planks in their platform. The Indian Daily News says of this:—

"The Bengalee thus formulates the demands of the natives as suggested to them by an 'eminent English writer':—

- (1.) The election of representative assemblies with a vote on expenditure.
- (2.) The gradual extinction of the Covenanted Civil Service.
- (3.) The admission of natives to the commissioned grades of the native army.
- (4.) The abolition of the Public Works Department; all public works being hereafter done by contract.
- (5.) A Permanent Settlement for all British India.
- (6.) The revenue of a province to be expended as far as possible in that province.
- (7.) The substitution of Native Vakils for English residents in the Independent Native States.
- (8.) The abolition of the Indian Council."

How the demands are to be obtained is thus indicated:—

"Let it form an important element in our political programme, and let us always be seeking for it, and the prize will be within our reach. Knock and it shall be opened is a precept that is not only true in morality and religion, but it also holds good in the sphere of politics. Persistent agitation, loyally made, must crown our efforts with success. This is a truism in politics, to which we have repeatedly called attention. If the natives follow out the advice of the Bengalee, we are afraid that Lord Ripon will have introduced India to an era of agitation."

THE Calcutta telegrams state that the sanction of the Secretary of State to the construction of the Quetta Railway has been received, and that the line will be pushed on "rapidly"—that is, regardless of expense. Quite right, under the desperate circumstances to which we have been brought by this precious Government; but then, how about Radical "retrenchment," and those other virtues that are monopolised by the Radical Party?

We are further told that "the work has been actually in progress during the whole winter, under the name of an improvement to the road." Quite right again; but then, how about Radical honesty and candour? "Under the name of—!" Those words are the very embodiment of Radicalism. So we have had bloody wars under the name of "military operations." We have had confiscation in Ireland under the name of "a message of peace;" we have had Coercion under the name of "the resources of civilisation;" we have had a treaty with sedition under the name of "a Kilmainham arrangement." So in Bengal, we have Socialistic redistribution of property under the name of "restoration of the rights of the ryot." Every act of this unspeakable Ministry is done under the name of something else. Humbug is their fetish, and Cant is their gospel.

MEANWHILE, the Calcutta telegrams say: "It is stated that the annexation of Merv and the constant advance of Russia are the constant subjects of conversation in every bazaar of Northern India—a fact which, if true—and there is every reason to believe so—is, to say the least, highly significant." And Lord Ripon's friends are busy, pointing out what a good thing this advance is, as it must compel the brutal British Government to assent to Lord Ripon's benevolent policy! And Lord Ripon is still more busy—intent on rendering utterly disaffected the most loyal and most really (because legitimately) influential class in India, in his mad desire to cripple the landed interest in Bengal.

"BUSINESS is almost at a standstill" in Calcutta, so we learn from to-day's telegrams. It begins to be doubtful which of the two, England or India, is likely to pay the heavier price for the privilege of being governed by the apostles of "Peace, Retrenchment, and Continuance in Office."

LORD RIPON has not exhausted his pleasing stock of startling novelties. We now have the delightful sensation of a "pitched battle" in Rajputana. The troops of the Maharana of Udaipur (Mewar) have routed the insurgent forces of one of his nobles, and captured their leader, with a loss of seventeen killed, and twenty-five wounded! Capital! If the present regime last long enough, we shall soon have no reason to complain of the dulness of the annals of rural India.

WITH reference to the difficulties which have arisen in the Brahmo Samaj of India, a Calcutta paper says that a gentleman of high official position connected with the Government of India has consented to arbitrate between the parties, and that the points which have recently been raised will be fully stated by each, and then laid before him for his decision. "It is to be hoped," remarks the paper from which we quote, "that this decision will be accepted frankly and heartily, and that it may do away with present differences of opinion, and, indeed, lay down a foundation for that union of Theistic societies amongst the natives which, in our opinion, would be the best and most patriotic monument to the memory and the services of Keshub Chunder Sen."

WE regret to learn from the Indian Mirror that the Rev. Mr. Goldsmith had a narrow escape from being mobbed by Mahomedans on Friday evening, March 21, at Bangalore. He has incurred the displeasure of the Mahomedans in connection with the recent Futwa, and while preaching in Hindustani in one of the streets, was surrounded by a thousand excited Mahomedans. He got away safely, but it is said the Mahomedans have resolved to attack him if he preaches in the streets again.

THE first part of Mr. Martin Wood's reproduction of some of his old Bombay journalistic writings has appeared this week. It deals with a wide range of subjects, and will be interesting to many of our readers. We shall take an early opportunity of reviewing it.

FROM an interesting paper read recently before the member of the Society of Arts by Mr. Griffin Vyse upon trade routes to Afghanistan, it appears that until the late Afghan War we only knew of the Khaibar, Gumul, Sanghar, and Bolan, Passes as leading from India to Afghanistan, while now the existence of 289 is known. Many of the old abandoned trade routes, supposed to be blocked or impassable, Mr. Vyse had been through when field engineer with one of the columns during the late war, and found them open and capable of being used by all arms of the service, mountain artillery included.

THE Pioneer says :—

"It is likely after all that a comparative outsider will step into the Viceroyalty on Lord Ripon's departure. So far as the matter can be settled at present, we have good reason to suppose that the next ruler whom India has got to expect is neither Lord Dufferin, nor Mr. Goschen, nor even Lord Lorne, but the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley."

EVEN the official apologists of Lord Ripon's confiscation policy in Bengal are beginning to give up the Tenancy Bill. The Pioneer now finds that the amendments of the Select Committee have ruined the Bill, and says :—

"As the proposal now stands, it cannot be too plainly or strongly asserted that it is absolutely impossible to expect landlords and tenants to live in decent amity; and this is a state of things which is desirable in the interests of neither class. Peace may come eventually by further legislation; it may come after long years by the final victory of one of the contending parties. But if the Bill passes as it now stands, no reasonable man can look forward to anything else in the present generation than a growing intensity of hatred between the two classes."

MESSRS. JOHN HALL AND SON, the celebrated gunpowder manufacturers, of Faversham, Kent, and Lockfyne, Argyllshire, have been awarded a first-class certificate and gold medal for their sporting and military brands, and a first-class certificate and silver medal for their blasting brands, at the Calcutta Exhibition.

THE Englishman gives the following report on the Calcutta Freight Market, corrected up to the 8th inst. :—

"There has been a little better inquiry since our last report. By steamer, rates have remained much the same, but by sailing vessel a slight advance has been paid, there having been a fair demand for early seed and and Jute tonnage. Four steamers have taken the London berth, whilst in sailing vessels four have fixed for London, one for Liverpool, and one for New York, our unfixed tonnage being reduced to 35,000 tons."

WE take the following account on the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s report :—

"We regret that we cannot give any favourable accounts of the growing crop. There has been no rain in any of the Zillahs of Lower Bengal, with the exception of a light fall in some parts of Kishnaghur, and the reports from all quarters are very gloomy. In Behar there has been a continuation of fierce hot west winds, which are rapidly burning up the crop. Of the three districts, Chuprah appears to be the worst off, but should the present weather continue for another fortnight, we fear there is very little prospect of anything like a good crop from any part of this division. We hear from native reports that there is great difficulty in obtaining water for the purpose of irrigation in the Doab, owing to the extreme dryness of the season and the low state of the rivers. Taken all round, the advices could not be much less favourable, and without a speedy change in the weather, the crop generally is likely to be disappointing."

THE same firm gives the following on the Calcutta Tea Market :—

"A small sale of 705 packages was held on Thursday last, the 3rd instant, without alteration in prices. Weather reports generally are not so favourable, rain being badly wanted. We hear, however, of some showers in Cachar and Sylhet, and at Sebsaug or in Assam."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending April 11 :—

"Mar Tolius, Bishop of Pampakada, one of the six Syrian prelates ordained by the patriarch of Antioch as suffragans to Mar Dionysius, the Syrian Metropolitan of Malabar."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated April 27 :—

"A collection of extracts from native newspapers on the subjects of the Budget and of railway extension, which is now before me, affords striking proof of what has been so often pointed out as the besetting sin of Indian native journalists—namely, their spirit of carping criticism, and their persistent determination to find fault with everything done by the Government or its officers. There are, of course, some honourable exceptions; but the contributors to the great majority of these journals, whether writing in English or in the vernacular, put themselves habitually in an attitude of unreasoning opposition."

"The rapid railway extension recommended by the Calcutta and Bombay Chambers of Commerce seems to be looked upon as a deep-laid plot for enabling the European merchants to aggrandise themselves at the expense of India. Most of these journals advocate the slow and gradual construction of new lines, but strongly oppose the making of any large expenditure."

"The license-tax is the feature of the Budget which attracts most attention, and some of Sir Auckland Colvin's remarks appear to have created an impression that the abolition of that unpopular impost is under consideration. Any such hope is probably doomed to disappointment, for it is hardly likely that the Government will at present dispense with the license-tax without providing some substitute. Any change that may be made, as regards direct taxation, is more likely to take the form of extending it to the professional and official classes, whose exemption has long been a standing grievance with the English as well as the Native Press."

"The question whether the Public Works Loan is to be raised in London or in Calcutta would seem to excite no interest among native writers, and they appear wholly to fail to recognise the disturbing effect upon mercantile business of the Secretary of State's reticence on this subject. Yet that disturbing effect grows more apparent every day. The Bank of Bengal last week raised its rate to eleven per cent.; business is almost at a standstill, and the Calcutta Corporation and the Port Commissioners have applied for leave to borrow in London. Still, the Secretary of State makes no sign, and the native newspapers apparently do not think it strange. Their failure to appreciate the gravity of the situation is doubtless due to an imperfect conception of financial principles."

"The Government has resolved to make trial of Sir W. Wedderburn's scheme of Land Banks. Some minor points yet remain to be arranged, but it is settled that an experimental bank shall be established for Poorundhur, a talooka, or subdivision, of the Poona district. Part of that talooka has been assessed, while part is under assessment. It has been suggested that in the latter part the introduction of the new assessment should be suspended, as any uncertainty regarding the new rates must affect the ryots' credit and, therefore, the value of their security. But it is doubtful whether this suggestion will be carried out.

"The past week brought a fairly plentiful and general rainfall to Bengal, which will be of immense service to the rice crops, and will relieve the anxiety of the Darjeeling tea-planters. As regards indigo, however, it is to be feared that the rain has come too late to secure anything but a very indifferent return.

"The effect of the rainfall on the health of Calcutta has been most marked. The cholera and small-pox epidemics, which were raging with great violence in the native town, although still severe, have decidedly abated. It is to be hoped that the exceptionally heavy mortality of the last six weeks will rouse the Calcutta Corporation to the absolute necessity of taking more active steps to provide a water supply for the entire city, to sweep away the filthy groups of huts, and to fill up the stagnant tanks, which constitute a permanent source of danger and disgrace to the Indian metropolis. The fact that the European quarters have been entirely free from epidemic disease gives one more proof, if any were needed, of the important part played by foul water in propagating cholera.

"The inquiry ordered by the Viceroy with the object of ascertaining the indebtedness of the Hyderabad State has terminated. The State debt proved to amount to one crore of rupees, or a million sterling. The debt is made up of allowances to petty officials, payments into the Nizam's private treasury, and so on.

"An affray has occurred in Mewar, between the Maharane's troops and those of one of her nobles. The affair arose out of an adoption case, in which the latter thought himself badly treated. He consequently refused to attend the installation ceremony, and on troops being sent to coerce him, he resisted; the result being a pitched battle in which the offending noble was captured, after a total loss, on both sides, seventeen killed and twenty-five wounded.

"The mention which I made some weeks ago of Dr. Vincent Richards having succeeded in communicating cholera to animals, appears to have led to a belief in England that he did so by inoculating with cholera bacilli. This is not the case. What Dr. Richards has discovered is that choleraic alvine discharges contain a virulent poison, which seems to be of the nature of a chemical compound, and not of an organism. He considers it almost certain that the cholera-producing agent is not an organism, but a chemical compound, and holds that what is now required is a most thorough and searching inquiry into the chemistry of the alvine discharge in cholera, so that the poison may be isolated and its chemical and physiological characters definitely determined.

"Another fire is reported to have occurred at Mandalay in which the palace narrowly escaped destruction. There was much loss of life. Energetic preparations are being made to rebuild the great temple which was lately burnt down.

"The King's third daughter is recovering from the small-pox. The doctor who attended the two princesses who died has been cast into prison.

"The sanction of the Secretary of State to the construction of the Quetta Railway has been received. The line will now be pushed on rapidly. As the work has been actually in progress during the whole winter under the name of an improvement to the road, it is already well advanced, and it may be hoped that the railway will be finished and paid for out of revenue in two years.

"The Ameer is busy manufacturing screw guns and breech-loading rifles. Another encounter between his troops and the Mongols is reported to have occurred; but the result is unknown.

"The troops of the Wali of Maimena have been defeated several times by Shoobat Khan, of Turkestan, and Hussain Khan ex-Wali of Maimena.

"It is rumoured that some Afghans, refugees in Persia, have petitioned the Governor of Herat for permission to return there, and that the Governor is prepared to allow them to do so.

"Rumours regarding the alleged intended re-occupation of Candahar by the British, and the establishment of an agency at Herat continue to be current; but it is quite certain that neither step is at present seriously contemplated by the Government.

"The delimitation of the Persian, Russian, and Afghan frontier is still in a state of uncertainty. It is to be hoped that the Indian Government will impress on the Ministry the importance of at once opening negotiations with Russia upon this subject. Such a demarcation, if once agreed upon and accomplished, will certainly prevent much future complication, and the acceptance by Russia of the proposal will be a fair proof of her sincerity.

"It is stated that the annexation of Merv and the Russian advance are the constant subjects of conversation in every bazaar of Northern India—a fact which, if true—and there is every reason to believe so—is, to say the least, highly significant. It is quite certain that the native Press has lately developed an interest in Central Asian politics which it never showed before."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MR. MALABARI'S GUJARAT AND THE GUJARATIS.*

We are glad to find that the public has emphatically endorsed the favourable opinion we were led to form on Mr. Malabari's entertaining work on "Gujarat and the Gujaratis," when it first appeared about a year ago. It has already attained the honour of a second edition, showing a high appreciation of its merits on the part of the reading public. And we have no hesitation in saying that, good as was the original work, the second edition is a decided improvement upon it. Mr. Malabari possesses that indubitable mark of an evenly-balanced mind, a willingness to accept and profit by honest criticism; and has recast one or two of his original chapters with manifest advantage to the tone and character of the book. But the most valuable improvement consists in the addition of several new chapters, in which the author again appears as a keen observer alike of the foibles and of the excellences of those with whom he is brought into contact. The new chapters are those on Travel and Study, Floods and Fires of Surat, Are the Parsis Deteriorating?, Native Medicines, Native Abuses, Native Singing, Sports and Games in Gujarat. We shall probably take an early opportunity of recurring to these chapters for a more minute examination, but at present we content ourselves with heartily commending the book to the perusal of those who desire to cultivate a more familiar acquaintance with the inner life and feelings of our Native fellow-subjects.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The paper bearing the above title, which Mr. Pedder read on Friday last before a meeting convened by the Society of Arts, made no mention of the object with which it had been written. Had the diffusion of general knowledge on the subject been the writer's only aim, he would not have excluded from his review the two provinces of Madras and Bombay, where a correct knowledge and just apprehension of the law in question is particularly needed; seeing that, in those Presidencies, the cultivating tenants are in so depressed and destitute a condition, that a single season of drought exposes them to be decimated by famine, unless they are succoured by eleemosynary grants from the State.

The purport of the paper, however, becomes obvious when the writer, referring to the existing land law of Bengal says: "Some of the reasons why that law has failed effectually to protect the rights of the cultivator, and why the fresh legislation now in contemplation has become necessary, will be seen when I come to the law of the North West Provinces." Thus the object of the writer is evidently to influence public opinion in favour of the Bengal Tenancy Bill which the Government of India are endeavouring to pass. But, surely, it would only have been fair if the writer, instead of ignoring, had replied to the grave objections which the highest Indian authorities on the subject have raised against that Bill; for he must have been aware that the Chief Justice of Bengal and the district judges, commissioners, and district officers of that province, have declared that its provisions were unnecessary for the protection of the cultivator's rights and would injure, instead of improving, his status. This attempt to elude the real questions involved would indicate the writer's inability to solve them in favour of the Bill; an impression which is strengthened by the Secretary of State's despatches on the subject, withholding his approval of the main provisions of the Bill.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

April 26.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

LANDLORD AND TENANT IN INDIA.

THE zemindars whom the English on their arrival in Bengal found acting as collectors of revenue had originally acquired their lands and their official functions by varied titles. Some of them were landholders before the arrival of the Mussulmans, and were confirmed in their possessions by an Imperial sanad, the right of collecting revenue being added to their proprietary rights, and certain jurisdiction being conferred on them in consideration of this new duty. Others were then installed by the Mussulmans as landholders and revenue collectors when zemindars of the first kind did not exist. Others had acquired their lands by force, or fraud, or influence, or by taking advantage of the distress of their neighbours. Zemindars of all classes under the Mussulman empire paid a nasarana on acceding to their zemindari. This payment of nasarana, together with the existence of the sanad gave rise to the opinion that all zemindars alike were simply officials with no proprietary rights. In support of this view it was argued that an owner of land wanted no confirmatory charter, and that no present could be demanded from him when he merely took possession of what was his own. On the other hand, it was argued that the nasarana was an exaction, that the sanad did not profess to confer any rights, but only to confirm pre-existing rights, and that in many cases zemindars went by hereditary succession without the conferring of a sanad at all. A definition of rights as existing under Mussulman rule is universally difficult, since the empire was one resting rather on might rather than on principle. We may conclude from an examination of official opinion on the status of zemindars before 1793 that they were proprietors utilised for the performance of official work, and that their proprietary rights were necessarily indefinite since they were limited according to political exigencies or the caprice of the rulers. By the framers of the Permanent Settlement their status was regarded as an open question. The directors considered that their proprietary rights, such as they were, were very imperfect, since the Emperor never bound himself not to interfere with them, while he intervened to fix their rents at pleasure. The directors proposed to confer on them real, permanent, and valuable landed rights. But by the Permanent Settlement their status was not really defined, nor was there any principle by which to define it. After the Settlement a new usage grew up, which was confirmed and extended by the principles and traditions of English law.

The actual provision made by the settlement was as follows: as between the Government and the zemindars, revenue payable by the latter was fixed for ever, Government reserving to itself the right of selling a zemindar's land in default of payment. As between zemindar and ryot, Government confined themselves to the expression of a confident expectation that moderate rents would be demanded. After fixing upon the zemindars with whom they would deal, Government made certain regulations providing for tenants of zemindars who held their lands under certain specific forms of tenure. When these lands had been excluded, the zemindars were left free to let all the land that remained to any one under certain restrictions, the substance of which was that everything due from the ryot should be consolidated into one sum to be specified in a patta given to the ryot, that collection of rent should only be made through persons specially authorised by the landlords, and that the ryot should receive an acknowledgment of all sums paid by them. The zemindars were not allowed to cancel a ryot's patta unless it had been fraudulently obtained, or unless the rent for three years had been below the purgannah rate, or unless the assessment was raised on a general remeasurement of the purgannah. No patta could be given for a longer period than ten years. The extent of the zemindar's rights is beyond doubt. Mr. Mill in his history objects to the Permanent Settlement as favourable to the aristocracy, and Sir Edward Colebrooke condemns it as merging all subordinate rights in the paramount right of the zemindar, and sacrificing the peasantry by placing them at the mercy of the zemindars in the matter of rents. All that Government did for the ryots was to reserve power to interfere on their behalf. This right has never been exercised, and such legislation as there has been has not been in favour of the ryot. A view, the direct opposite of this, has been held as to the intention and effect of the Permanent Settlement. It has been maintained that the ryots' rights were determined by a fixed usage, which it was the intention of the Government to perpetuate, that the real property in the soil vested in the ryots, and that the zemindars had only a rent-charge on the estates. But Mr. Field brings evidence to show that this view cannot be maintained. If the ryots had real property in the soil they could not be arbitrarily evicted by the zemindars, yet in 1793 the right of the latter to evict was left uncertain. Government merely expressed a hope that the ryots would be fairly treated. But from the unequal position of the two parties in the settling of the rent, the bargain has always gone against the ryot. In 1819 the directors determined that the zemindars could fix any rent they pleased, and that they could evict even khudkashi tenants for non-payment. In 1789 Mr. Harrington had discussed the questions of fixity of rent and fixity of tenure as they affected all three parties, the Government, the zemindars, and the ryots; and he came to the conclusion that fixity was undesirable, and in consequence, it was not granted in 1793 to any ryots but those who had a declared or prescriptive title to it. What the Government forbade in 1793 was not the raising of rents, but the imposition of abwah, the object of this prohibition being not to limit rents, but to ensure certainty as to legitimate demands upon the ryot.

There is indirect evidence in the Code of 1793 that Government contemplated a rise in rents. The Government also at that time expressed their intention of increasing indirect taxation as land became more productive, and it would clearly be unjust to tax the zemindars more heavily, and at the same time to deprive them of the benefit of all improvements in the land. Moreover, the value of the Government share of the produce had always been regarded as a standard for fixing rents. After the Settlement this share was paid to the zemindars, and a zemindar who received his rents in kind would participate in the increase of the produce, whereas one who was tied down to a fixed money rent would not. For the purpose of fixing this share of the produce, the zemindar had, and retained under the Settlement, the right of measuring their lands with a view, as Mr. Field contends, to bringing rent rate into accord with the value for the time being of the zemindar's share of the produce. The right of raising rents on a re-measurement of lands was secured under the restrictions which we have already alluded to in this article. Further, the patwarries were ordered to keep an account of the produce of lands which can only have been wanted as a basis for fixing rents from time to time. Nor is this all: Government have themselves raised rents and have allowed others to do the same. In short, under the Settlement of 1793 the relation of zemindar and ryot was practically the relation of landlord and tenant under the English system of competition and this fact has been recognised and affirmed by the courts. Since 1793 the following causes have been at work to alter rate rents:—Waste land has been reclaimed, and ryots have been established on it at new rents, and purchasers of lands sold by auction on account of arrears of revenue have raised the rents of them. To what extent these two causes have operated we can well imagine, if we consider that in 1793 half of Bengal was waste, and that between 1793 and 1815 half of the landed property in Bengal changed hands. The ryot had no rights whatever if we except the vague pledge of interference given by Government. The framers of the Permanent Settlement expected that the settlement of the Government demand would lead to the investment of capital in land, and that the whole population would share in its increased productiveness by means of mutually advantageous contracts amicably made between landlords and tenants. We must again reserve the further consideration of the question for a future article.—Times of India.

OUR TRADE WITH INDIA.

At the last autumnal meeting of the Association of Chambers of Commerce, it was decided that it is desirable for this country to do all that is possible to give increased vigour to our trade with India, by developing the agricultural resources of that country, by improving the means of internal communication, by encouraging the establishment of local banks, and the application of British capital to remunerative public works. The association at its last annual gathering again took this important matter up. At present the conditions of commerce between the United Kingdom and our Eastern Empire are by no means satisfactory. Certainly progress has been made, but not to an extent proportionate with the resources of India, nor with the number of the population.

India is one of the most important of the British possessions. The days are now, of course, past and gone, when a man could go to India and return in a few years a millionaire, but the financial position of the country is very promising. The total burden of its debt, uncovered by productive public works is only two-and-a-half millions per annum, as contrasted with twenty one millions per annum at home, and this in spite of feanish outcries that India would be ruined by the Afghan War. As already mentioned, the trade between this country and India has shown some progress, there being an increase in imports and exports of eighteen millions between 1868 and 1882. This amount, however, was not evenly divided, the increase in the value of our exports during the period being only seven millions—viz., from twenty-two to twenty-nine millions, a comparatively low amount as contrasted with our colonies, being only 2s. 3d. per head per annum; for Australia stands highest with £8 18s. per head of the population. Next comes the Cape, with £4 10s.; West Indies, £2 12s. 3d.; China, £2 2s. 7d.; and of foreign countries, we export to Holland at the rate £2 6s. 2d.; Belgium, £1 9s. 3d.; Denmark, £1 0s. 8d.; South America, 13s. 6d.; United States of America, 11s. 11d.; Sweden and Norway, 11s. 4d.; France, 9s. 3d.; Portugal, 8s. 3d.; Germany, 8s. 2d.; Turkey, 5s. 7d.; Italy, 4s. 7d.; and Spain, 4s. 5d.

It must be admitted, however, that it would be unreasonable to expect the same returns from India as from Australia or Canada, for in the former case we have to deal with a large population of natives, and in the latter with colonists, either Britons or descendants of Britons, whose wants are larger and more varied than those of the Hindoos; and this phase of the question seems to have been lost sight of. Nevertheless, it is evident that things might be better, and works are in progress which should make them so, for in the last Indian Budget it was mentioned that in one year £1,500,000 had been spent in irrigation, thus increasing the agricultural resources of the land, and, as a consequence, the purchasing power of those who work it. But the difficulty, it is asserted, is to find a market for the produce, owing to insufficient means of carriage, there being but one mile of railway to 130 square miles of territory. In the United States the western and southern districts were rapidly developed by introducing ample means of communication, and the same has been seen in Canada. To encourage railways, the Indian Government has in some cases guaranteed a certain dividend, but it is held that this is not enough, and that it should proceed to construct lines itself. Much promptitude was shown in the way of railway laying when this was required for the military operations of the late Government. Without doubt the same diligence can be shown in constructing lines for commercial purposes, and it is also held that they would be a great security against loss of life by famine in the future, as past disastrous famines have been due to the difficulty of conveying food to districts where the supply had failed.

It is scarcely likely, however, that the procedure of the Association of Chambers of Commerce is entirely unselfish, and solely actuated by a desire to assist India. The reason, more likely, is to benefit British trade; but the two objects may well go hand in hand. Mr. J. K. Cross, Under Secretary of State for India, speaking in January last on the subject of India, pointed out how that country was progressing in the cultivation of tea, cotton, seeds, and wheat. If anything can be done to promote these industries it will be a benefit both to India and Great Britain.—English and Colonial Merchant.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE "INDIAN STATESMAN" ON THE SILVER DIFFICULTY.

THE cardinal error of English writers and of English legislation on the subject of the "Currency" is their assumption that the standard of value must of necessity be identical with the commodity of which it is made. While this belief is acted upon—and it is the basis of Sir Robert Peel's legislation—the "standard" must of course fluctuate in value with the casual market price of the commodity. The fact that such fluctuations were very rare and so insignificant as to be hardly appreciable, betrayed our legislators into ignoring the possibility of their ever becoming so marked and important, as to call for legislative provision against them. The result is that the English mind has become so familiar with the fallacy that the "standard" and the metal of which it is made must necessarily be identical, led Sir Robert Peel, whose whole course showed that he had never mastered the subject, to propound the famous question, "What is a pound sterling?" and to define it by declaring it to be simply "so many pennyweights of gold of a given fineness." Had he foreseen the possibility of the market price of either gold or silver fluctuating, as the latter metal has done of late years, his practical instincts would have disclosed to him the dangerous fallacy which he was postulating as the foundation of our currency law. Nations have chosen the precious metals as their standard of value, because of their presumed invariableness of value, long experience having led to this presumption being acted upon without a misgiving. The experience of the last ten years has shown conclusively that we can no longer presume anything of the kind. It is the very first duty of the State to see that its standards do not fluctuate, whether they have respect to weight, capacity, length, or value, and the most minute precautions are taken to see that the standard yard, the standard gallon, and the standard weight never varies a hair's-breadth from one century to another. But with the standard of value, the State has been content to trust to the assumed invariability in value of the metals in which it is expressed. No precaution whatever has been taken to correct any aberrations therein, firstly, because of their assumed invariability; and, secondly, because the means of correcting such aberrations appeared to be out of the reach of legislation. The only English writer who seems to have discerned the oversight was Mr. J. S. Mill, whose reference to the subject is, however, so slight and incidental, that we doubt if it has ever attracted the attention of any writer but ourselves. Mr. Mill says:—

Of all commodities, the precious metals are among the least influenced by any of the causes which produce fluctuations of value. . . . Gold and silver, therefore, are more fit than any other commodity to be the subject of engagements for receiving or paying a given quantity at some distant period. Page 295, People's edition.

At the time when Mill wrote this, no one dreamed of such a state of things being possible as has prevailed for the last eight years in the silver market. Mill would have held it to be intolerable. He writes:—

All variation in the value of the circulating medium are mischievous. They disturb existing contracts; . . . and the liability to such changes renders every pecuniary engagement of long date entirely precarious.

Had Mill lived to witness the indifference with which the Government of this country has seen its standard of value tossed up and down by the fluctuations in the market price of silver in the last eight years, he would never have rested until the remedy were found. In the very passage in which he insists upon the currency conforming exactly to the metallic standard, he is careful to indicate that it is to the permanent value of the metal that the currency must be held fast, and this is the passage that has been overlooked. He says:—

When the value of a metallic or of any other currency is spoken of, there are two points to be considered, the permanent or average value and the fluctuations. It is to the permanent value of a metallic currency that the value of a proper currency ought to conform. But there is no obvious reason why it should be required to conform to the fluctuations, too. The only object of its conforming at all is, steadiness of value; and with respect to fluctuations, the sole thing desirable is that they should be the smallest possible.—P. 396.

We have repeatedly directed public attention to this passage, both in England and in India, but without effect. Instead of our paper currency in India, or our rupee, conforming to the permanent or normal value of the metal, 60d. per ounce, we have seen the Government idly fold its hands while the rupee has meant anything in value from 1s. 6d. to 2s. And although the Press and the Chambers of Commerce have united to demand a remedy, the Government has amused them with a crotchety "resolution" that tells us that it is "uncertain whether it is silver that has fallen or gold that is risen in value." The belief has been acted upon all through this silver difficulty, that the State is under no obligation whatever to correct any aberration in the standard of value. Now if this be true, an accident may reduce the price of silver to that of copper, or raise it to that of platinum, and the State is helpless. Does any man living believe that if gold had fallen 16 to 20 per cent. in value in the last ten years, no remedy would have been found for it in England, with leases, annuities, and engagements for all time, to be discharged in the pound sterling? It is sheer governmental incapacity that has allowed the present state of matters to endure, an incapacity that is held in countenance by the profound indifference of the Home Government and Parliament to Indian affairs, however vital. To say that there is no remedy is simply to say that the Government abnegates its position, and forfeits its right to the allegiance and obedience of the people. It is abundantly clear that the charge of a seignorage upon coining silver, or of an import duty, or the stoppage of private coinage would have prevented the fall altogether, and the ruinous losses it has entailed upon us. These are solutions of the difficulty within our own reach, while the bi-metallists propose concerted action of the nations that would attain the same end, and the Government is too paralytic to entertain even the thought of applying a remedy.

INDIAN INSTITUTE AT OXFORD.

THE Government of India, in a letter to the Local Government state: "I am directed to state for the information of His Excellency the Governor in Council, that the assistance of the Government of India has been asked by Professor Monier Williams towards the formation of a museum in the Indian Institute at Oxford. The Government of India in this department has arranged to provide the museum with a small number of agricultural models and a collection of raw products, and it will be glad if His Excellency the Governor in Council can render any assistance towards furthering the object which Professor Monier Williams has in view. As the chief object of the museum is educational, the articles required for it are mainly such as serve to represent or illustrate the life, religious habits, and indigenous industries of the people. Articles de luxe, as for instance the fine silks of Cashmere or the silver works of Lucknow, are not needed. Models, specimens of costume, sacrificial vessels, household implements, cotton and woollen fabrics may be mentioned as most likely to be useful. The Government of India has sanctioned a small grant of money for this purpose from Imperial revenues, which has been allotted for expenditure through the several Local Governments and Administrations. The Comptroller-General has accordingly been requested to place the sum of Rs.400 at the disposal of your Government. I am to request that the small assignment that the Government of India has been able to make may be used to the best advantage on behalf of the institute, and to suggest that it should be expended in direct communication with Professor Monier Williams, to whom a copy of this letter will be forwarded. Should His Excellency the Governor in Council desire it, the Government of India will have no objection to the grant now made being supplemented from Provincial revenues." The letter has been communicated to the Superintendent, Government Central Museum, who is requested to comply with the requisition made by the Government of India, making such references as may be called for to Professor Monier Williams directly. The Accountant General will place the sum of Rs.400 at the disposal of Dr. Bidie, who will be assisted, when necessary, by all collectors and heads of departments.—Madras Standard.

A SECRET DESPATCH BY LORD NORTHBROOK ON THE MERV QUESTION.

It is easy, says the Civil and Military Gazette, to show the significance of the Russian annexation of Merv by reference to the opinions of even Liberal statesmen. Lord Northbrook was never suspected of Russophobia; but he held, very decidedly, that if Merv were ever annexed by Russia, strong and decided measures should be taken by England. A secret despatch to the Secretary of State, dated Simla, June 7, 1875, and signed by such noted Liberals as Lord Northbrook himself, and Sir Arthur Hobhouse, discusses the matter pretty fully. The Governor General in Council writes:—

"We have before stated our apprehension that the assumption by Russia of authority over the whole Turkoman country would create alarm in Afghanistan, and we think it desirable to express our opinion of the course which should be adopted if it should take place. It would then become necessary to give additional and more specific assurances to the ruler of Afghanistan that we are prepared to assist him to defend Afghanistan against attack from without. It would probably be desirable to enter into a treaty engagement with him; and the establishment of a British Resident at Herat would be the natural consequence of such an engagement, and of the nearer approach of the Russian frontier."

AFGHANISTAN.

(Times of India.)

TRADERS arriving at Peshawar from Cabul say that the occupation of Merv by the Russians is the engrossing topic of the day in Afghanistan, and is causing much excitement. The Ameer regards the Russian advance with complacency. It is believed that a secret understanding exists between himself and the Russians. At the present time Russians are reported to be in Cabul. On the other hand, it is believed that the Ameer has made urgent representations to the Indian Government for more money, ammunition, and arms, without which he fears he will not be able to protect Herat. The Russian movements are being discussed in every bazaar in Upper India.

The report that the Ameer Abdul Rahman has taken the management of the Western Khyber out of the hands of Akbar Khan, the Khan of Lalpura, is confirmed in other ways, and is of some importance. On the defection of his half-brother, Sadik Khan, Akbar was appointed Khan of Lalpura by the British Government, and the appointment was confirmed and recognised by the Ameer Abdul Rahman. The choice proved a good one, and from year to year it was reported that he was behaving well. He managed the Western portion of the Kyber from Landi Khana to Dakka with considerable success, although that portion of the pass, in which, of course, we have no jurisdiction, is especially exposed to attacks by marauding Shinwaris. He is said to be the manliest of the sons of Nauroz Khan; and, for an Afghan, remarkably loyal and indisposed to intrigue. His chief faults are said to be a tendency to spend too much money on music and the local ballet; but on the whole, the Indian Government have had no reason to regret the choice made by themselves in 1880, and confirmed afterwards by Abdul Rahman. The Ameer's action now can hardly be regarded as altogether satisfactory. He has a perfect right, however—or at any rate he has the right—to take over the management of Western Khyber; and Akbar Khan has no exclusive claim to the management of the Khyber within Mohmund limits. Still, according to the custom in such matters, he had a certain claim to an allowance from the Ameer for managing the Western Khyber, just as the Khyber Afridis claim and obtain subsidies from us.—Civil and Military Gazette.

The following extracts from trans-frontier news-letters will be read with interest. Some of the statements made are evidently based on mere rumour; but even the fact that they are currently believed in Cabul and on the frontier is not without significance. We read:—"The young chief of Bokhara—Eozaffir Eddin's son—has arrived with a force at the banks of the River Oxus, where the chiefs of Khiva are encamped; but their intention is not known. From Afghan Turkestan it is reported that Sardar Mahomed Hashim Khan (the late Sherif Khan's son), accompanied by his brother and General Gholam Haidar Khan Wardak, has marched with a force towards the towns of Akhcha and Shibarghan; while Sardar Mahomed Isa Khan, on the other hand, has advanced with a force to oppose him. Both force are encamped at a distance of ten miles from each other, and a fight is soon expected. Sardar Mahomed Ayub Khan is not permitted to leave Mashad without orders from the King of Persia. It is rumoured in Cabul that the Government of India has asked the Ameer to give them possession of Kandahar as a regular station. This the Ameer has refused, unless he is paid some crores of money for it. The Ameer once every week invites all his officers, both military and civil, to a rich dinner; at which he tells them that the time is coming near when their services will be needed, and that they should treat their subordinates properly, and encourage them in every way to be ready for war. By order of the Ameer, Parwana Khan, whose arrival at Jalalabad was recently reported, has been trying to win over the chiefs of the Shinwaris, who had been ill-treated by the Ameer. It has also been proposed that Sayad Mahmud Jan, late Badshah of Kunar, should be re-instated in his post, and the Ameer's garrison at Kunar be withdrawn. Parwana Khan has gone to Pesh Bolak to distribute pay to the army; and on his return to Jalalabad, he will go back to Cabul. Akbar Khan, of Lalpura, has been altogether removed from the management of the Khyber Pass, and Sardar Yar Mahomed Khan has been placed in charge of the pass. The Mangal Kheyls have collected themselves in large numbers under Sadu Khan, and a fight is expected. Gholam Haidar Khan, one of the attendants of Parwana Khan, has gone to Peshawar to purchase certain articles for him, and will leave that place on Monday next."—Ibid.

THE NATIVE PAPERS ON THE RUSSIAN OCCUPATION OF MERV.

THE Bharat Mihir (Mymensing) takes a more serious view:—"We will be losers if the Russians set foot on the soil of India. In spite of many shortcomings we are heartily in favour of British rule. We cannot expect so much from the Russian Government as we expect from the British Government. But the present attitude of Russia has created apprehensions in us. We beseech the Government to take note of this fact. Russia is really at our doors, and will avail herself of the first opportunity to enter this country in the event of a complication in Europe. Russia has very recently occupied Merv and advanced beyond Bokhara. It is by no means probable that Russia is making such an advance for the sake of effecting improvement in commerce. It is not easy to determine what England should do at the present moment. England ought to consider the internal condition of India, and if there be any deficit of funds, should supply it. The people are generally suffering from poverty and gradually declining, and if such a state of things continues, thousands of fortresses in Afghanistan will not be able to do anything. Russia at the present moment is doing no harm to England, but is extending her territories. But England has become anxious, as such extension may in future proceed as far as India. We do not see the necessity for such anxieties. If the Government be confident in its own strength, then there is no necessity for entertaining any fear for the extension of dominion by the Russians. If necessary, the Government may improve the internal condition of India. The Government will be weakened if it ever enters Afghanistan. The people of India heartily desire the permanency of the British rule. But if Government think that the people are not well disposed towards it, some allowance ought to be made by a generous treatment of them. When the people are loyally attached to Government, hundreds of Russians will not be able to do any thing, even by being at the Khyber Pass. The goodwill of the people is the best fortress of the British nation."

On the same subject the Someprokash (Sonarpore, Calcutta) says:—"The extension of railways by the Russians and their recent victories in Central Asia have created alarms among a class of politicians regarding India. Whatever opinions may be entertained by others on this subject, we think if the Russians approach India there will be a desire on the part of both the Powers to try their mutual strength, and we are now to consider which Power is likely to become victorious. The Russians are inferior to the British in many respects, and will not, we think, be able to achieve a victory over them. But this supposition will not always hold good. If the liberal measures initiated by Lord Ripon be continued, then the people will be attached more to the British Government, and if the Government succeeds in securing the popular affection and regard, foreign invasion will not be successful."

The Burdwan Sanjibani (Burdwan) remarks:—"The rap d

movements of Russia in Central Asia may create apprehension in us; but why should a nation which overthrew the power of Napoleon and made him an exile, and which defeated the armaments of Spain and Holland, and became the mistress of the sea, and also lowered the pride of Russia at Sebastopol, now fear the said Russians? We have so much confidence in the power and prestige of our rulers, that even if Russia, France, and Germany combine, still they will not be able to take possession of India. England is the land of wealth and the home of heroes. Out of the 250 millions of the Indian population 250,000 are capable of using arms, and if these 250,000 be led by a veteran European commander, and reinforced with an additional 100,000 British soldier, Russia will never be able to enter into this country."

The Nababihbaker (Calcutta) says:—"Russia has occupied Merv. Now the question is what the British Government will do at the present moment. Had the Conservatives been in power the army would have been sent to Herat. The Liberals do not enter into a war unless compelled by necessity. It will be dangerous in the interests of India if an army be sent to Herat, for the people of the country will suffer both in money and men. Will the British Lion depend on the integrity and friendship of the Ameer Abdul Rahman? As far as we see, Her Majesty's Ministers will send an army to Afghanistan in the ensuing cold season. We think it would be better for the British Government if it succeeds in securing the friendship of the Ameer and the Cabulis to give up Russophobia. If the Government can secure the Cabulis on its side the Russians will not be able to move beyond Merv. Let the oft-repeated word 'prestige' and the fear that Russia will occupy Afghanistan, and then India, be abandoned. The best course for the Government will be to consolidate its internal strength by securing the goodwill and affection of the people. England has conquered several parts of the world with her three millions of subjects. It will be a shameful thing if it cannot keep the Russians out of India after securing the affection and regard of 250 millions of the Indian population."

On the same subject the Ananda Bazar Patrika (Calcutta) writes:—"The Russians have occupied Central Asia and succeeded in securing the good will and affection of the people of those places by their generous treatment. On the other hand, the British Government in this country is losing the popular affection through adopting a narrow and selfish policy which has not been, we may say, based upon equity. Under such circumstances, if the Asiatics do not entertain any good feeling towards Englishmen the fault is not theirs."

And again:—"We believe the Russians have really occupied Merv, as the Government is anxious for the extension of railways to Quetta. If the Russians have really occupied Merv, there may be cause for anxiety to the people of India, as millions of money will be spent for which they will have to suffer. But there may also be a cause for satisfaction to the people if the Government will show some consideration to them. The Government was not so strict so long as the Punjab was independent, but since the downfall of that province the Government has assumed a different attitude towards the people. If the Russians enter Afghanistan after the occupation of Merv, then the Government will see the people in a different light. It will not be able to hold India unless it secures the goodwill of the people, and confers on them their just rights and privileges. The people of this country are loyally attached to the Government, and do not wish its extinction. This is attributable to no other cause but that the people are of a peace-loving and quiet disposition. Besides, they have high regard for the Queen-Empress. But if the people express joy on the intended approach of the Russians to this country, the authorities cannot blame them. The people very well know that the British Government is a blessing to them in many respects, and that most of the Liberals and Conservatives are favourably disposed towards them, and have their welfare at heart. But neither Her Majesty, nor Her Ministers, nor even the Viceroy, is the ruler of India. The district magistrate, and the sessions judge, and the police are the real governors, and their high-handedness and oppressive conduct have become unbearable to the people."

Bengal Public Opinion says:—"Not only should the rapid but steady advance of Russia towards the borders of India be viewed with the profoundest unconcern, but with positive pleasure. The gain that will accrue to humanity by the civilising influences that Russia will necessarily bring to bear on the life custom and character of the nomad hordes of Central Asia have already been briefly dwelt upon in a previous article, and this in itself is a sufficient reason why we should hail with joy the progress of Russia among the hills, and deserts, and oases of Turkestan. But there is another and a more material phase of the question which should also be viewed with equal delight. It is the bright prospects of the opening up of an enormous trade between India and China and the continental countries of Europe. . . . The presence of a powerful European power on the borders of India will not, again, be without its healthy influence on the Government of India, who, according to the dictates of that most powerful instinct, the instinct of self-preservation, will scrupulously try to make the dominion of England pleasant and beneficial to the people of India. This will bar the introduction of retrograde measures—high export duties, &c.—that might effectually put a check to all direct commercial relations between India and the European countries. The Government, with the dread of Russia at the very gates of India, will be almost powerless to impose unjust restrictions on the trade of India with the continent of Europe. And Russian advance in Central Asia, therefore, will exert a mighty influence in the development of Indian trade. It is for this reason also that we hail with sincere joy the advance of Russia towards the borders of Afghanistan."

The Amrita Bazaar Patrika says:—"There is no denying the fact that the actual meeting of Russia and England in Central Asia is not very far distant indeed, and by no conceivable policy can it be, we fear, much longer avoided. All is ready for the advance, and the specious pretence of the extension of legitimate commerce is not wanted to palliate or justify a forward policy. Can it be so arranged between the Governments of the two countries that the meeting should take place on the peaceful ground of commerce and international intercourse? We have always maintained that a Russian neighbourhood would be productive of incalculable good to the people of this country. But we hold, at the same time, that a war between England and Russia somewhere in Central Asia will prove more disastrous to India than even the famous invasion of that country by Nadir Shah."

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—At the Indian sales to-day 4,265 packages passed at firm but unaltered rates. The China market privately is very depressed. At auction to-day only 2,386 boxes green teas were offered, and sold at 1 1/2 quotations.

SUGAR.—The market continues flat, and the business has been only 78 casks Barbados, part ex yesterday's sales and some parcels of low brown Eastern, including jagged and native Penang at 9s. to 10s. No further change has transpired in beet. In the Clyde market a fair extent of business done. Pieces selling at about 3d. per cwt. decline.

COFFEE.—At the public sales to-day Plantation Ceylon went off without material alteration in prices, and East India was not pressed for sale at any further decline. Of the former 345 casks 363 barrels and bags sold—small to low middling, 57s. to 62s.; middling to good middling, 63s. to 69s. 6d.; fine to rather bold, 71s. to 77s.; fine bold, 86s. to 91s. 152 cases 980 bags East India mostly bought in; few lots small and medium selling at 57s. to 61s. 1,444 Costa Rica, small part sold again rather easier; fine ordinary, 46s. 6d. to 48s.; low middling to middling, 53s. to 60s.; fine, 70s. to 70s. 6d. 2,124 bags Guatemala went steadily at previous rates; 930 bags other foreign, 100 half frezils. Mocha bought in or withdrawn.

SPICES.—A dull tone prevailed at the weekly sales. 2,900 bags black pepper met few bids, and all bought in. White rather lower. Of 840 bags Singapore, few lots selling at 9½d., and 70 bags Penang at 9½d. to 9¾d.; Pimento steady, 1,166 bags, about three-fourths sold at 2½d. to 2¾d., a lot or two at 2¾d. Zanzibar cloves one-eighth dearer; 727 bags chiefly placed, ordinary, 4¾d.; fair, 4¾d.; good, 5d. to 5½d. 13 cases Penang realized 1s. 3½d. to 1s. 6½d.; 48 bags Amboyna bought at 8d. to 9d. per lb. 500 boxes Cassia Lignea sold at 27s. 6d. to 28s.; 249 boxes broken ditto withdrawn at 26s.; 20 boxes buds sold at 22s. 6d.; and 20 bales Padang Vera, at 22s. per cwt. Nutmegs rather lower and about ½d. 273 packages Penang found buyers, 63s. to 64s. 3d. to 3s. 4d.; 66s. to 78s. 2s. 4d. to 2s. 7d.; smaller, 1s. 6d. to 1s. 11d. 27 cases mace, chiefly bought in 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d.; a lot or two ordinary selling, 1s. 3d. to 1s. 5d. Cochin ginger, small to good rough sorts, 2s. lower; 1,362 packages about half sold irregular and rough, 37s. to 40s.; fine bright, 45s.; part cut, 47s. to 50s. 6d.; and rather bold cut, 60s. to 62s. 6d.; 16 barrels Jamaica, 57s. to 61s.; and 64 boxes Japan, bought in, 33s. to 38s. 6d. per cwt.

SAGO.—Large gain rather dearer, other kinds steady. 1,780 bags chiefly sold, small, 10s. 6d. to 12s. 6d.; medium 13s. 6d. to 14s.; good large, 15s. to 15s. 8d.; 600 bags flour bought in 11s. 6d. per cwt. 2,210 bags pearl tapioca, rather more than half sold, seed, at 10s. 9d. to 12s.; medium, 12s. 6d.; bullet bought in 13s. to 14s. per cwt. 1,840 bags flake, two-thirds sold 1¾d. to 1½d. per lb.

RICE.—Business has been done in fine white Bengal on the spot, at 11s. to 11s. 3d.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson say there has been continued pressure on the part of importers to realise since the Easter Holidays, and prices have further given way under the influence of large supplies. The fall upon coffee, with some few exceptions, is 2s. to 4s. per cwt., East India descriptions and Costa Rica showing the greatest depression. Quotations of the former have not been so low for many years past, current qualities selling at 55s. to 60s. per cwt. The steamer Sherborne has arrived with about 1,600 tons, part of which was sold to-day, and the market closes with a steadier demand. Rio has sold to a moderate extent at some reduction, and business on the Continent is inactive. The decline upon beet sugar has made further progress, without leading to any speculative feeling. Low brown sorts of cane-grown sugar have again given way, these selling at 9s. to 10s. per cwt., being prices hitherto unheard of. Yellow crystallised West India is dearer than fine leaves or other descriptions of dry refined sugar, the latter having receded 6d. to 1s. per cwt. since the 9th inst. In the China tea market prices show no change, with rather more business doing. Common grades of Congou are firm. Indian teas by auction met a brisk demand at hardening rates. Black and white pepper may be quoted 1½d. per lb. lower, and to sell common qualities of the former a greater fall would have to be taken. Rough Cochin ginger of the new crop offers freely, and is 1s. to 2s. per cwt. lower. Nutmegs have declined 1d. to 2d. per lb. Zanzibar cloves are rather dearer. The monthly sales of cinnamon on Monday next will comprise about 200 bales Ceylon, and 275 bales, 32 cases Tellicherry.

TEA.—The China market for private contract business remains very dull. At auction to-day, 2,701 packages Congou of the lower grades, from 6½d. to 7½d. per lb. and 1,100 greens passed "without reserve" at current rates. At the Indian sales, 2,591 packages Indian, and 417 packages Ceylon tea realised firm prices all round, specially so the finer grades. Ceylon Orange Pekoe brought 2s. 3½d. per lb.; broken Pekoe, 2s. 7d., and Pekoe, 1s. 11¾d. per lb. in bond. No further auctions will be held this week.

SUGAR.—Quiet market, and nothing reported in West India, but some further business done in cane Jhaggery, at 10s. per cwt. Beet rather easier. The Clyde market for pieces quiet. Writing from Paris on the 23rd inst., M. Bertrand Silz stated that the week which then closed could be divided into two distinct parts; in the first part the fall was increased to 46f. 50c. for this month's delivery, and in the second a certain reaction brought them back very close to last Wednesday's quotations, which now seem more likely to be maintained. The low prices of sugar will consequently make a number of manufacturers stand still next season, and will also sensibly reduce the production of those who will work. In fact, with the exception of old contracts to which they are obliged to submit, manufacturers will either now have to give up purchasing the roots, preferring to wait for the gathering in of the crop so as to be able to fix the value with a small amount of risk, or they will be obliged to be so exacting as to the saccharine richness that it will then be the growers who will have to give up selling. Evidently the cultivation with such a dark outlook reduces the sowings as much as possible. It is worth while mentioning that the fall this month has been 4f. (1s. 6d.), while 88 per cent. in U.K. have only fallen by 75c. (3d.). The present dry and cold weather with frost at night is unfavourable to the raising of the roots.

COFFEE.—East Indian meets a good demand at easier rates, and the large supply of 263 cases, 3,281 bags by auction, chiefly sold; medium, 59s. 6d. to 60s. 6d.; few lots Mysore, 68s. 6d.; and bold, 77s. to 80s. 6d.; Plantation went at previous rates, to 1s. and 1s. 1d. for common to middling qualities and full to higher rates for bold; 479 casks, 123 barrels and bags sold; smalls, 50s. to 56s.; low, middling, 59s. to 61s.; middling, 63s. to 64s. 6d.; good to fine middling, 66s. to 70s.; rather bold 74s. to 76s.; good and fine, 70s. to 88s.; one lot, 102s.; 111 packages Jamaica good and fine ordinary, 45s. 6d. to 49s. 6d.; middling, 62s.; 4,292 bags Guatemala chiefly bought, a small lot selling, 47s. 6d. to 51s. fine ordinary; and 54s. 6d. to 57s. for middling; 2,543 bags Costa Rica, one third sold chiefly at 51s. to 56s.; 13 half barrels Mocha, withdrawn.

RICE.—Two Rangoon cargoes, the one 8s. 6d. open charter, the other 8s. 1d. steamer Continent; also one Bassin, at 8s. 6d. per cwt. open charter.

THE SILVER MARKETS AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

TUESDAY.—The position of the Silver Market is unchanged. Bars are still quoted at 50 13-16d. per ounce, but business has been restricted. Mexican dollars are wanted, but there being none here, no actual price can be given for them. Indian exchange rates are firm at 1s. 7 27-32d. to 1s. 7¾d., and the directors of the Bank of Bengal, owing to the scarcity of money in Calcutta, have found it necessary to raise their discount rate to 11 per cent., which is the current quotation at the Bank of Bombay. China exchange rates are unaltered. Less business has been done in Rupee Paper, and prices are not quite so firm, the Four-and-a-Half and Four per Cents. closing at 81¼ to 82½, and 79¼ to 79½ respectively.

WEDNESDAY.—Bar silver keeps steady at 50 13-16d. per ounce, and business is still to a great extent checked by the absence of supplies. Mexican dollars, although wanted, are not obtainable, and no reliable quotation can yet be given for them. The Calcutta rate for telegraphic transfers remains at 1s. 7¾d., and Bombay at 1s. 7 27-32d., but China rates for four months' bills are firmer at 5s. 1d. in Shanghai, and 3s. 8¾d. in Hongkong. A greater amount of business has been done in Rupee Paper, the prices of which are ¼ to ½ higher. The Four-and-a-Half per Cents. closed at 82½ 82¾, and the Four per Cents. at 79½ 79¾.

THURSDAY.—There has been a good demand for bar silver to-day, transactions having been entered into at 51d. per ounce, which compares with 50 13-16d., the price paid previously. Mexican dollars are wanted at 49¾d. but no supplies are expected before the arrival of the West India steamer Para, which is due on the 27th inst. Indian telegraphic transfer rates are quoted at 1s. 7¾d., and the Hongkong four months' rate of exchange is firmer at 3s. 8¾d., Shanghai being unaltered at 5s. 1d. Rupee Paper is still in pretty good demand, owing to the cheapness of money here. The Four-and-a-Half per Cents. closed at 82¼ 82¾, and the Four per Cents. at 79½ 79¾.

FRIDAY.—The Silver Market is firm at Thursday's prices, but business in both bars and dollars has been quiet. Eastern Exchange rates are strong at 1s. 7¾d. in India, 3s. 8¾d. in Hongkong, and 5s. 1¾d. in Shanghai. The cheapness of money continues to bring in buyers of Rupee Paper, the prices of which are very firm. The Four-and-a-Half per Cents. left off at 82¾ 82¾, and the Four per Cents. at 79¾ 80.

Owing to the scarcity of water, the work on the public offices in course of erection at Simla is to be temporarily stopped. This measure will relieve the station of the pressure of some five thousand workmen engaged on them, who have had great difficulties in obtaining water, and have been compelled to supply their wants from wells and streams about the hills that are not of the purest. It is feared that if this condition of things were allowed to continue an epidemic might break out as the hot weather advances. In connection with this subject, it may be here mentioned that shortly after his arrival the Viceroy, on learning of the threatened scarcity, gave orders that the watering of the garden at Peterhoff should be stopped.

Speaking of the state of the Simla water supply, a correspondent of a contemporary writes:—"Some idea of the present state of affairs can be gathered from the fact that the amount of water received in Simla during the week ending April 1st of this year was precisely half the amount received in the corresponding period in 1881, although the requirements have increased enormously within the last few years. A suggestion is on foot to augment the present supply by utilising the springs situated on the north side of the Mahasu range, which would entail an additional twelve mile length of pipe, and a probable expenditure of one and a half to two lakhs of rupees. By this means all chance of the present difficulties would be averted after the lapse of the year or two necessary for the completion of so extensive a project. One rumour has it that there is a leak in the Church Reservoir, but no proof is as yet forthcoming of the existence of anything of the kind."

Twelve months furlough to Europe on medical certificate has been granted to Major C. A. Cunningham (S. C.), Assistant Adjutant General, Mhow Division. Furlough to Europe for a similar period has also been granted to Lieutenant T. R. A. G. Montgomery (S. C.), Wing Officer, 21st N. I., on private affairs.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL ON THE INDIAN LAND QUESTION.

At the present moment, when the whole of Bengal is panic-stricken at the prospect of having Lord Ripon's revolutionary Bengal Tenancy Bill forced upon the unhappy country, it is exceedingly satisfactory to find one of the greatest of living authorities on this and similar questions coming forward to denounce the mischievous policy that is just now fashionable in India. The Duke of Argyll's position as a former Secretary of State for India is one of the least of the many qualifications which give unrivalled weight and force to his opinion on the questions now at issue between the Government of India on the one side, and the whole of the agricultural interest of Bengal on the other. His Grace is acknowledged to be one of the very ablest, clearest, and most trenchant writers on economical questions of this kind; while his experience as an improving landlord, and as a Whig magnate of the first rank, gives him excellent material for the exercise, in this direction, of an intellect of rare power. In his article on Mr. Henry George, "The Prophet of San Francisco," contributed to this month's Nineteenth Century, the Duke has, perhaps, excelled all his former writings. We are not concerned here with the bulk of the article, in which Mr. George's heresies are literally pulverised. But we have much pleasure in quoting at length his Grace's admirable defence of the Permanent Settlement, which Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert are now seeking to undermine in Bengal. The Duke says :—

"And if personal experience enables me to contradict absolutely one of Mr. George's assumptions, official experience enables me not less certainly to contradict another. Personally I know what private ownership has done for one country. Officially I have had only too good cause to know what state ownership has not done for another country. India is a country in which, theoretically at least, the State is the only and the universal landowner, and over a large part of it the State does actually take to itself a share of the gross produce which fully represents ordinary rent. Yet this is the very country in which the poverty of the masses is so abject that millions live only from hand to mouth, and when there is any—even a partial failure of the crops, thousands and hundreds of thousands are in danger of actual starvation. The Indian Government is not corrupt—whatever other failings it may have—and the rents of a vast territory can be far more safe if left to its disposal than they could be left at the disposal of such popular governments as those which Mr. George has denounced on the American Continent. Yet somehow the functions and duties which in more civilised countries are discharged by the institution of private ownership in land are not as adequately discharged by the Indian Administration. Moreover, I could not fail to observe, when I was connected with the Government of India, that the portion of that country which has most grown in wealth is precisely that part of it in which the Government has parted with its power of absorbing rent by having agreed to a Permanent Settlement. Many Anglo-Indian statesmen have looked with envious eyes at the wealth which has been developed in Lower Bengal, and have mourned over the policy by which the State has been withheld from taking it into the hands of Government. There are two questions, however, which have always occurred to me when this mourning has been expressed—the first is, whether we are quite sure that the wealth of Lower Bengal would ever have arisen if its sources had not been thus protected; and the second is, whether even now it is quite certain that any Governments, even the best, spend wealth better for the public interests than those to whom it belongs by the natural process of acquisition. These questions have never, I think, been adequately considered. But, whatever may be the true answer to either of them, there is at least one question on which all English statesmen have been unanimous—and that is, that promises once given by the Government, however long ago, must be absolutely kept. When landed property has been bought and sold and inherited in Bengal for some three generations—since 1793—under the guarantee of the Government that the Rent Tax upon it is to remain at a fixed amount no public man, so far as I know, has ever suggested that the public faith should be violated. And not only so, but there has been a disposition even to put up, on the engagement of the Government an overstrained interpretation, and to claim for the landowners who are protected under it an immunity from all other taxes affecting the same sources of income. As Secretary of State for India I had to deal with this question along with my colleagues in the Indian Council, and the result we arrived at was embodied in a despatch which laid down the principles applicable to the case so clearly, that in India it appears to have been accepted as conclusive. The Land Tax was a special impost upon rent. The promise was that this special impost should never be increased; or, in its own words, that there should be no 'augmentation of the public assessment in consequence of the improvement of their estates.' It was not a promise that no other taxes should ever be raised affecting the same sources of income, provided such taxes were not special, but affected all other sources of income equally. On this interpretation the growing wealth of Bengal accruing under the Permanent Settlement would remain accessible to taxation, along with the growing wealth derived from all other kinds of property, on the pretext that this increase was unearned. On the other hand, the State did not exempt that increased value from any taxation which might be levied also and equally from all rest of the community. In this way we reconciled and established two great principles which to short-sighted theorists may seem antagonistic. One of these principles is that it is the interest of every community to give equal and absolute security to every one of its members in his pursuit of wealth; the other is that when the public interests demand a public revenue, all forms of wealth should be equally accessible to taxation. It would have saved us all, both in London and in Calcutta, much anxious and careful reasoning if we could only have persuaded ourselves that the Government of 1793 could not possibly bind the Government of 1870. It would have given us a still wider margin if we had been able to believe that no faith can be pledged to landowners, and that we had a divine right to seize not only all the wealth of the zemindars of Bengal, but also all the property derived from the same source which had grown up since 1793, and has now become distributed and absorbed among a great number of intermediate sharers, standing between the actual cultivator and the representatives of those to whom the promise was originally given. But one doctrine has been tenaciously held by the 'stupid English people' in the government of their Eastern Empire, and that is, that our honour is the greatest of our possessions, and the absolute trust in that honour is one of the strongest foundations of our power."

Lord William Beresford, Military Secretary to the Viceroy, leaves Simla for Umballa some time this week to go through a professional examination. Major the Honourable H. Legge will act for him during his absence.

LORD RIPON'S ATTACK ON THE ENGLISH CHURCH IN INDIA.

THE whole truth—or, at least, the whole of the official truth—about Lord Ripon's recent attack on the English Church in India, has at last come out. A Parliamentary blue-book on the subject has appeared, and we reprint in another column Lord Kimberley's letter of February 28 last, which very properly checks the Viceroy's unseemly zeal, and from which our readers will be able to understand the present position of the controversy.

It will be remembered that the Times of India a short time ago announced that Lord Ripon had sent home a despatch, recommending some measure in the nature of a "disestablishment" of the English Church in India. The announcement evoked a great deal of comment in India, and was telegraphed home by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times. As there is no "establishment" of the Church in India—and never could be any in a country in which the members of that Church form such an exceedingly small body—it was at once evident that the rumours mentioned by the Times of India must refer, if true, to some contemplated attack on the provision hitherto made by the Government of India for the spiritual wants of its Christian servants, who are necessarily cut off, by the nature of their employment, from the ordinary means of grace. The very day that the telegram of the Times correspondent was published in London, an official communiqué was sent round to the Indian papers, virtually denying the impeachment of the Times of India; and in common with most of our contemporaries, we loyally accepted the disclaimer. We have always earnestly deprecated any hostile allusion to Lord Ripon's peculiar position in relation to the Indian Ecclesiastical Department; for we are entirely of opinion that the religious views of our public men, honestly held, and neither aggressively obtruded nor intolerantly forced on others, should be regarded as sacred from public criticism. On the occasion in question, we pointed out that that peculiar position rendered it in the least degree improbable that Lord Ripon, of all Viceroys, would for a moment permit any opening of the delicate questions regarding the employment of Government chaplains in India. And we also pointed out that all the best and most liberal-minded of the Native community of all religions would look with little favour on any project that might threaten seriously and permanently to lower the morale of the Christian employés of the Government.

It is, therefore, with deep regret that we find, that Lord Ripon has shown less delicacy in this matter than we should have thought possible in any English public man in the nineteenth century. The charges of the Times of India were substantially correct. In opposition to the recorded wishes of the whole of the Supreme Council—with the exception of that Abdiel, Mr. Ilbert, whose touching fidelity on all points begins to look almost like sycophancy when it extends to such a point as this—Lord Ripon has sent home a despatch in which he recommends a course which would, as Lord Kimberley aptly observes, "No doubt eventually lead to a considerable diminution of the existing establishment" of chaplains. The despatch of the Secretary of State in reply, which we publish to-day virtually informs the Viceroy, with much politeness, that his Lordship and Mr. Ilbert do not constitute the Government of India.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT IN BENGAL.

A TELEGRAPHIC account of an experimental election held in Bengal appears in the Times of April 7. Pending the arrival of the full report, it may be useful to prepare our minds for examining the experiment by considering what are the most important questions arising out of it.

The experiment was made to try the working of the Local Self-Government Bill, now before the Bengal Council. It has to do with rural areas only, which are distinguished from urban by being less densely peopled and more purely agricultural. The first remarkable point is that brought out by the figures. The selected areas are 3,600 square miles in extent, and peopled by 2,360,000 inhabitants. The point for notice is that this great extent of country picked out as a specimen of rural Bengal contains an average population of about 660 to the square mile. As the town in Bengal has about it much of the country, so the country has much of the town. Next we take the size of the union. The average area of each union in this semi-urban rural district is twenty square miles, and its population over 13,000. That means a population larger than that of all but the largest municipalities, and an area five times as large.

Then this union is an artificial union. The natural unit in Bengal is the village, and that, when large, is split up into wards; allowing three villages to every two square miles, we have thirty villages with an average population of about 435 to each union. While it is very unusual for the people of one village to take an interest in what goes on in the next, we have each village joined to twenty-nine others. It will be seen from the full report whether this junction is at all founded on practical convenience or only on theory.

The Union Board seems to consist of five unpaid members, that is, one to every six villages, or four square miles, or 2,600 inhabitants. The question arises how far such unpaid members are likely to do their work. Municipal Boards have generally to manage a less area and a less population, they have paid establishments and more members.

The income of the union is estimated at 740 rupees—i.e., 37 rupees per square mile, 25 rupees for each village, or 5 rupees for every 88 persons. Out of this all village roads, and schools, and sanitation are to be managed; and the question arises how the Board is to avoid a scramble between the villages for the funds. The union will be in a less advantageous position than municipalities, for these latter are exempt from road and public works cesses, which, near Calcutta, amount to about 3,000 rupees for the area of each union.

The question as to schools arises—what authority will the Union Board have between the Government inspectors on the one side and the local subscribers on the other? If the local subscribers are suppressed, who will guarantee the subscriptions, and if the Government inspectors are ousted, who will see that the school grants, which are Government funds, are properly spent?

Will the pound, whose income the Union will get, be managed by the union, or, as all pounds have hitherto been, by the magistrate?

As to sanitation, will the Board have power to issue sanitary orders? Will there be a penalty for disobedience? Where will cases be tried, and by whom?

Again, what will be the relations between the Union Board and the village police? Within the areas of the unions there are probably 9,000 village police, of whom 6,000 are probably paid out of rates on the village householders. For assessing and levying these rates, which will amount in all to about 3,00,000 rupees yearly, there are probably not less than 1,500 village panchayats or boards with about 6,000 members. Will the 180 Union Boards take over their work? If not, will the Union Boards have any control? Or is there to be some new way of paying the village police?

Then comes the last question: Whom do the members of the Union Board to represent? They are appointed by the villagers, but for all that they may represent some one else.

Had the villagers a chance of refusing to belong to any Union, of choosing what Union they would belong to, or of regulating its composition or size? Were they allowed to fix the number and condition of representatives, and the work they were to do?

If yes, the Union Boards are popular chiefs; if no, they are Government deputies. In the latter case, if they are treated as independent of the Government, they are simply Government deputies not under discipline.

Much interest will attach to the full report when it comes, for it will show whether the new system it illustrates is to be one of greater freedom, or one of licensed tyranny; whether the harmony with which the system has begun is likely to continue, or to develop into the old jealousies and graspings which have made local self-government in Bengal so difficult a problem in the past.

HOME NEWS.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 35,00,000 in Bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. In telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 20,15,000 were allotted, at an average rate of 1s. 7⁹/₁₆d.; Bombay, Rs. 13,50,000, average rate 1s. 7⁹/₁₆d.; and Madras, Rs. 1,00,000, average rate 1s. 7⁸/₁₆d., or a total of Rs. 34,65,000. Tenders for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 7¹/₁₆d. will receive about 50 per cent., and above in full. Subsequently one lakh of transfers on Calcutta was sold at 1s. 7¹⁵/₁₆d., four lakhs on Bombay at the same price, and a lakh and three-quarters on the same Presidency at 1s. 7³¹/₃₂d. per rupee. From the commencement of the present financial year to last Tuesday night, the total amount sold had reached Rs. 1,39,90,000, and realised £1,151,014.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA (LIMITED).—The ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this company was held on Tuesday, at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. Robert O. Campbell presided, and expressed the great disappointment of the directors at not being able to add anything to the reserve fund in respect of the last year's working. This was solely owing to the depreciation in their rupee paper, which they had had to provide for. The business had been satisfactory and profitable, and its volume had greatly increased and was thoroughly sound. While, too, failures and embarrassments not a few had been occurring among those connected with Eastern trade, this bank had escaped any loss of the slightest importance. The earning power of the bank was greater than ever. They had closed their Shanghai branch, where the results of the business had never been as satisfactory as at their other branches, and everything that had since occurred in connection with the trade of that port had confirmed the wisdom of this step. They had opened a branch at Kurrachee, where trade was developing rapidly. Passing to the balance-sheet, he compared it with that of the previous year, and stated that the increase of £146,400 in the item of "current and fixed deposits and other accounts" had been exclusively in the demand deposits—their cheapest money. As to the reduction in the bills payable, from £611,403 to £499,918, this had arisen from the increased use of telegraphic transfers, which to a great extent had taken the place of bill remittances. Their bills of exchange showed an increase of £90,638, amounting on the 31st of December to £2,074,938. They exercised very close supervision over these bills, and a committee which had been appointed since the balance was taken had gone over all their bills and reported them to be satisfactory in every respect. Their loans on "Government securities, merchandise and other accounts," £886,163, showed an increase of £102,869, and these items had also been carefully examined and found well secured. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report and the payment of a dividend for the half-year ended December 31, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, making 5 per cent. for the year. Mr. John Borradaile, seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously, and the retiring directors and auditors were afterwards re-elected. The Chairman then drew attention to the meeting which had been convened for the 19th of June to consider an alteration in the articles of association of the bank to enable them to take advantage of the Companies' Colonial Registers' Act, 1883, and expressed a hope that the meeting would be well attended.

Colonel Fagan succeeds to the Colonel's allowance on the 27th instant, from which date he has received the permission of the Secretary of State to reside in Europe.

Major A. Harden, 2nd Bengal Native Infantry, has been detailed by the Brigadier General, Presidency District, to pay pensioners in the Presidency Circle, from the 1st April, 1884.

A LASKARI DICTIONARY,

OR,
 ANGLO-INDIAN VOCABULARY OF NAUTICAL TERMS AND PHRASES IN ENGLISH AND HINDU-TANI.

Chiefly in the Corrupt Jargon in use among Laskars or Indian Sailors.

Originally compiled by Captain Thomas Roebuck, Master of the Infantry, Professor of Hindustani, Examiner, &c., in the College of Fort William, Calcutta. Revised and corrected by William Carmichael Smyth, Esq. B.C.S., and now carefully re-edited and enlarged by

GEORGE SMALL, M.A. MISSIONARY,
 Formerly of the B.M.S. at Calcutta and Benares, now to the Laskars, &c., in London, in connection with the Asiatic Strangers' Home, Limehouse.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We have received a copy of what we venture to predict will prove one of the most useful books that ever fell into the hands of a ship's officer—a vocabulary of the sea jargon of Indian lascars. In the brief space of eighty-two pages Mr. Small has given us some 1,400 nautical terms, embracing nearly the whole vocabulary of native crews. We congratulate Mr. Small on the completion of a book which, if it is the last pretentious, is, to our thinking, the most useful and the most interesting of all the books he has yet written."—Statesman, Calcutta.

"Of the value of the present edition, for the intended purpose it is difficult to speak too highly."—Home News, May 26, 1882.

"This is a handy pocket vocabulary of nautical terms, which will enable naval officers to navigate their ships with the mutinous crews which often fall to their lot. There are many to whom such a book is absolutely essential; and Mr. Small's connection with the Asiatic Strangers' Home fits him for its preparation. Mr. Small's book will, no doubt, find ready purchasers among those concerned in Eastern trade."—Overland Mail, March 7, 1882.

"A copy of this little work ought to be in the hands of every captain of a vessel in the East who has any native crew; for how often has serious damage occurred through a captain's orders to his crew being misunderstood, just as the misuse of the terms starboard and larboard has led to vessels being driven on the rocks. Nautical phrases require special study, much more so when they relate to an Eastern language so little known to our people."—Journal of the National Indian Association, July, 1882.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE MINUTE OF DISSENT FROM THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL, RECORDED BY THE HON. KRISTODAS PAL, RAI. BAHADUR, C.I.E., MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF INDIA.

MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1884.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE Minute of Dissent from the Report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, recorded by the Hon. Kristodas Pal, Rai Bahadur, C.I.E.

DISSENTS.

I dissent from the report of the majority of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

The Committee commenced their sittings from November 21, 1883, and concluded their labours on March 13, 1884. They first met twice a week, and the members were required to give forty-eight hours' notice of amendments to be moved by them. From January 26, the Committee resolved to sit thrice a week from 2 p.m. to 5.30 p.m.; and notices of amendments were required to be sent in to the Secretary the day before the meeting; and the amendments were circulated on the morning of the meeting. The new arrangement was proposed owing to the amount of work which remained undone, and also owing to the near approach of the Simla season; but I cannot refrain from remarking that, apart from personal inconvenience which it necessarily involved, it left the members scant time, scarcely ten hours, for the preparation of amendments, and six hours for their study, even if one gave his whole time to this work. I considered it my duty to protest against the arrangement, as it was neither fair to the individual members of the Committee, particularly to one in my position, being deprived of the opportunity of consulting those whose views I was understood to represent, nor to the momentous interests involved, but my protest was of no avail. The Committee certainly gave their best attention under the circumstances mentioned to the matters before them, and, as far as I was concerned, showed me the utmost courtesy and consideration, but there was an unavoidable haste in disposing of momentous questions at the last moment, which could not but be regretted.

I wish the Rules of the Council had permitted the Committee to examine witnesses on practical questions connected with the Bill. The Committee, I doubt not, felt the necessity of this power. At the suggestion of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor the Committee in an informal way examined some experienced zemindars on the subject of sub-letting.

The Bill has undergone material alterations at the hands of the Committee, but its cardinal principles remain unchanged. In some respects the position of the zemindars has been made worse than what it was in the original Bill. On some minor points even-handed justice has been done to both the zemindar and the raiyat. The middle-man of course gains much more than what he has under the existing law, but the bona fide cultivator, in whose behalf the greatest anxiety was evinced in the Committee, will, I fear, be practically worse off than he is at present. I do not now wish to discuss the whole Bill, and will not therefore enter into details on these points.

My objections to the Bill have been principally based on these grounds, firstly, because it goes against the ancient and existing land-law of the country, taking away on the one hand and conferring on the other rights which are inconsistent with that law; secondly, because it assumes a construction of the Regulations, which is opposed to judicial decisions, and takes for granted statements and facts not supported by evidence; thirdly, because it does not fulfil the primary object for which it was originally sought, namely, the simplification of the procedure for the settlement and realisation of rent; fourthly, because it is calculated to sow dispute and dissension between the landlord and the tenant and flood the land with litigation to the detriment of the peace and welfare of the agricultural community; fifthly, because it will tend to reduce a large proportion of cultivating raiyats into agricultural day-labourers; and sixthly, because, by abolishing the freedom of contract between the landlord and the tenant, and by making the Court and the Revenue officer the referee and arbiter in all matters of zemindari management and raiyati action, it will neutralise the vital principle of self-reliance in the agricultural population and destroy its backbone, hamper the free operation of economic laws, and stereotyped the patriarchal phase of Government with the aggravating evil of litigation at almost every step. These objections, which I took when the Bill was introduced last year, have not, I am sorry to say, been removed by the alterations made by the Select Committee.

In specifying my objections to the Bill I do not propose to discuss it chapter by chapter or to traverse all its details. I propose to confine myself to the leading principles of the Bill and a few principal details.

TENURE-HOLDERS.

In addition to the present class of persons who are recognised as tenure-holders, two other classes have been introduced, namely, (1) occupancy-raiyats who may sub-let more than half their holdings (section 37), and (2) raiyats, the area of whose holdings may exceed 100 standard bighas, the whole or part of which is sub-let; in this case the tenant will be presumed to be a tenure-holder unless the contrary is shown (section 5, sub-section 5). In the case of the first-mentioned person, who is called a converted tenure-holder, all the incidents of the status of a tenure-holder will hold good except his liability to enhancement of rent. A tenant of the last-mentioned class will be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a tenure-holder. With regard to the first, I cannot understand with what justice is an occupancy-raiyat exempted from his obligations under the Bill as to pre-emption and distraint, and the zemindar in so far placed in a worse position, because the occupancy-raiyat chooses to sub-let more than half his holding. The conversion of an occupancy-raiyat of a holding, the area of which exceeds 100 bighas, into a tenure-holder, is, in my opinion, still more arbitrary. The status of a tenure-holder carries certain privileges, which the occupancy-raiyat does not possess, and for which, generally, a valuable consideration is paid to the zemindar. For instance, a tenure is not, unfrequently, a permanent holding, heritable and transferable according to conditions of contract, and, under the present Bill, will enjoy favoured rates of rent and will be exempt from the rules of pre-emption and distraint. Surely, it cannot be contended that the conversion of the hundred-bigha jotedar into a tenure-holder under an effect of the Legislature is consistent with the ancient or existing land-law of the country. In so far, it is a direct encroachment upon the rights of the proprietary class.

Then as to enhancement of rent of tenure-holders, Section 8 of Regulation 5 of 1812 contained the following rule as to the rate at which auction-purchasers might collect:—"In the case of a dependent taluqdar, if the rent of the lands be computed according to the rates payable by raiyats or cultivators for land of a similar quality and description, a deduction shall be allowed from the gross rent in the adjustment of the jama of such dependent taluq at the rate of 10 per cent., for the taluqdar's profit or income, over and above a reasonable allowance for charges of collection according to the extent of the taluq." This section was repealed by Act 10 of 1859, which, however, contains no rule as to the grounds or limits of enhancement of the rent of tenure-holders and under-tenure-holders. But under case-law the rent may be enhanced up to the limit of the prevailing rate payable by the holders of similar tenures in the neighbourhood, or where no such prevailing rate is easily ascertainable, up to such a limit as shall not exceed 10 per centum of the collections after deducting the expenses of collection (vide Field's "Digest"). This case-law has been embodied in the present Bill, but with wide variations. For instance "customary rate" has been substituted for "prevailing rate," though the former is less easily ascertainable than the latter. Under the case-law the margin left to the tenure-holder as profit was not to exceed 10 per cent. of the collections, but under the Bill it is to be not less than 10 per cent. of the balance which may remain after deducting, not from the collections, which I take to be actual collections, but from the gross rents, not only the expenses but also "risks of collection." I may observe, I am not aware of any revenue-law under which an allowance is made for "risks of collection." Even the zemindars are not allowed any percentage for sums irrecoverable from raiyats on account of the Public Works and Road Cesses, though the liability is not their own, and though they collect the money for Government without any remuneration. It will be thus seen in what advantageous position is the tenure-holder placed under the present Bill, compared with his position under the existing law. But this is not all. Under the existing law the rent of a tenure-holder is liable to be enhanced to any reasonable amount, but under the Bill the enhanced rent is not to be more than double the previous rent; under the existing law the enhanced rent is to be paid at once, but under the Bill the Court may direct that the enhancement shall be gradual and payable in five years; under the existing law there is no limit of period as to enhancement of rent, but under the Bill the period is limited to ten years. I allude to the last three provisions to show that while so little consideration has been shown to the zemindar, who is the proprietor of the land, and who is responsible for Government revenue under the stern sun-set law, so much tenderness has been shown to the tenure-holder who is generally looked upon as an idle factor. Surely this is not the way to discourage sub-letting.

RAIYATS AT FIXED RATES.

For the first time a legal presumption was introduced by Act 10 of 1859 to the effect that if the rent of a raiyat had not been changed for a period of twenty years before the commencement of a suit, it shall be presumed that the land has been held at that rent from the date of the Permanent Settlement. Whatever the necessity of such a provision at the time of passing Act 10 of 1859, that necessity, it cannot be denied, no longer exists. The raiyats have advanced in intelligence and independence, and the practice of granting printed rent-receipts has become common in many parts of the country. They do not, therefore, now stand in need of the same measure of protection against enhancement which was considered necessary in 1859. On the contrary, the effect of this provision has been disastrous to the zemindar. The Hon. Mr. Reynolds drew attention to this point in his memorandum on the Bill of the Rent Commission. He quoted several opinions showing that the law has thrown "an unfair burden of proof upon the zemindar," and that "it bears very hardly upon auction-purchasers who are often unable to get possession of the zemindari papers of their predecessor." This, Mr. Reynolds observes, is forcibly represented by the Collector of Purnia, who believes that "there is hardly an estate in the whole of Bengal in which the value of the proprietary right has not suffered from this presumption." Without entirely abolishing the presumption Mr. Reynolds recommended that its operation should be confined to cases in which uniform payment could be proved for twenty years before the period when the presumption was first introduced into the law. He proposed a further concession in favour of auction-purchasers by providing that the presumption shall not be pleaded against them. In making these recommendations Mr. Reynolds remarked, "In determining the principle upon which the Legislature should act it would seem that the main point to be considered is the practical effect of the presumption which was introduced into the Act of 1859." Has this presumption generally operated to defeat an unjust claim on the part of the landlord, or to maintain the tenant in a status to which he was not rightfully entitled? It is believed that to this question there can be only one answer. In the great majority of the cases in which the presumption has been successfully pleaded, it has had the effect of conferring upon tenants, whose holdings really originated subsequently to 1793, a privilege which was intended to be confined to those who had held from the date of the Permanent Settlement. If this is really the case, it does not seem inequitable that the rule should be modified in the manner which has now been suggested.

Mr. Reynolds, I am sorry to say, has since changed his opinion, but the validity and justice of his opinion remain all the same. Relying upon it, I moved the amendment of the law to the effect originally proposed by Mr. Reynolds, but neither my motion nor a very much modified proposal to allow the twenty years to count from before the date of the passing of the present Bill was accepted by the majority of the Committee. The Bill thus describes the incidents of holding at fixed rates:—

Section 23.—A raiyat holding at a fixed rent or rate of rent—

(a) shall be subject to the same provisions with respect to the transfer of, and succession to, his holding as a tenure-holder, and
(b) shall not be ejected by his landlord except on the ground that he has broken a condition consistent with this Act, and on breach of which he is, under the terms of contract between him and his landlord, liable to be ejected.

Coupling this provision with the twenty years' presumption referred to, I cannot resist the conviction that it will tempt raiyats, whether entitled to the presumption or not, to declare themselves to be raiyats at fixed rates, and thus defraud the zemindar of his just rights, who, if he be strong enough to assert them, must go through an expensive and harassing process of litigation to do so.

The intention of the Legislature in introducing this law of presumption was to protect raiyats holding from the date of the Permanent Settlement from arbitrary enhancement of rent by unscrupulous zemindars, but the continuance of this provision will, I fear, have the effect of converting by a side wind every occupancy raiyat into a mukarrariddar or permanent tenure-holder. The consequence of this provision to good and bad zemindars is also striking. Where a zemindar from a dislike of litigation, forbearance or sympathy, has not enhanced the rent of a raiyat for more than twenty years, the raiyat who has been careful enough to preserve his rent receipts, will easily prove his case, while a zemindar, who has shown no such consideration or leniency, who has not scrupled to trouble and harass the raiyat with periodic enhancement, will necessarily have a decided advantage. The result will be that the good zemindar will suffer and the bad zemindar will gain.

OCCUPANCY RAIYATS.

The occupancy raiyat of the modern time is notoriously a creature of Act 10 of 1859, but I do not wish to revive the controversy on the subject. The twelve years' rule has been in existence for more than a quarter of a century, and it cannot be far or just to disturb it now. The only fault found with the present law on the subject is that if a zemindar were so disposed he could defeat the growth of the occupancy right by shifting the raiyat from field to field. This practice, it is admitted, is not known in Bengal. But the Secretary of State, whilst strongly expressing himself in favour of the present twelve-years' rule of continuous possession, has recommended the following modification. He would provide that "every resident raiyat shall have a right of occupancy in the land which he occupies and pays rent for, and that a resident raiyat shall be one who, or whose ancestor, has occupied any land in the village or estate for twelve years." I do not at all subscribe to the equitableness of this provision. I do not think that it is fair or just that a squatter, because allowed to hold land in one part of an estate for twelve years, should, ipso facto, be entitled to hold land in all other parts of the estate as an occupancy or privileged raiyat. If in any part of the country the zemindar has sought to nullify the growth of occupancy right by shifting the raiyat from one plot of land to another, he has, it cannot be denied, acted within the law, and it would be as unreasonable to suppose that he has acted wrongly as to suppose that a tradesman is wrong in suing his debtor before the time, which would, under the law of limitation, bar his claim. As for preventing shifting, if it should be deemed absolutely necessary, I would have preferred to punish such an act by imposing a heavy penalty. But the Committee ruled, that the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India having finally decided the question, they were not competent to re-open it, but I cannot help remarking that the Committee have gone further than the area covered by the Secretary of State's decision. The original Bill contained the following provisions regarding the acquisition of the status of a settled raiyat:—

Section 45.—Every person who, for a period of twelve years, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, has continuously held, as a raiyat land situate in any village or estate, shall, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, and though the land so held by him at different times during that period may have been different, be deemed to become, on the expiration of that period, a settled raiyat of that village or estate.

Again:

Section 47.—Every settled raiyat of a village or estate holding after the second day of March, 1883, as a raiyat any raiyat land comprised in that village or estate shall, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, be deemed to acquire or have acquired in that land a right of occupancy under the law for the time being in force.

At the instance of the Bengal Government the Committee have greatly extended the theory of the settled raiyat and created a new legal presumption in his favour. Thus:

Section 25.—(1) Every settled raiyat of a village or estate shall have a right of occupancy in all land held by him as a raiyat in that village or estate;

(2) Every person who, being a settled raiyat of a village or estate, held land as a raiyat in that village or estate at any time between the second day of March, 1883, and the commencement of this act, shall be deemed to have acquired a right of occupancy in that land under the law then in force.

Section 26.—(1) Every person who, for a period of twelve years, whether wholly or partly before or after the commencement of this Act, has continuously held as a raiyat land situate in any village or estate, whether under a lease or otherwise, shall be deemed to have become, on the expiration of that period, a settled raiyat of that village or estate.

(2) If, in any proceeding under this Act, it is proved or admitted that a person hold land as a raiyat, it shall, as between him and the landlord under whom he holds the land, be presumed for the purposes of this section until the contrary is proved or admitted, that he has for twelve years held the land or some part of it as a raiyat.

(3) A person shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to have held land continuously in a village or estate, notwithstanding that the particular land held by him has been different at different times.

(4) A person shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to have held as a raiyat any land held as a raiyat by a person whose heir by him is.

(5) Land held by two or more co-sharers, as a raiyat holding shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to have been held as a raiyat by each such co-sharer.

(6) A person shall continue to be a settled raiyat of a village or estate as long as he holds any land as a raiyat in that village or estate and for one year thereafter.

(7) If a raiyat recovers possession of land under Section 96, he shall be deemed to have continued to be a settled raiyat, notwithstanding his having been out of possession for more than a year.

These provisions, I submit, are wholly outside the decision of the Secretary of State. That authority would in no case reduce the period of occupation from twelve years is provided in Section 25, Sub-section 2, nor did he recommend any legal presumption that every raiyat shall be considered a settled raiyat with right of occupancy, unless proved to the contrary. The Secretary of State, it would be observed, would recognise a "resident raiyat" as an occupancy raiyat, but the provisions quoted above do not recognise residence as a condition of accrual of occupancy-right. In the second place, the Secretary of State does not refer to possession by two or more co-sharers as a proof of occupancy-right derived by each such co-sharer. In the third place, he does not say that, even if a settled raiyat leaves his holding and pays no rent, he shall be considered a settled raiyat "for one year thereafter." On the contrary, he declares payment of rent as an inalienable condition of the right. And lastly, the Secretary of State nowhere says that if a raiyat once abandons a holding and afterwards recovers possession by payment of compensation, he shall be deemed to have continued to be a settled raiyat, notwithstanding his being out of possession for more than a year. All these proposals, I repeat, are outside the sanction of the Secretary of State and, as a matter of course, are so many encroachments upon the proprietary rights of the zemindars.

It is observable that while a person holding land as a raiyat shall not be prevented from acquiring an occupancy right in the land by reason that he is jointly interested in the land as proprietor or tenure-holder, and a person, though an ijarar or farmer, shall not lose his right of occupancy in any land which he may subsequently hold in farm, it is declared that if the landlord acquires an occupancy holding, the occupancy right shall cease to exist (Section 28). On what principle is this right denied to the landlord and conceded to the tenure holder, who may be a permanent holder, and to the farmer, is not clear to me. It does seem strange and incomprehensible that the zemindar alone shall not be allowed to enjoy the ordinary rights of a purchaser, simply because he happens to be a zemindar.

On this point I venture to draw attention to the following remarks of Mr. H. L. Dampier, Senior Member of the Board of Revenue, deservedly regarded as a high fiscal authority in Bengal. He says: "It will be open to the whole world, with one exception only, to acquire by purchase or otherwise and to continue to hold certain rights described occupancy rights in a given piece of land. Such rights may be acquired and held by distant non-agricultural capitalists; by the zemindars of estates adjoining that within which the land lies; by the zemindars, resident or absentee, of the estate itself, if the land is included in a tenure; by any non-resident holders of tenures, whether in the estate itself or in any other estate; by the very holders of tenures above the lowest under tenure which includes the land. The one person who is debarred from holding this right, even if he acquires it by purchase from the person in whom it last vested, is 'the landlord,' that is, by the definition the 'person or number of persons immediately under whom a tenant holds'; or, according to the proposal made by the Lieutenant Governor towards the end of paragraph 14, the 'proprietor or permanent tenure holder immediately under whom the raiyat holds.'" The justice of these remarks is so evident that I need say nothing by way of comment.

TRANSFER OF OCCUPANCY HOLDING AND PRE-EMPTION.

The question of transferability of the occupancy holding has been discussed threadbare. I will not therefore repeat the arguments against it, which are already so well known. Suffice it to say that the measure will be equally injurious both to the zemindars and the raiyats; the former will have a valuable right unjustly taken away from them and be exposed to the intrusion of hostile persons into their estates, and the latter, under their peculiar circumstances, will, at no distant time, be reduced to the status of day-labourers by being sold out of their holdings, on which they depend for their subsistence. Neither under the Permanent Settlement Regulations nor under Act 10 of 1859 is an occupancy holding transferable. When the question of the transferability of the occupancy holding was first proposed by the Government of Bengal, the Government of India expressed its disapproval of it. The British Indian Association was invited to express its opinion on the subject, and it agreed to the legalisation of the sale of the occupancy holding in satisfaction of degree for rent, and suggested that, where a zemindar might adopt this remedy, an occupancy holding once so sold should be declared to have become a transferable tenure. The Lieutenant Governor of the day practically adopted the suggestion. In a letter to the Government of India, dated Feb. 2, 1878, Mr. Secretary Reynolds wrote:—

"The Lieutenant Governor has with some reluctance withdrawn the proposal that the occupancy right shall be generally transferable by private sale or other agreement. The weight of opinion is in favour of this proposal, as will be seen by a reference to the letter of the Board of Revenue, and His Honour is satisfied that such transfers would not have the bad effect which has been sometimes apprehended, and that they would not tend to transfer the land to classes whose ownership it might not be thought desirable to encourage. He believes that such a right of transfer would be much to the benefit of landholder and raiyat. It appears, however, that the landlord class are strongly opposed to the concession of any general right of transfer, and the Governor General in Council has expressed serious doubts as to the expediency of including such a provision in the Bill. The Bill, therefore, only proposes to recognise sales of occupancy tenures at the request of the landlord in execution of decrees of Court, and to this the Lieutenant Governor believes that no objection will be made."

The Bengal Government has since changed its opinion on the subject, and the concession made by the zemindars in 1878 necessarily goes for nothing. In the present Bill the transferability of the occupancy holding is made general and absolute, subject to a rule of pre-emption. There is nothing in the Bill to prevent greedy land-jobbers or speculators from trafficking in land at the expense of the zemindars. As to right of pre-emption accorded to the zemindar, it will, I am afraid, prove in practice more a shadow than a substance. In the first place, the zemindar will have to pay a consideration for land of which he is the proprietor, and which was never before transferable under the law. He will then have to run a competition with other bidders for the purchase of the land, and, if he cannot come to an agreement with the raiyat about the price, he must go through the expensive process of a reference to the Court for arbitrement, and must be prepared to pay the price adjudged by the Court. If the raiyats of a zemindar in any considerable number become recusant and threaten him with the sale of their holdings, it will be difficult for him to keep out hostile people from the holdings unless he has a long purse to buy them up. Practically, therefore, this recognition of the transferability of the occupancy holding may be worked by evil-disposed raiyats to the utter ruin of the zemindar. It is noteworthy that while the zemindar will have to go through the expensive process of obtaining the Court's decision as to price, the raiyat shall not be bound by that decision, for Section 32, Sub-section 4, says that when the zemindar tenders a price to the raiyat, "the raiyat shall either abstain from selling the land or sell it to the landlord at that price." So the landlord will be entirely at the mercy of the raiyat.

Shadowy as the right of pre-emption will practically be, the amended Bill contrives to keep out of the purview of this provision all substantial raiyats, for under it the rule of pre-emption will not apply to tenure holders, and all occupancy raiyats who may sub-let more than half their holdings, or who may keep holdings of more than hundred bighas in size part of which is sub-let, are, ipso facto, converted into tenure holders.

ENHANCEMENT OF RENT.

I have already alluded to the question of the enhancement of the rent of tenure holders, who are placed at a considerable advantage to the detriment of the zemindar, a position which they had never before enjoyed under the Permanent Settlement Regulation or under Act 10 of 1859. With regard to the enhancement of the rent of occupancy raiyats I wish to point out that at present the enhancement law has come to a dead-lock, and that one of the chief objects of fresh legislation is admitted to be to afford relief to the zemindars in this matter; but I am of opinion that the alterations made by the committee will tend more to maintain the status quo than to secure justice to the landlord. In the first place under the existing law there is a perfect freedom of contract between the landlord and the tenant regarding enhancement of rent outside the Court, but under the Bill this freedom is entirely taken away, and it is provided that where the arrangement may be voluntary, the enhancement shall not exceed more than four annas in the rupee, that is to say, not more than two annas for a term of at least seven years, and if more than two annas, but not more than four annas in the rupee, for a term of at least fifteen years. Thus a serious disability is imposed upon the landlord in fixing rent outside the Court. When enhancement of rent is sought by suit, the grounds on which the enhancement may be applied for are thus set forth:—

(a) That the rate of rent paid by the raiyat is below the prevailing rate payable by occupancy raiyats for land of a similar description and with similar advantages in the vicinity.

(b) That there has been a rise in the average prices of staple food crops in the locality or at the usual markets.

(c) That the productive powers of the land held by the raiyat have been increased by an improvement effected by, or at the expense of, the landlord.

(d) That the productive powers of the land held by the raiyat have been increased by fluvial action.

I am not prepared to say that the revised grounds will materially help the solution of the problem of enhancement. The first ground, "prevailing rate" is not made clear, and the same doubts and uncertainties that now hang round it remain unremoved. An attempt was made to explain it, but it was opposed by the Bengal Government. The second ground, will, I am afraid, prove fictitious, for knowing as the Committee do, how unreliable are the price-lists prepared by Government officers, they cannot deny that it will be difficult to obtain reliable data for striking average prices, particularly, "in the locality or at the usual markets"—who is to fix the usual markets? The third ground will be made practically inoperative by the conditions which follow. As for the fourth ground, even if it be fairly worked, its application will be exceptional.

The rules providing for enhancement inquiries by the Revenue officer will practically leave the whole matter to the discretion of the Revenue officer. For instance, in ascertaining the prevailing rate, the Revenue officer is directed to make a local inquiry, but he is not told on what principle he is to find the prevailing rate, and the result will be diversity of practice under divers officers. In working out enhancement on the ground of rise in prices it is provided that:—

(a) The Court shall have regard to the lists of prices periodically published under the authority of the Local Government, and shall compare the average prices during the quinquennial period immediately preceding the institution of the suit with the average price during such other quinquennial period as it may appear equitable and practicable to take for comparison.

(b) The Court shall not enhance the rent so that the enhanced rent exceeds the previous rent by more than four annas in the rupee.

(c) Subject as aforesaid, and subject also to Section 48, the enhanced rent shall bear to the previous rent the same proportion as the average prices during the last quinquennial period bear to the average prices during the previous quinquennial period taken for purposes of comparison.

In carrying out the above provisions much will depend upon the price lists, and, as I have already stated, those that are published in the Calcutta Gazette by Government are wholly unreliable. They are collected by the police, who cannot be expected to be over scrupulous. They are not tested by any responsible agency, not to say that the wholesale and retail prices being generally mixed up, no fair average can be based upon them. Unless special care be taken to prepare the lists—and this remark applies to future lists—they cannot and ought not to be accepted by courts of justice as good and valid evidence. The question still recurs—how will the lists of past prices be prepared?

It will be observed that the value of all crops must be reduced to the price of paddy in Bengal, and that of Indian corn, barley, and wheat in Behar. The specification of the staple food crops is left to the discretion of the Local Government, which may from time to time vary them. No allowance is made for valuable crops, such as tobacco, sugarcane, mulberry, potato, jute, &c. This rule is evidently founded on the principle of the Tithes Commutation Act of the United Kingdom. There is, however, I venture to submit, no fair analogy between tithes in England and rents in Bengal; for the former represented a fixed share or a tenth part of the crop, while the latter, though originally based on a share of the produce, have now greatly receded from the whole standard. An English tithe is not susceptible of enhancement, whereas the Bengal money-rent is legally declared to be liable to enhancement. The question, therefore, arises whether the principle, which is held equitable in the commutation of tithes, would be fair and equitable in the enhancement of a money rent. As far as I can judge, the difficulties in carrying out the principle will by no means be less than what they are under the existing law. As for enhancement on the ground of landlord's improvement, it is so much handicapped by restrictive conditions, that it will, I fear, prove an economic anomaly. After enumerating the circumstances which the Court should take into consideration in ordering enhancement on this ground, Section 46 says that the Court shall consider the ability of the land to bear a higher rent. With such an uncertainty hanging over him, will any proprietor with two grains of common sense to rub against one another undertake any improvement? If he cannot be sure of any return for his money, naturally, he won't lay out money. There are two other points connected with this subject. It was settled in previous correspondence between the Government of Bengal and the British Indian Association that enhancement of rent in any case should not be more than double the present rent, and that every enhancement of rent shall have a currency of ten years. These rules were embodied in the original draft Bill, but, at the instance of the present Bengal Government, both the rules have been altered. It is now declared that, when enhancement is sought on the ground of prevailing rate, the rent shall not exceed the previous rent by more than eight annas in the rupee or 50 per cent., and that, when it is sought on the ground of rise in prices, the enhanced rent shall not exceed the previous rent by more than four annas in the rupee, or 25 per cent., and that every enhancement shall have a currency of fifteen years. It would be thus seen that there is no finality in the decision of Government, and that the more is conceded by the zemindars the more is demanded from them.

It is observable that where the enhancement is sought on the ground the present rent being below the "prevailing rate," common sense suggests that the rent should be raised to the limit of the "prevailing rate"—it is not clear why a maximum limit of 50 per cent. should be fixed in such a case. Again, where the enhancement is sought on the ground of rise in prices, and the increase is to be given according to the rule of proportion, it is not equitable that there should be again a maximum limit of 25 per cent.

COMMUTATION OF PRODUCE RENTS INTO MONEY PAYMENTS.

This part of the Bill affects Behar more than Bengal, and, as my honourable colleague, His Highness the Maharaja of Darbhanga, will doubtless comment upon it, I need not say much upon it. I may, however, observe that the principle upon which the commutation is directed to be made, namely (a) the average money rent payable by occupancy raiyats for land of a similar description and with similar advantages in the vicinity, and (b) the average value of the rent actually received by the landlord during the preceding ten years, will tend to lower the present rents. I should add that when the Bill was introduced, a distinct assurance was given that the present rents will not be lowered.

NON-OCCUPANCY RAIYATS.

Both under the Permanent Settlement Regulations and Act 10 of 1859, it was left entirely to the discretion of the landlord to deal with the non-occupancy raiyat, who is none other than the tenant-at-will. But the relations between the landlord and non-occupancy raiyat are materially altered by this Bill. Nothing will prevent the non-occupancy raiyat from acquiring the occupancy right, and, as already observed, he will get the benefit of the legal presumption of a settled raiyat, if he can manage to scatter a few seeds once upon a plot of ground; then, when he will be first let in he will be liable to pay such rent as may be agreed on between himself and his landlord, but no enhancement will be allowed except by registered agreement, and even when an agreement may be tendered by the landlord to the raiyat, the latter may refuse it, and the former will then be driven to the necessity of instituting a suit to eject him. The Court shall then determine what rent is fair and equitable for the holding, and if the raiyat agrees to pay the rent so determined, the landlord under order of Court, shall be bound to give him a lease for five years, and if before the termination of the lease the raiyat shall have acquired a right of occupancy, he will be entitled to all the rights and privileges of an occupancy raiyat. The non-occupancy raiyat will thus be one in name; the landlord's present right to deal with him at his discretion is entirely taken away, while the freedom of contract is disallowed and the landlord is compelled to give a judicial lease for five years. I should observe that in consequence of the introduction of the judicial lease, the original provisions regarding compensation for disturbance have been omitted. These provisions embodied a new-fangled idea, not known in this country, and would, if retained, have proved a new apple of discord. But the substitution of the judicial lease for five years involves a great injustice to the landlord, who is tied hand and foot by the Court in a matter in which he has always enjoyed perfect independence of action. The raiyat, in whose favour the judicial lease is ordered, may be most obstreperous and turbulent, may by his bad advice be tainting the whole flock around him, and may thus prove most mischievous; not to say that the landlord, if he settles the land with another raiyat, may get better rent, and perhaps better security for payment of rent. But the judicial lease will give him no such option or advantage. I cannot help thinking that the provisions relating to non-occupancy raiyats involved a further invasion of the proprietary rights of the landlord, and that in favour of a class of tenants who are not attached to the soil, and have, therefore, no manner of moral claim upon the consideration of the landlord.

SUB-LETTING AND SUB-RAIYATS.

One principal defect of the Bill, as introduced, was that, while it seriously curtailed the rights and privileges of the zemindar, it did practically little for the good of the bona fide cultivator, whose labour constituted the wealth of the country, and fed a whole host of proprietors and sub-proprietors, including the Government, as the representative of the public. The position of the middleman had been greatly strengthened, while the sub-raiyats, usually the actual cultivators of the soil, were left to the tender mercies of the middlemen. The invidiousness of this condition was fully realised by the committee, and they proposed various devices for bettering the position of the sub-raiyats. Accordingly, restrictions have been proposed in the Bill on sub-letting, but I doubt whether these provisions will work. In the first place, if an occupancy ryot sublets more than half his holding, he shall on registration of the same be converted into a tenure holder. Considering the decidedly advantageous position of the tenure holder, this will operate as a premium on sub-letting instead of as a repressive measure. In the second place, if an occupancy raiyat sublets, his sub-lease shall not be valid for a term exceeding seven years, and this provision will have a retrospective effect. Surely this will be no loss to the sub-lessor, for the shorter the lease, the greater his gain. In the third place, the landlord of a sub-raiyat shall not, in the case of a registered lease, be entitled to recover rent more than 50 per cent. of what he himself pays, and in any other case not more than 25 per cent. I do not understand how this rule will work, where there is a long chain of middlemen, for instance in Backergunge, where there are thirteen grades of middlemen. Will each middleman have the right to claim from its sub-raiyat 50 per cent. in excess of what he pays to his own landlord? What would then be the position of the last link in the chain—of the man who immediately cultivates? And in the fourth place, a sub-raiyat shall not be liable to be ejected by the landlord except at the end of an agricultural year and after a written notice to quit, to be served not less than six months before the expiration of that year. My own impression is that there will be frequent disputes between the superior raiyat and the sub-raiyat as to whether the former has sub-let more than half his holding, and the result will be either silent suffering on the part of the sub-raiyat or frequent litigation. Then, as far as I can judge, the limitation of rent under Section 62 will apply only in such cases in which a superior raiyat may sub-let more than half his holding; he will, therefore, studiously keep himself under this limit and thus avoid the clutches of the law. Furthermore, it will be nobody's interest to bring to Court the superior raiyat contravening the law, for no penalty attaches to breach of law. The superior raiyat will make it a point not to let his land to any raiyat who will not accept his own terms, and when a sub-raiyat accepts those terms, he will not seek the benefit of the law; another raiyat, a third party, may wish to get the land on the terms prescribed by law, but he will have no locus standi, if he be not admitted by the superior raiyat. So that the new provisions restricting sub-letting will either prove a dead letter or give rise to endless litigation.

IMPROVEMENTS.

The chapter on improvements introduces an alteration in the relations between the landlord and tenant consistent with neither the existing law nor custom. At present improvements are generally made by the landlords, and where they are made by tenants, they are effected with the consent and sanction of the landlord, but this chapter declares that (1) where a raiyat holds at a fixed rent, his landlord shall not be entitled to prevent him from making any improvement in respect of his holding, (2) where a raiyat has an occupancy right he shall have the prior right to make the improvement unless it affects another holding or other holdings under the same landlord, and (3) where a non-occupancy raiyat desires that a certain improvement should be made in his holding, he shall serve a notice on the landlord calling upon him to make the improvement within a reasonable time, and if the landlord is unable or neglects to comply with his request, he may make the improvement himself. The whole theory of these provisions ignores the proprietary right of the landlord, and assigns to the collector the task of deciding as to who has the right to make improvements. If public policy requires that the raiyat should be encouraged to make improvements, surely the first option ought to be given to the landlord to effect them. From an economic point of view, the landlord, having larger capital, is in a better position to carry out improvements, but no facilities are offered to him for this purpose. Even a return in the shape of increased rent is not assured to him for his outlay of capital on improvements, for it will be in the discretion of the Court not to allow an enhancement, if the Court thinks that the land cannot bear enhanced rent. The inevitable result of these rules, I am afraid, will be to throw back all improvements. The soundness of the policy, which expects improvements from those who have not the means to make them, and to deter those who can, is unintelligible to me. I suggested that facilities should be given to the landlord to acquire land for purposes of agricultural experiments, model farms, &c., but my proposals were not accepted. I was referred to an amendment of the Land Acquisition Act.

MANAGEMENT OF JOINT ESTATES.

The Bill gives power to the district judge, on the application of the collector or of any person interested, even a squatter, to deprive co-owners of an estate or tenancy of the right of management thereof, if it appears to him that there has ensued or is likely to ensue (a) inconvenience to the public, or (b) injury to private rights. I shall take the last point first. I at once admit that hardships and harassment may be caused to raiyats in consequence of disputes among co-owners and the absence of a common manager, but this point has been met by the Committee in the provisions made for deposit of rent. Section 73, Clause c, says that a tenant may deposit rent when the rent is payable to sharers jointly, and the tenant is unable to obtain the joint receipt of these co-sharers for the money, when no person has been empowered to receive rent in their behalf. Besides the co-sharers cannot apply for distraint or sue for enhanced rent unless they make the application or institute the suit jointly or through a common manager. It will be thus seen that the Bill effectually removes all reasonable complainants of raiyats who are tenants of joint estates. As for inconvenience to the public from the joint management of estates, I confess, I do not clearly understand it. If, for instance, the co-parceners default in the payment of revenue, their estates are liable to sale; if they transgress law or fail to comply with public requisitions, their responsibility is easily traceable under the operation of the Bengal Registration Act, and they are liable to punishment. It is not therefore clear why they should be deprived of the management of their own property because the collector or judge thinks that it causes "inconvenience to the public." I submit it would be contrary to sound public policy to remove all incentives to exertion and improvement from landed proprietors and capitalists by delegating the management of their property to others on pleas which have no existence in fact.

RECORD OF RIGHTS, SETTLEMENT OF RENTS, TABLES OF RATES AND RECORD OF PROPRIETORS' PRIVATE LANDS.

The chapters relating to these subjects are doubtless in accordance with the modern ideas of land administration in periodically settled India, but as far as Bengal is concerned, the rights and interest of different parties are generally well defined, and where there might be disputes between landlords and tenants in matters dealt with in these chapters, common sense would suggest that the application of the law should be left to the self-interest of the parties concerned. But the essence of these chapters is that while liberty is accorded to both landlord and tenant to move the machinery provided in them, the Local Government is empowered to bring of its own motion the machinery into action. The application of the provisions contained in these chapters will, I fear, plunge the country into a flood of litigation, stir up the worst passions of both the landlord and the tenant, open a wide door to perjury and forgery, give rise to endless corruption among the subordinate amlah, and throw the agricultural population into a sea of trouble, expense, and loss. This was the lesson taught by the Revenue Survey. Of course, when the parties will themselves apply for the enforcement of the provisions under notice, it will be their own look out; but I do not see any good or valid reason why the Government should, without any application from the parties, step in and inflict upon the country the evils pointed out above. The work contemplated cannot, I fear, be accomplished in two or three generations to come, and for all this time will run the festering sore indicated above. If the record of rights were confined to those cases in which auction purchasers at revenue or summary sales may not receive jamabandi papers for their guidance, if the settlement of rents were made applicable to those cases in which the raiyats might combine and withhold payment of rent, and agrarian outrages might take place, and if the record of proprietor's private lands were limited to those cases in which the proprietor himself made the application, in all these cases, on the application of parties, it would be reasonable and fair; but to give the wide scope which has been given in these chapters by vesting the Government with unlimited discretion is not only warranted by the necessities of the case, but will be followed by evils which will be highly detrimental to the best interests, peace, and happiness of the agricultural population. As regards tables of rates, the inquiries which have been made on the subject have made it clear that in most parts of the country they are not practicable, that there are so many variations in rates of rent, sometimes one hundred and odd in a village, owing to various causes, historical, personal, economical, and social, that it is hopeless to discover any typical or uniform rate, or what was formerly called Pargana rate in any given area. And yet power is taken by the Local Government to order preparation of tables of rates for special areas and to charge landlords and tenants with the cost of this work, though they may not in the least benefit by it. In the same way the expenses which may be incurred by enforcing the provisions relating to record-of-rights and settlement of rents, will be cast upon the landlords and tenants, though no application had been made by them. Thus a new cess will be imposed upon the land for purposes of proceedings which may do more harm than good to the landed classes.

As regards the record of proprietors' private lands which go by the name of khamar, the definition given is wholly opposed to what is contained in the Permanent Settlement Regulations and excludes all waste lands. Section 138 declares:—

Section 138.—(1) The Revenue Officer shall record as a proprietor's private land—

- (a) land which is proved to have been cultivated as khamar, zeraat, sir, nij, nij-jot, or kamut by the proprietor himself with his own stock, or by his own servants, or by hired labour for twelve continuous years immediately before the passing of this Act, and

- (b) cultivated land which is recognised by village custom as proprietor's khamar, zeraat, sir, nij, nij-jot, or kamut.

(2) In determining whether any other land ought to be recorded as a proprietor's private land the officer shall have regard to local custom and to the question whether the land was before the second day of March, 1883, specifically let as proprietor's private land, but shall presume that land is not a proprietor's private land until the contrary is shown.

(3) If any question arises in a Civil Court as to whether land is or is not a proprietor's private land the Court shall have regard to the rules laid down in this section for the guidance of Revenue-officers.

Section 37 of Regulation VIII of 1793 thus describes khamar lands:—

Section 37, Regulation 8 of 1793.—The above exception (exclusion of lakhiraj lands from the general assessment), however, is not meant to include the Malikanah lands in Behar, or the nankar, khamar, nij-jot, and other private lands of the zemindars and independent talukdars, or other actual proprietors of land in Bengal and Medinipur, &c.

It will be seen by comparing the language of the Regulation with that of the Bill that no such condition as cultivation for twelve continuous years was attached to the zemindar's khamar lands under the old law. As for waste lands, it is notorious that they were given to the zemindar to enable him to recoup the loss which inevitably fell upon him under the crushing assessment of the Permanent Settlement.

DISTRAINT.

The law of distraint is generally regarded as an important and potential auxiliary in realising rent. In Behar, I understand, it is largely resorted to. The essence of the present law of distraint is, that the process is a sharp and quick remedy, and that the whole responsibility rests upon the landlord who is liable to heavy penalties in case of abuse of power. Under the Bill distraint is made a process of Court; it is clogged with various restrictions, and by the time the order may be executed the crops may be off the field. The procedure is so much elaborated that it will no longer prove the prompt remedy, which the distraint law ought to be, while the expense and harassment will be such as to compel the landlord to forego it altogether. I am inclined to think that the law of distraint, as provided in the Bill, will remain a dead-letter, and thus the only facility which the landlord possesses at present for realising his rent quickly, will be taken away from him.

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE.

I need not repeat that the Government has over and over promised to simplify the procedure for recovery of rent. It has recognised its obligation in this respect from the time of the Permanent Settlement to this day. One of the primary objects of the present Bill from its first inception has avowedly been the simplification of the procedure for the realisation of rent, and the committee in deliberating upon the subject fully admitted it, but the practical result of their deliberations, I am constrained to say, is disappointing. I submitted three schemes on the subject: (1) The Patni Procedure. (2) The Certificate Procedure now applicable to Government and Waris Estates, and (3) a modification of the present procedure. I set out below the details of the third scheme.

The zemindar or rent receiver in instituting a suit for arrear of rent should make out a prima facie case by filing necessary papers, such as jama-wasil-baki papers and counterfoils of receipts and giving necessary evidence.

The Court should then issue summons. In order to obviate the usual complaint of non-service of summons, I would suggest a provision to the following effect:—

"The summons shall be ordinarily served personally or by a registered postal cover. If for any reason the summons cannot be served personally on the defendant, it shall be affixed at his usual place of residence in the village in which the land is situate, or within five miles thereof. The notice may be served by affixing it at the mal kachari of such land or on the land for which the arrear is due or other conspicuous place thereon, or at the village chauki or chowpal, or at some other conspicuous place in the village in which the land is situate. An attestation of some two respectable residents of the village, or rural sub registrar, as of service should be taken from the village chaukidar village mandal, or the case may be."

In order to prevent abuse, at least two of the above mentioned processes should be observed in every case; and with this safeguard the plea of nonservice of summons should not be accepted by the Court as a good ground for reopening or retrying a case which has been decided ex parte.

The summons should contain a notice that unless the defendant appears within one week from date of service, the Court shall pass a decree for the amount claimed and order immediate execution. The Court should be required to examine the defendant within eight days from the date he enters appearance, and give notice of the day appointed to the plaintiff. The defendant should be required to file all documentary proofs and bring his witnesses in support of his pleas on the day of his examination. If the nature of the case admits of the immediate disposal of the suit, the Court should do so; or if the case be contested, it should on that day settle the issues in the presence of both parties, and fix another day for hearing and final determination of the suit, not exceeding a fortnight from the date of examination of the defendant.

As regards execution, if the defaulter be a tenure holder or occupancy raiyat, his tenure or holding should be sold in execution. If he be a non-occupancy ryot, he should be evicted.

No appeal should be admitted unless the amount decreed was deposited. The rent receiver should be allowed to take out the deposit on giving proper security.

This scheme seemed to enlist the sympathy of many of my honourable colleagues in the committee, but, to my misfortune, the majority have not been able to accept it. They say—

For ourselves we must confess that after the most anxious consideration of the various schemes which have been propounded for shortening and simplifying the procedure in rent suits, we are unable to suggest anything of importance in this direction which would not involve a serious risk of failure of justice. In particular, while we are anxious to facilitate the service of summonses and the proof of such service, we are unwilling to give any presumption of law against an absent defendant except on adequate proof of such service.

The Committee have, however, introduced the following new provisions:—

• We have, however, with a view to avoiding, as far as possible, the complication and delay which arise from questions as to the landlord's title being raised in rent suits, made an important amendment in the Section (164) which requires a tenant admitting that rent is due from him, but pleading that it is due not to the plaintiff but to a third person, to pay the amount into Court. Our object is to force the issue of disputed title to be raised separately and independently of the rent suit, and we have therefore provided that the Court shall, on the money being paid in, cause notice of the payment to be served on the third person; and unless he, within three months, institutes a separate suit against the plaintiff and obtains an order restraining the payment of the money, it will be paid out to the plaintiff on his application.

A much more efficacious remedy, in my humble opinion, would have been, as I pointed out in Committee, to declare forfeiture of right of the raiyat in case his disclaimer of the title of his landlord was disproved in Court. The modifications proposed by the Committee would only multiply wheel within wheel, a title suit in an arrear suit, and thus vastly delay the realisation of rent instead of facilitating it.

The Committee propose to give power to the High Court to make modifications in the ordinary procedure, if necessary, in applying it to the trial of rent suits. This, to my mind, is tantamount to shirking the question. Surely the Legislature, which has enacted the code of procedure, is competent to modify it for the purpose of expediting the trial of rent suits.

I do hope that when the Committee meet in November next, they will be able to see their way to an efficacious simplification of the present procedure for the realisation of rent, which is a crying grievance with the landlords, and in consequence of which they are not unfrequently heavy losers in meeting the Government demand of the revenue and the cesses. If there is a consensus of opinion on any one point connected with the rent law, it is on this, and it would be a scandal if, while the whole law is being overhauled, no substantial aid be given to the landlords to realise their just dues.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

Under this Bill, freedom of contract between the landlord and the tenant is practically abolished. The matters which are placed beyond the reach of contract are thus specified by the Committee:—

- (a) The acquisition of the status of settled raiyat and of the occupancy right (Sections 24, 25 and 26).
- (b) The incidents of the occupancy-right specified in Section 31.
- (c) The occupancy raiyat's right to demand a reduction of rent under Section 51.
- (d) The right of either landlord or tenant to demand a commutation of a produce rent under Section 53.
- (e) The protection afforded by the Bill to a non-occupancy raiyat or an under raiyat from ejectment except on specified grounds (Sections 58, 59, 60 and 63).
- (f) The right of a tenant to a reduction of rent on account of a diminution of the area of his holding (Section 66).
- (g) The right of a raiyat to make improvements and claim compensation for them (Sections 88, 89, 90 and 93).
- (h) The protection afforded to all tenants against ejectment except in execution of a decree (Section 95).

I have, in my remarks on the introduction of the Bill, strongly protested against this retrograde move. The Permanent Settlement Regulations not only recognised but openly encouraged freedom of contract, and Act 10 of 1859 did the same. I cannot conceive that if the raiyat can be fairly considered a free agent in mortgaging or selling his hearth and home or his agricultural land, in disposing of the produce of his field, or engaging his labour and fulfilling a thousand other obligations of every-day life, why he should be considered incompetent to enter into contract with his landlord. I would strongly urge the re-consideration of this question.

CIVIL COURTS AND REVENUE OFFICERS.

The jurisdiction under the Bill is divided between the Civil Court and the Revenue officer. The large powers which have been conferred upon the Revenue officer at the instance of the Bengal Government are, I hope I am mistaken, evidently intended to reduce the land administration of Bengal to the same dead-level system which prevails in Northern India, and which has so notoriously hampered the action of capital and clogged the springs of industry in that part of the country. Whether I refer to the provisions for the commutation of produce rents into money payment, to record of rights and settlement of rents, to preparation of tables of rates, to superintendence of contracts between the landlord and the tenant, the fixing of standard poles for measurement, the preparation of price lists, or the like, the Revenue officer has been made the fulcrum on which no small portion of the structure of the Bill rests. I would not object if the Revenue officer were made only an executive or administrative officer, but as he has been vested with judicial functions, the objection becomes serious. Nothing, I conceive, can be more injurious to the interests of justice than a system which will place a judicial officer at the beck and nod of the Executive Government. On this point, I would reproduce the enlightened and wise remarks of Lord Cornwallis contained in the preamble to Regulation 2 of 1793:—

"All questions between the Government and the landholders respecting the assessment and collection of the public revenue, and disputed claims between the latter and their raiyats (tenants) have hitherto been cognisable in the Courts of Maal Adawlat, or Revenue Courts. The collectors of revenue preside in these Courts as judges, and an appeal lies from their decision to the Board of Revenue, and from the decrees of that Board to the Governor General in Council in the Department of Revenue. The proprietors can never consider the privileges which have been conferred upon them as secure, whilst the Revenue officers are vested with these judicial powers. Exclusive of the objections arising to these Courts from their irregular, summary, and often ex-parte proceedings, and from the collectors being obliged to suspend the exercise of their judicial functions whenever they interfere with their financial duties, it is obvious that, if the regulations for assessing and collecting the public revenue are infringed, the revenue officers themselves must be the aggressors, and that individuals who have been wronged by them in one capacity can never hope to obtain redress from them in another. Their financial occupations equally disqualify them for administering the laws between the proprietors of land and their tenants. Other security must be given to landed property and to the rights attached to it, before the desired improvements in agriculture can be expected to be effected. Government must divest itself of the power of infringing, in its executive capacity, the rights and privileges which, as exercising the legislative authority, it has conferred on the landholders. The revenue officers must be deprived of their judicial powers. All financial claims of the public, when disputed under the Regulations must be subjected to the cognisance of Courts of Judicature, superintended by judges who, from their official situations and the nature of their trusts, shall not only be wholly uninterested in the result of their decisions, but bound to decide impartially between the public and the proprietors of land, and also between the latter and their tenants. The collectors of the revenue must not only be divested of the powers deciding upon their own acts, but rendered amenable for them to the Courts of Judicature, and collect the public dues, subject to a personal prosecution for every exaction exceeding the amount which they are authorised to demand on behalf of the public, and for every deviation from the regulations prescribed for the collection of it. No power will then exist in the country by which the rights vested in the landlords by the Regulations can be infringed, or the value of landed property affected. Land must, in consequence, become the most desirable of all property, and the industry of the people will be directed to those improvements in agriculture, which are as essential to their own welfare as to the prosperity of the State."

The broad views, which were expressed by the Government in 1798 apply with a ten-fold force in 1884.

PATNI TENURES.

The zemindar, not without reason, objects to the incorporation of the Patni law in this Bill. They hold that every word of that law has during the last sixty-five years received an accepted and authoritative meaning; that it is well understood by the zemindars, the patnidars, the Court and the amil; that to modernise the language will be to disturb the recollections and traditions of more than three scores of years, and that it is therefore highly desirable to leave the Patni law as it is, text and construction, on the principle of letting well alone. I concur in this opinion and would leave out the Patni chapter from this Bill.

I have hastily drawn up my principal objections to the leading principles of the Bill. I have not had time to comment on details. I propose to bring them forward when the committee meet in November next.

KRISTODAS PAL.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—In publishing to-day Mr. Dacosta's vigorous appeal for a close Parliamentary inquiry into the Bengal Tenancy Bill, you have made audible to the people of England the bitter cry of the people of India at the present moment. Mr. Dacosta properly lays stress on the fact that this revolutionary proposal of Lord Ripon's has been strongly condemned by the majority of the highly-placed and experienced English officials of Bengal, who are the natural defenders and champions of the poorest classes of natives, mainly on the ground that it will subject the cultivators of the soil to the grinding tyranny of rack-renting middlemen, while it deprives them of the protection they now receive from the law. Will you permit me to confirm this striking official testimony by a very brief reference to the recorded opinions of every competent native authority in Bengal?

The Calcutta telegram in the Times of yesterday summarised the remarkable minute on this subject by the Maharajah of Durbungah, published last Saturday. As your correspondent points out, the Maharajah's opinion is backed by the unanimous support of all the propertied classes in Bengal. Not the landholders alone, but all those who have anything to lose in the general scramble which Lord Ripon seems to desire are simply panic-stricken at the appalling prospect of social disruption with which the most peaceful province of India is threatened. The Hon. Kristodas Pal, the well-known editor of the Hindoo Patriot, who has represented his countrymen successively in the Bengal Council and the Legislative Council of the Viceroy, some weeks ago recorded his "dissent," which was summarised by your correspondent, and which condemned the Bill in terms quite as strong as those now used by the Maharajah. Both these native members of Council declare that the measure will reduce the cultivators of the soil of Bengal to a condition no better than that of serfdom; that it must inevitably produce universal litigation and dissension, if not graver disturbance of the peace; and that it will impoverish the landholders of Bengal, the most loyal and public-spirited class in India, to benefit no living soul, save only the lawyers and the money-lenders, and possibly the tax-gatherers.

And, be it remembered, lest the people and Parliament of England should run away with the notion that these landholders are wealthy folks who can well afford to be plundered by Government, that the official returns show that, out of a total number of 205,000 landholders in Bengal, no less than 197,000 enjoy a rent-roll of less than £8 per annum. It is a striking fact that there are only forty-three persons in all Bengal (including Rajahs and Maharajahs) who possess an income of £6,000 a year and upward from land. It will thus be seen that it is in reality a thrifty and hitherto prosperous peasant-proprietary that Lord Ripon is handing over to the tender mercies of lawyers and usurers, and levelling down to the condition of Irish cottiers or Egyptian fellahs. "Our very means of living are at stake" writes the veteran representative of the people of Bengal, until lately in the Viceregal Council, the Hon. Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohan Tagore, K.C.S.I.

One more fact for English readers. When the Bill was first introduced into Lord Ripon's Council, every native member of the Council vehemently condemned it. Their speeches have been published, and can be obtained for 3d. at Messrs. W. H. Allen's, or Messrs. P. S. King's. A native supporter of the Bill has since been introduced into the Viceregal Council by Lord Ripon. How? Mr. Ameer Ali, a Calcutta barrister, wrote a signed article last summer in one of the London monthly magazines in defence of the Viceregal measure. At the next vacancy in the Council Mr. Ameer Ali became the Hon. Ameer Ali, Member of Council.

When the highest judicial authority in India, the Chief Justice of Bengal, publicly writes, "I view with horror and dismay the revolutionary provisions of the present Bill," surely there is at least a prima facie case for Parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Slagg proposes that a Grand Committee of the House of Commons should take over the supreme control of Indian affairs. Might it not be well if, as a commencement, honourable gentlemen who sit on Mr. Slagg's side of the House would show some little interest in a measure which—in the language of the leading native paper of India—"threatens to create an agrarian revolution?" Several questions on the subject have been asked from the Opposition benches with no more satisfactory result than as if the questions had been about Egypt or General Gordon. Will not Mr. Slagg himself try to get us some light by moving for a Royal Commission or a Select Committee?—Yours obediently,

ROPER LETHBRIDGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—I see by letter in the Times of this morning from Mr. Roper Lethbridge, who was formerly an official in the Educational Department in Bengal, that some misleading information is said to have been published in official returns regarding landowners in that province.

I presume that the information on which the statements in the third paragraph of this letter are based, refers to certain landholders drawing rent directly from cultivators of the soil; of these there are probably but few in Bengal, while poverty-stricken Orissa only is cultivated for the most part by peasants paying rent direct to the landholder (or zemindar).

I think a more correct impression of the facts would be given if the zemindars, as well as their talukdars, and other middlemen, be regarded as dividing among them the rents paid by the actual cultivators.

With this view I would remind Mr. Lethbridge that in the district of Mymensingh, in which I had to conclude certain inquiries preliminary to the imposition of the road cess (inquiries chiefly conducted by Mr. H. J. Reynolds, one of the Committee of the Bill), it was found that the total annual value of property in land (taking the portion of the rent enjoyed respectively from the lowest middlemen having an income of 100 rupees a year, to the zemindars) was nearly 150 lakhs of rupees, or nearly £1,200,000. Of this sum about eight lakhs is taken by Government as the supreme landlord. I could also give by name upwards of fifty zemindars in that district alone whose income is over £6,000.

The annual value of land to the rent-receivers in the Backergunge district is more than 150 lakhs, but I believe there are not so many individual zemindars with large incomes in that district.

The reports of the officers who assessed the persons liable to road cess in the thirty odd districts of settled Bengal will, on perusal, give a very different result as to the total incomes accruing to the landholding class to that given by Mr. Lethbridge.

I do not wish to enter into a discussion regarding the merits of the existing or of the proposed Act for the collection of rents from under-tenants and cultivators, and I consider that legislation has not much effect in regulating the customs of the agricultural people of Bengal, but that rather the matters in dispute are a subject for constant compromise under the arbitration of the officials of Government who are placed in charge of the districts in the interior.

I would add the remark that in Mymensingh, where the landholding class is as wealthy as I have indicated, the cultivating classes are as independent and as well-to-do as any in India.—Yours obediently,

R. H. PAWSEY.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—If I understand rightly Mr. Pawsey's letter in the Times of to-day, offering further objections to the figures quoted by me to show how few Bengal zemindars are really wealthy men, he wishes to imply that the statistics of incomes collected by the Board of Revenue, and published in their income tax returns, did not include incomes derived by zemindars from landed property. If this is his meaning, all I can say is that he is mistaken; and for proof I need only quote the heading of the statistics, which run as follow:—

"Income-tax statistics for the Lower Provinces of Bengal, showing the number of taxpayers and amount of duty realised under Schedule I, including landholders and agriculturist of all classes deriving their incomes from landed property."

But after all, will Mr. Pawsey forgive me if I venture to say that arguments about the exact accuracy of the official returns are calculated to throw dust in the eyes of the British public? He objects to my statement that "out of 206,000 landholders in Bengal, 197,000 enjoy a rent roll of less than £8 per annum." Will he assent to the statement if put into this form, "The zemindars of Bengal, whose property in land will be effected by the Bengal Tenancy Bill, number about 200,000, and of these the vast majority derive a profit of less than £8 per annum from their lands?" I imagine no Bengal revenue officer will dispute the general accuracy of this statement; and it is sufficient to establish my position.

Dr. Hunter, in his official "Statistical Account of Bengal," contents himself generally with giving the statistics of the revenue-demand of the Government. But in his account of one district, Hooghly, from a report by the collector, dated June 12, 1873, he gives exactly the details we want for that particular district. He says:—

"There are in all 3,537 revenue-paying estates of all kinds in Hooghly, paying a total revenue in 1873 of £128,062 to the State. The aggregate annual value of these estates is estimated at £279,118, leaving a profit to the proprietors after paying the Government demand of £151,055; average annual profit of each estate, £42 14s."

When it is remembered how rapidly the average is increased by a very few large estates, the British public can, from its own conclusion as to the amount of income derived from the vast majority of these 3,537 estates, when the average for all of them, large and small together, is less than £43 per annum.—Yours obediently,

ROPER LETHBRIDGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—I ventured on the 16th inst to address you with the view of pointing out that Mr. Lethbridge, in a letter published by you on the previous day, had been furnished with misleading information which caused him to assert that "out of 206,000 landholders in Bengal 197,000 enjoy a rent-roll of less than £8 per annum, and that only 43 persons in Bengal possess an income of £6,000 and upwards in land."

This statement is so monstrous that immediate explanation was necessary. Mr. Lethbridge has now explained it by referring to the income-tax returns of the Board of Revenue in Bengal. But the income-tax does not touch the profits of land at all, and where a landed proprietor, large or small, is returned as a payer of income-tax, the levy is made on account of some subsidiary occupation.

The only inquiry into the incomes enjoyed by landholders throughout Bengal is that which I mentioned, and the information gathered thereby is the only source of a correct opinion on the subject to me or to any other searcher for truth.—Yours obediently,

R. H. PAWSEY.

April 18.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—Mr. Pawsey, who is, I believe, an official in the Revenue Department in Bengal, endeavours to show in the Times of to-day that I have under-estimated the average wealth of the landholders of that province. I gave definite figures, and they are those of the Board of Revenue, signed by the secretary to the Board, and published in the report of the Revenue Administration of the Lower Provinces. Mr. Pawsey gives no actual figures of average income, but lumps up the "total annual value of property in land," including the property of all middlemen, in the district of Mymensingh to show what a large total it amounts to. I fail to see how this affects the question. It would be more to the point if Mr. Pawsey would tell us, from trustworthy official returns, how much of this total actually goes to landholders, and how many of these landholders enjoy an income from land of less than £8 sterling per annum.

Mr. Pawsey adds, "I could also give by name upwards of fifty zemindars in that district alone whose income is over £6,000." The statement may be interesting as an impression of Mr. Pawsey's private opinion as to the wealth of his late neighbours in Mymensingh. But I do not understand him to say that it is based on any authoritative returns. And, inasmuch as the official income-tax returned showed that there was only 43 such incomes in the whole of Bengal, I cannot help fancying that Mr. Pawsey is speaking in very round numbers indeed. As a revenue official, Mr. Pawsey may, perhaps, think lightly of the figures supplied us by the Revenue Department. But these figures are all we have, and the public will trust them rather than the pious opinions of individual officers.—Yours obediently,

ROPER LETHBRIDGE.

ECCLIESIASTICAL GRANTS IN INDIA.

A Blue-book has been issued, containing correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State in Council, on the subject of the withdrawal of certain grants to Protestant clergymen in India. The correspondence opens with a despatch of June 17, 1883, from Lord Hartington, who was then Secretary of State for India, asking Lord Ripon for information on the subject of chaplains in India, and it closes with the following communication from Lord Kimberley to the Viceroy:—

"India Office, London, Feb. 28, 1884.

"My Lord Marquis,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of the despatch from your Excellency in Council, No. 4, dated 1st of October last, re-submitting in an altered form your opinion on the subject of the ecclesiastical establishments to be maintained in India, in reply to the request of my predecessor (communicated in his despatch No. 68, dated the 23rd of June, 1881) that the Government of India would 'express specifically its own opinion whether the number of chaplains goes beyond the obligations of Government reasonably understood.'

"The Commander in Chief, General Wilson, Sir S. Bayley, and Mr. Hope, being the majority of the Government of India, hold that the number of chaplains employed does not go beyond the obligations of Government reasonably understood. The first three of these gentlemen consider that these obligations extend primarily to British soldiers, secondarily to all other Christian servants of Government and to their families, but not to persons other than Government servants. They would, however, slightly change the existing system by confining chaplains to military stations, and they would provide by grants in aid for other stations, or groups of stations, where there is a sufficient number of Government servants to warrant a grant.

"Mr. Hope agreeing with the majority of his colleagues that the number of chaplains does not exceed the obligations of Government, proposes a change of much importance in the mode of ecclesiastical expenditure. He would distribute State aid among the various Christian denominations in proportion to the number of persons receiving the spiritual ministrations of their clergy, and he would leave them to regulate the expenditure for themselves.

"Your Lordship and Mr. Ilbert are of opinion that provision should be made exclusively for the spiritual necessities of soldiers and their families, and of European British-born State Railway servants, and you state that the adoption of the principles you advocate would no doubt eventually lead to a considerable diminution in the existing establishment.

"In the presence of such wide differences of opinion, I have great doubt whether it is desirable to proceed further in the matter, more especially as there has not been, as far as I am aware, any serious complaint in India of the working of the system. But before giving any further consideration to the question I desire to be made acquainted with the views of the Governments of Madras and Bombay, which, during half a century have had distinct ecclesiastical departments of their own under the superintendence (so far as chaplains of the Established Church of England are concerned) of separate bishops deriving their status from the explicit provisions of an Act of Parliament (3 and 4 William IV, cap. 85, secs. 89-101). I see no reason, however, for consulting the other local Governments, which are in a different position.—I have, &c.

(Signed)

"KIMBERLEY."

The following appointments have been made in the Bengal Army:—12th Bengal Cavalry, Lieutenant Colonel Green, second in command, to be commandant, vice Colonel Sir Hugh Gough, who vacates on April 1. Major G. C. Jackson, Bengal Cavalry, to be second in command, vice Green, promoted. In the 42nd N.I., Lieutenant Colonel A. D. Butler, second in command, is promoted to be commandant, vice Sheriff, who vacates on April 1; Major W. Brydon, wing commander, to be second in command, vice Colonel Butter; and Captain A. K. Abbott, wing officer, to be wing commander, vice Major Brydon.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

[From the Bombay Gazette, April 11.]

Surgeon Major Knapp has been transferred to the half-pay list.

The 23rd Pioneers have returned to Mean Meer from the Hurnai Pass.

Sir George Greaves, Adjutant General, arrived at Simla on Tuesday last.

Captain C. Liddell, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, has been granted one month's leave.

Surgeon General Auchinleck will take privilege leave for three months from May 2.

Surgeon Major A. F. Elliot, Army Medical Department, is about to retire from the service.

Major Hutchinson took over the duties of Assistant Adjutant General for Musketry from Major Mackinnon at Simla on the 1st instant.

Extension of leave for six months on private affairs has been granted to Lieutenant Colonel Goodfellow, S. C., and Lieutenant Colonel Malden, S. C.

Surgeon F. J. Lambkin, A.M.D., is directed to proceed to Benares for duty at the Station Hospital, as Surgeon Major Frazer leaves for England.

Lieutenant J. Moran, Berar Volunteer Rifle Corps, has been permitted to resign his Commission, and Mr. S. Read has been appointed in his stead.

It is rumoured at Simla that Lieutenant Owen, 2nd Battalion Lancashire Fusiliers, is likely to be appointed to the personal staff of His Excellency the Viceroy.

The name of Lieutenant W. Le P. Mansfield has been struck off the list of officers of the Madras Volunteer Guards for continued absence without leave.

Major Doyle, Invalid Establishment, and Major T. St. Q. Clutterbuck, General List Infantry, have been detailed to pay pensioners in the North West Provinces Circle.

The Indian Government steamer Canning will, on her return from Vingorla, leave for Aden with the following officers and troops:—E. Company Madras (Queen's Own) Sappers and Miners, Lieutenant H. Swayne, 124 native officers and men, and twenty-five followers with families; Royal Artillery, Aden Defences, twenty-two men, sixteen wives, eighteen children; 1st Essex Regiment, Captain Kelly and Lieutenant Nason.

The officers of the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles entertained Lieutenant Colonel Fergus Graham, their Commandant, who has just returned to India from furlough, Major Nicolay, the Officiating Commandant, and Captain Channer, the newly appointed Officiating Adjutant, at dinner, at Headquarters, on the 31st March. Lieutenant Colonel Graham assumed command of the Calcutta Volunteers on the 1st April.

An estimate, amounting to Rs. 20,240, for providing a compound-wall round the Gunpowder Factory at Madras, has been sanctioned, as supplemental to the estimates already sanctioned for improvements. The total amount of the estimates will now stand at Rs. 2,48,492. A sum of Rs. 10,000 has been provided in the preliminary issue of the military works budget estimate for 1884-85, also for improvements.

The Volunteer Corps in the North Western Provinces and Oudh have been formed into four administrative battalions with effect from April 1, viz.:—The 1st Battalion to include the Lucknow, Naini Tal, and Rohilkund Corps; the 2nd to include the Agra, Thomason College, and Mussoorie Corps; the 3rd, the Benares and Ghazipore; and the 4th, the Allahabad, Cawnpore, and Farukhabad Corps.

The steamer Nuddea, 1,939 tons, Captain J. Henderson, arrived in Bombay harbour on the 5th instant from London, which port she left on March 6, with the following drafts:—Major W. A. Eden, R.A., Surgeon Major R. A. Mally, A.M.D., Captain L. Mayne, Leicestershire, Captain and Mrs. S. E. Bellingham and child, Middlesex, Surgeon V. E. Hunter, A.M.D., Captain F. B. Garfit, Hampshire, Captain S. P. Strong, Scottish Rifles, Lieutenant D. A. E. Chapman, Worcestershire, Lieutenant C. E. Jarvis, R.A., Lieutenant W. D. Jones, Wiltshire, Lieutenant G. S. Haines, Dorsetshire, Lieutenant S. L. H. Bailly, Middlesex, Lieutenant H. R. Pease, East Yorkshire, Lieutenant H. B. Smyth, Warwickshire, Lieutenant W. H. Miller, West Surrey, Lieutenant E. W. M. Norie, Middlesex, Lieutenant W. F. A. Burn, Middlesex, Lieutenant A. P. A. Elphinstone, Warwickshire, Lieutenant W. F. H. Cox, Oxfordshire L.I., and 740 men of various regiments.

The Indian Government steamer Canning sailed April 10 for Vingorla, with the following drafts, &c.:—Surgeon Hewett and two followers, A.M.D.; Rev. Mr. C. Walford and three followers, Ecclesiastical Department; four officers, one lady, 150 European men, and eight followers; draft of the Rifle Brigade; and seven European men, draft of the G-2 Royal Artillery.

The command of the 2nd Bombay Grenadiers falls vacant on the 17th instant, when Colonel Fagan will succeed to the colonel's allowance. It is believed that the successional promotions will all go in the regiment—Lieutenant Colonel James becoming commandant, Major Ryves 2nd in command, and Captain Peile, wing commander.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are indistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and élite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surplus and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, April 17; Madras and Allahabad, April 16; Calcutta, April 15.

THE Gazette of India brought by this mail contains the Dissent of the Maharajah of Darbhanga from the report of the majority of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill. It is a State paper of the highest importance, and we propose to reproduce it in a special supplement next week.

THE Indigo Planter's Gazette of April 15 says:—

"Again the princely Maharajah of Durbungah is to the fore, whenever charity or liberality for the good of his country is needed. A handsome donation of 10,000 Rupees has just been given by him to the Ripon Professorship Fund for the Cultivation of Science. Let the lists of private and public charities that have been open since his Highness attained his majority be examined, and scarcely one will be found which does not bear his Highness's name, and for the largest donation too. A more liberal or enlightened Prince does not exist in any country; yet this is the man whose rights and privileges the Rent Bill so cruelly assails."

These views upon the Tenancy Bill, and the position of the Bengal zemindars, are those which are held, we are firmly convinced, by the great majority of the honourable and liberal-minded planters of Behar. Mr. D. N. Reid, whose object seems to be to get the Bill passed so that planters may be able to buy up occupancy-rights, and grind down their serfs, speaks for no one in Behar but himself.

WE are requested to state that the Annual Assam Dinner will take place this year about the Derby week. The marked success of the inaugural dinner last year, and the influence it exerted in the opposition to the infamous Ilbert Bill, proves that such gatherings are of practical political use, in addition to being social re-unions of old friends. Gentlemen wishing to be present are invited to communicate with Mr. Berry White, E.I.U.S. Club, 14, St. James's-square, S.W.

WE regret to observe that Mr. Lalmohan Ghose, the respected Calcutta barrister who came to England last year to support the Ilbert Bill and the appeal to the Privy Council in the Contempt Case, indites a letter to the Times on Lord Lytton's establishment of a Native Civil Service, in which he gives as his address "the National Liberal Club." We think it much to be deplored that a gentleman, who has some claim to be regarded as the representative in this country of "Young Bengal," should thus ostentatiously range himself as a partisan in the battle of English party-politics. It may be doubted whether those whom Mr. Ghose represents would approve of this course. It is certain that all the more enlightened and cautious of Native politicians share the aversion, which we have often expressed in these columns, to any attempt to bring Indian questions within the sphere of party politics in England. And the attempt is especially to be deprecated in regard to such a question as that which is the subject of Mr. Lalmohan Ghose's letter, the admission of natives to the Indian Civil Service. The question is one that has attracted the honest attention of both parties in the State impartially. It is absolutely undeniable that, up to the present time, the most important practical advances in this direction have been made by Conservative statesmen—in Sir Stafford Northcote's scheme for State scholarships to England, and in Lord Lytton's "Native Civil Service" scheme. We are not disposed to take credit for the Conservative party, on this account, as monopolising an interest in the advancement of the native element in the Civil Service; but the fact renders the tendency of Mr. Lalmohan Ghose and his young friends to tie themselves up to the tail of the English Radical party, at once an act of ingratitude and a tactical blunder.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times this week telegraphs an interesting rumour, evidently emanating from Mr. Ilbert's party in the Government of India, that the forthcoming letter of the latter to the Government of Bengal is exceptionally "conciliatory"—and that the Government of India is now prepared to take such a view of the Bill, especially in regard to the questions of restraint and enhancement, as may probably disarm the hostility of its opponents.

OUR readers will remember that, at about the same stage in the Ilbert Bill No. I. controversy, as that which we have now reached in regard to the Ilbert Bill No. 2, the world was informed demi-officially that the Government of India, wishing to be conciliatory, would refer the Bill to the local officers and would abide by the local decision. But long before the local reports had all come in, the vicious influence of Simla had hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he refused to let the people go. And we fear that it will be much the same now, in the matter of the mischievous Tenancy Bill. The "conciliatory" tone of the Government of India just now is the result of the health tonic of three or four months' residence in Calcutta, in the midst of a real, intelligent, and independent public opinion. But, unhappily, Lord Ripon is already once more shut up in Simla and subjected to all its evil influences. The opponents of the Bengal Tenancy Bill will do well not to allow themselves to be deluded by any false hopes. The iniquitous measure of confiscation can be stopped by bold and determined resistance; for the excuses for it are too flagrantly unreal to admit of prolonged defence against resolute and honest attacks. But it would be in the highest degree unsafe to put the smallest trust in the spontaneous heart-searching of the Government.

THE Secunderabad correspondent of the Pioneer writes:—

"The Seymour Keay libel case is drawing to a close. A good deal of social interest is centred in the result. His counsel holds that no substitution of documents took place, but that even if it had occurred the substitution was justifiable under the circumstances. From a legal point of view this may be so, but such a code could scarcely be recognised in any social community."

THE prolonged drought in Northern India is becoming very serious. Happily, the rain that has fallen in Lower Bengal seems to be sufficient to relieve that province from any immediate fear of famine.

MORE clouds on the Afghan side. We now hear of a Turcoman force assembling at Sarakhs to support Ayub Khan.

MADRAS has the reputation of being the "Sleepy Hollow" of India. When its Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association sent over a delegate to England to fight the battles of the community, the said delegate no sooner caught sight of the big-wigs of the India Office than he forthwith began to do pujá, in entire oblivion of the interests of those whom he had come to represent. But it is evident that the attitude of pujá is not an invariable one in Madras; for that city has now won for itself the credit of being the first of the Presidencies that has taken up in earnest the very serious question of the growing tendency of Indian Governments to spend their summers in one long picnic on the hills.

THE Times of India says:—

"Our readers will hear with pleasure that the agitation in favour of Dr. Banks has been successful. The Government have reconsidered his case, and instead of being returned in disgrace to the Commander in Chief, he will be simply appointed to Surat instead of Ahmedabad. The 'Banks case' has ended happily, and we need say no more about it here than that it affords a noteworthy instance of the increasing power of public opinion, and, we may be allowed to add, of public opinion as especially reflected in the English Press of India."

THE Ceylon Company has followed the fortunes of the Oriental Bank, and has had to suspend payment. The disastrous effects of the Oriental Bank failure had been to a large extent discounted; but still we fear much inconvenience and even distress will ensue. The enterprise of Messrs. H. S. King and Co. is always ready to adapt itself to the needs of the Indian Services; and we have much pleasure in observing that the following notification has been issued with regard to the bank failure:—"In view of the inconvenience which will be caused to the Indian Services by the suspension of the Oriental Bank Corporation, Messrs. Henry S. King and Co., 65, Cornhill, and 45, Pall-mall, are willing to make advances against credit balances in that bank to all officers and civilians opening current banking accounts with them. Powers of attorney for realising pay, pensions, and allowances will be promptly furnished."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending April 18:—

"Masud-ood-Dowlah, brother of the Prince of Arcot; and Baboo Govind Chunder Dutt."

THE Englishman gives the following report on the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending April 15:—

"Owing to the Easter holidays our market has been very quiet since last mail. Engagement by steamers is almost the only business we have to report, and at a decline of 2s. 6d. all round. By sailers the market has shown no signs to follow up the small advances lately obtained, there has been hardly anything doing, and the market closes flat."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated May 4:—

"It is stated that a letter from the Government of India to the Bengal Government, containing the views of the former on the amended Bengal Rent Bill, has been drafted and will be forwarded in a few days. The letter is said to be framed in conciliatory terms, and to express more moderate views, especially on the subjects of distraint and enhancement, than have been commonly attributed to its authors. It is also asserted that if the Bengal Government now meet the Government of India in a spirit equally conciliatory there is every prospect of the terms of the Bill being so arranged as to satisfy all interests. The accuracy of this last statement, however, may well be doubted; it is hardly possible that anything short of the entire abandonment of many of the most important features of the measure will reconcile the landholders to it. It is believed that Government has also invited the opinion of the Judges of the Calcutta High Court; this step is usually taken in regard to all important legislative projects, but bearing in mind the language which Lord Hartington thought fit to use in the House of Commons last year regarding the judges' opinion of the Ilbert Bill, it is questionable whether they will care again to express their views on a subject on which public feeling is much divided."

"During the last fortnight more or less rain has fallen in almost all the districts of Bengal proper and Orissa, but there have been only a few showers in portions of Behar. According to the last official report rain is still wanted almost everywhere, and in some districts a scarcity of drinking water is beginning to be felt. Prices of food grains are almost stationary; but there seems little doubt that there will soon be pressure and scarcity in portions of the province, and it may be necessary to start relief works in certain districts. There is also some appearance of possible scarcity in parts of the Punjab, and precautions are being taken in the Delhi and Hissar divisions so as to enable relief works to be commenced should they become necessary."

"The public health is improving, and although the death-rate from cholera and small-pox is still high in Calcutta and the vicinity, the mortality is steadily diminishing. The small-pox epidemic in Madras is gradually dying out, and it has apparently quite ceased in Rangoon."

"Considering that the Oriental Bank was the oldest and for many years the leading Indian exchange bank, it might have been expected that its stoppage yesterday morning would have created a profound sensation; as a matter of fact, however, the announcement was received very quietly and with little appearance of excitement, possibly because it was not absolutely unexpected. A small crowd, chiefly composed of native traders, gathered round the doors of the bank in the morning, but soon dispersed. The news, of course, was the principal topic of discussion among business men during the day; but the general impression seems to be that the event will have little, if any, disturbing effect on trade, and that there is no prospect of a run upon the other banks, or of any great mercantile houses being involved in the catastrophe. A good many depositors in the local branch will no doubt suffer temporary inconvenience which in some few cases may possibly have serious and permanent effect. I have no information regarding the number of shares held in this country, but should be disposed to think it not very large. The failure may possibly have the effect of protracting the present tightness of the money market, but even this seems to be doubted. A circumstance which is likely to have a more serious effect on trade, and which is the subject of much indignation in business circles, is the recent extraordinary action of the Government in withdrawing a very large proportion of its balance from the Bank of Bengal and locking it up uselessly in reserve treasuries."

"A proposal to remove the military accounts offices from Madras to Bangalore is causing much excitement in the Presidency town. The subordinate employés protest strongly against the step as one which will cause them grave inconvenience and heavy expense. The matter has been taken up by the Press and the general public, and a petition against the removal is being largely signed. It is urged among other things that it will cause a loss to local trade of two-and-a-half lakhs yearly. It is impossible as yet to predict the end of this hard fight between a few officials and public opinion. As a local journal well describes it, India owes a debt of gratitude to Madras for having been the first of the great cities publicly to raise the voice of protest against one of the gravest dangers and most crying evils of the day—the ever increasing tendency of Governments to bury themselves in the seclusion of hill sanatoria a practice which, while it secures the comfort of a few highly-paid officials, sacrifices efficiency in work, sympathy between rulers and ruled, the knowledge on the part of the former of the wants and feelings of the latter, and the convenience of a host of subordinate employés."

"The amount realised by the opium sales in the first two months of the financial year is Rs. 1,20,950 above the estimates."

"The punitive expedition against the Zhol Kakars will probably take place about September. At first it was proposed to send a force of about 1,500 men at once, but the Commander-in-Chief has increased the number to 2,400. Some cavalry are to be included, and as there is a difficulty about fodder at this season the expedition is postponed. This is much to be regretted, as delay will deprive the punishment of half its efficiency."

"The Ameer is establishing posts in the Western Khyber. The Herat frontier is quieting down. The Ameer's troops have occupied the greater part of Maimena, advancing simultaneously from Herat and Turkestan. The people welcomed the return of Mir Husain Khan, the Ameer's Governor."

"Turcomans report a fight at Merv before the Russians occupied Koushed Kala. A considerable Turcoman force has assembled at Sarakhs, with the object of supporting Ayoub."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A JAUNT IN A JUNK.*

It would be breaking loaf-sugar with a Nasmith hammer to bring the solemnities of criticism to bear upon this little book. It is open to but one objection of a legitimate kind. Being the narrative of a frolic of two young men, it would have been simpler to have told it just as it occurred instead of clothing it in the garb of fiction. But it is told with all manner of vivacity and high spirits; and, if somewhat deficient in reflectiveness, is abundant in observation, and evidently "founded on fact."

Two young men—one a military officer quartered in Bombay, the other his brother on a visit to India in search of the picturesque—go to sea in a harbour boat with no deck, but a small round house in the stern. They sail down the coast, calling at Goa and at Mangalore; and finally meet a British-India coasting steamer, which took one of them back to Bombay, the other drifting onward, we are not informed whither.

The descriptions of sea-scape and landscape, of fish, fowl, and man, are original and accurate; though there is a little too much beating of the nigger for perfect good taste, yet even that detail, probably, is not wholly untrue to fact.

Some of the conversations are related with considerable dramatic power and contain good points. In spite of the occasional girding at critics which the book contains, we can conscientiously own that we have read a good deal of it, beginning, middle, and end; and can recommend it to lazy readers who wish to change the venue of their thoughts without much trouble. It does not pretend to be instructive; yet, in a laughing mood throws a good deal of light on native character, and hits off some amusing peculiarities of Anglo-Indian manners. The verses with which it concludes are exceedingly well written.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GOVERNMENT'S NEGLECT OF THE NAVY.
TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—That most distinguished and experienced soldier, Field Marshal his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, is reported by the press to have stated at the Mansion House, March 12, 1884, "The army of England would be powerless but for the navy." Nothing can be more true. Consequently, as our navy is insufficient, it neutralises the £33,000,000 per annum our army costs with India. We vote only £10,800,000 for the navy, which is thence so starved that it has no squadron of instruction. The Admiralty in Parliament express thorough political contentment therewith. I feel so dismayed at the certainty of a naval Sedan in prospect that I crave space for a few remarks. The most misleading account possible of our (observe well the heading) "Fighting and Sea-going Iron-clads" has just been issued by Parliament—swelled by including the Waterwitch and other utterly unseaworthy trash to 62. Brassey gives 64 of the same description to the French. Of our 62 only some 15 can go at full speed, boiler pressure reduced in the others, &c. The truth is, the French have 27 modern battle ships + 8 canonnières cuirassées to our 24 + Hero and another just ordered this year. Hero is smaller than the wretched Conqueror, whose two heavy guns are useless for one-fourth the circle. The rest on both sides are thoroughly obsolete. Traps to slaughter and drown their crews, owing to their thin armour and faulty structure. The 27 French are all heavily armoured from end to end, with armoured decks and cellular system, while most of ours are only armoured one-third their length, two-thirds being utterly undefended with the same armoured decks and cellular system as the French. Thence our rams are flimsy, liable to be telescoped like the König Wilhelm versus Grosser Kurfürst—this needs proof by actual experiment firing at the unarmoured ends shot and shell. Too late—when actually in battle to find both ends of the ships riddled and set on fire by the most common sort of ordnance. Anything from 6in. B.L. onwards would pierce them, and double shells perhaps do most harm. I have no doubt of the most easy destruction of such ends. While at most angles armour would keep out projectiles.

All the French ships have breechloading guns; ours have obsolete muzzleloaders, save nine. The Secretary of the Admiralty is reported (March 21) to acknowledge the necessity of re-arming the navy with breechloaders, and adds:—"The breechloaders of the old type have no advantage whatever over the muzzleloaders." This I emphatically deny. As well—better—use muzzleloading rifles or fowling-pieces. How is it possible to load muzzleloaders within range of breechloading six-inch or machine guns? The old breechloader has many other advantages, viz., safety to load—remember Thunderer, &c.—over all muzzle-loaders, which should be forthwith changed for breechloaders. But the War Minister states "there are in Germany and France several firms who have been able to supply steel forgings of the size and also of the quality demanded for these guns, but up to the present time none of the English firms have been able to furnish us with steel forgings of the size and quality required." This while our navy is very badly armed indeed. He added (a):—"Steel armour plates, I believe, are now being manufactured, which cannot be pierced by any gun in existence." I was answered as yesterday:—"Our fleet is the best armed in the world," and yet 110-ton guns, breechloaders, so ridiculed two years ago in Parliament, are preparing. Our modern fighting ships are inferior to the French ships in number, armour, armament, ram, safety in steering, &c., and cannot contend successfully in battle with the French, both equally well-handled and fought; but how exist if those most powerfully armed Italian ships are added against us, more particularly considering our naval duties all over the world? The French are thoroughly satisfied I glean from the Pall Mall Gazette, December 1, 1882, stating that the French Minister of Marine said in their Chambers "The assertion that the French navy is inferior to the English is untrue!" I agree with him. I use the words above "starved navy" advisedly, backed also by a brother officer, the oldest, wisest, and best naval Admiralty administrator, who wrote me, "All you say is quite true, but no money is our misfortune, and most wretched work it is to be thus 'starved' (sic) and the service 'starved' (sic). It must be forced on, however, although I have worried every First Lord who has been here." One of our very best young admirals, also an Admiralty Lord, writes:—"When naval Lords at Whitehall say what is required, the civil lords reply 'There is no money, so there is no use discussing the matter.'"

Facts are proverbially stubborn things! The French Budget Exercice de la Marine, 1882, p. 1322 shows that the vote for the effective service was £6,296,106 (omitting the Artillery Vote because our Naval Ordnance is charged to the Army Vote). To this was added a Shipbuilding Vote for one million, &c. The Vote thus became £7,900,000 for 1883, and £7,400,000 for 1884 and 1885, see p. 1508, Exercice 1885. Our Navy effective Vote was in 1882-83, £8,300,000, and for 1884-85, £8,600,000. Thus the French maximum vote is £7,900,000 to our £8,600,000. With our duties all over the world; how can we—so starved—keep up a naval superiority? Impossible! Our gross dock-yard vote is £3,738,100, while the French is £2,904,886, a difference of £833,214 for much less duties. The French Artillery Vote Exercice, 1885, p. 1508 is £655,421.* —Ours, see Army Estimates p. 4, 1884-85, "Navy Warlike Stores £500,000" of which only £189,232 "are for Iron and Steel Ordnance;" see p. 54. Although we are re-arming our Navy and the French have all breechloaders, on the whole Naval vote the Exercice 1885, p. 1508 shows an increase over 1884 of £100,000 about—and an increase of £1,103,894 over 1882. France is building (a) 15 Ironclads + 8 armoured Gunboats and 12 Torpedo vessels to our 10 Ironclads + 2 Cruisers building and fitting—no armoured gunboats + 2 torpedo vessels and 4 boats, see pp. 204, 213. N.B.—The French Estimates are voted and finished for the whole year 1885. Ours are still in future and only to April, 1885. I submit that the above unvarnished account is about as bad a case as can be, for an Island whose ships are its fortifications and which depends upon the sea for her daily food. The First Lord of the Admiralty wrote to me, jubilant, 24th February, 1869:—"Estimates finished, net reduction £957,358!" Another most melancholy fact, which the Navy has since groaned under to its undoing.

DRESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

"SIR,—Before natives can be considered fit to govern their fellow-countrymen, they should show a good example by dressing themselves properly. They appear to pay less regard to their dress every year. Native sub-judges sometimes dress as native table servants do. At the formal opening by the Lieut. Governor of the North West Provinces the other day of a section of the North Western and Bengal Railway from Fyzabad to Baraitch there was a remarkable want of kummerbunds or waistbands.

It is very desirable that all Government servants and all natives who are admitted into the society of Englishmen should dress decently. Waistbands are indispensable, and if native visitors wear dirty shoes they ought to be received in appropriate rooms which are not furnished with English carpets.

The natives may plead that by being untidy they are only imitating Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen, but they should remember that they can bear the terrible heat of their native country better than we can.

Perhaps our educated Liberal and Republican natives think that they are imitating successfully the Roman toga. If they be under this delusion perhaps it would be well for Government to distribute samples of Roman togas throughout the country.

Sir Charles Metcalfe understood how to induce natives to attend to the proprieties. He met some natives of the highest rank at his own door, and most politely prevented their entering until they had taken off their shoes as they would have done when visiting each other. Your obedient servant,

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—On April 30, the Times published a letter from me in which I endeavoured to explain some of the difficulties connected with the Bengal Tenancy Bill, in such terms as might be intelligible to the ordinary English reader. I tried to point out two things, first, that the Secretary of State for India had prescribed certain limits for the proposed legislation; secondly, that there has been an attempt to hurry the Bill through the Legislative Council in Calcutta, without that full discussion and consideration which the Secretary of State had particularly enjoined.

On May 1, a leading article appeared in the Times, which professed to be a commentary on my letter. But the writer not only misquoted and misrepresented some of my statements, he proceeded to give an entirely one-sided view of many circumstances connected with the Bill; and with your permission I will now try to point out some of the palpable errors into which the writer of the article has fallen, and to explain more fully the position which is taken by me, and by those who agree with me in their objection to the Bill, in the form which it has last assumed. Firstly, the Times appears to misunderstand my complaint regarding the manner in which the Bill has been hurried through the Select Committee. On this point we have the strongest evidence of Baboo Kristodas Pal, who as a member of the select committee, has recorded his official protest against the meetings held thrice instead of twice a week, and the shortened opportunities of presenting and studying amendments. The Times would have it to be understood that my complaint referred to the haste with which the bill has been prepared, and it points triumphantly to the two years which have passed since Lord Ripon brought the subject to the notice of the Secretary of State for India. But apparently the writer was not aware that instead of two years, he might have claimed fully ten years or even a longer term during which the subject has been under consideration in India. In this interval not only one bill, but several bills had been drafted and set aside. Mr. Ilbert's final draft produced in March, 1883, with much novel matter in it, certainly came with some surprise on the Indian public, but it is not worth while to dwell further on this point.

Secondly, the Times alleges that the Bill is pressed forward in the interest of the Bengal cultivators, and that its main objects are to restore to the cultivators rights of which they have been deprived, or which they have passively allowed to lapse, and to protect them for the future against the encroachments of the powerful order, which has a dual interest in opposition to them. And it adds that there will be no dispute that the bill does interfere with the claims of property. If it is admitted that this a correct description of the objects of the bill, and of the manner in which its objects are to be attained, it is not surprising that those owners of property whose interests are to be interfered with do raise their protest against it. It may appear to some people—such, for instance, as Mr. Henry George—that it is permissible for the State at any time to rob Peter to pay Paul; but the owners of property in England, as well as in India, are deeply interested in protecting themselves against such iniquitous proceedings.

Thirdly, the Times admits that the supporters of the Bill are bound to prove that its provisions are just and necessary; and in order to find arguments in support of his case, the writer proceeds to describe the Permanent Settlement of 1793 in terms which it would be a waste of time to reproduce, or they represent the extreme views held by that party who abhor the Permanent Settlement in their hearts, and read its provisions with one eye closed. The writer, of course, seizes upon my admission that in the Permanent Settlement the Government reserved to itself the power to legislate for the protection and welfare of the dependent talukdars, ryots, and other cultivators; but he is constrained to admit that the Government at first exercised this protective power in a very perverse manner by legalising the personal arrest of defaulting tenants, by increasing the severity of the laws of distraint, and other such measures. The general result we are told, on the authority of Mr. Pedden, has been that the landlords as the richest party and the better capable of sustaining a protracted litigation, have the law almost invariably with them, and can resist with practical impunity to various forms of illegal oppression. "This state of things has continued, and its mischievous effects have been intensified, and it is this state of things which the Tenancy Bill has been devised to remedy." It is hardly necessary to point out the contradictions lying on the surface of this statement. It is admitted that the landlords almost invariably had the law on their side after protracted litigation. But this was because they were the richer party. How was it then that the litigation was protracted, presumably by that series of appeals which the Indian law permits, if the law courts were all so much in favour of the richer side? And is it to be assumed thus hastily that the legal decisions were always wrongly given in favour of the landlords?

Fourthly the Times produces what it calls evidence to show the necessity of a Bill to protect the cultivation against the landlords. It cites three witnesses, Mr. Ilbert, Mr. Metcalfe, and an anonymous author, but we are told that evidence to be found passim. All that Mr. Ilbert says, speaking, of course, at secondhand, is that amongst sixty million of people, the majority are cultivators, and the minority are rent receivers, and that the mutual rights of these two classes are uncertain and obscure, that in Behar landlords are strong and tenants weak, while in Eastern Bengal tenants combine to resist the payment of rent, though the Times subsequently says that this perversity of the ryots is due to the faults of the landlords. The next witness, Mr. Metcalfe, is said to have alleged that the rents apparently in the Patna district, have been doubled within the last sixteen years. I must venture to mistrust this assertion for many reasons, but I may add that I have seen it stated officially that the late Lieutenant Governor of Bengal puts no confidence in Mr. Metcalfe's opinions. The third and anonymous witness says that for years past the whole power of the Behar police has been practically at the disposal of the landlords. The complaints of the tenants have either been neglected, or have been followed by interference on the landlords' behalf. It is not incumbent on me to answer such a charge as this. There are several ex-Lieutenant Governors of Bengal yet alive, who may repudiate such a slur on their reputation. There are hosts of civilian magistrates and police officers who have served in Behar, to whom such a charge will be as novel as it is untrue.

Fifthly, the Times misquotes and sneers at my reference to the testimony of the Duke of Argyll as to the peace and prosperity of the people of Bengal under the Permanent Settlement; and it doubts the evidence, which I had derived from Baboo Kristodas Pal, that the bond fide cultivators will be worse off under the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee than they were before. It is perhaps unnecessary to dwell on these points. The province of Bengal is acknowledged to be the wealthiest and most peaceful province of India. As to the effect of the new Bill on cultivators, Baboo Kristodas Pal is likely to be better informed than the editor of the Times can be.

Sixthly, the Times alleges that the Indian landlord is of the Irish and not of the English type; and Mr. Stuart Mill is cited as the authority for this opinion. But the Times makes a sort of apology to the Irish landlords for the comparison, and it then renews its attack upon the Indian Government, whose subordinate officials have hitherto failed to protect an oppressed and helpless order of men, whom the entire governmental machinery has been distorted to bear down. It is hardly necessary to pause over such statements as these; the effects of which or the argument is not very perceptible. But the Times next falls into the palpable error of describing the opponents of the Tenancy Bill as identical with "the comparatively" small number of baboos for whom the Ilbert Bill was constructed. A more ludicrous and incorrect assumption could not have been made. The small band of educated Bengalis who clamoured for the Ilbert Bill, were as a rule, those who are most hostile to the landlord class, and desirous through their ruin to undermine the British power in India. The landlords who oppose the Tenancy Bill, are the representatives of those men who during the last century have been conspicuous for their loyalty and good services to the British Government.

The Times concludes with the important admission that the Tenancy Bill is fairly open, in its details, to criticism; and that its advocates are by no means in agreement about these details. I gladly recognise this admission. It is an approach to the position which is taken by those who are considered the opponents of the Bill. That some legislation is needed is almost generally conceded. The landlords were the first to ask for legislation, to enable them to collect their rents; and to decide the law on the enhancement of rent, enhancement having practically been brought to a standstill. The Bengal Government promised legislation on these points as long ago as 1873; but it subsequently so handled the question that the protection of the cultivators assumed the most prominent position, and the landlords, who had asked for bread, found themselves presented with a stone. In fact, their position is even worse than this. It is now admitted that rights are to be given to the cultivator at the cost and to the detriment of the landlords. It is easy to say that the details of the Bill are open to criticism. But these details involve the question whether the landlord is to lose merely a finger, or his whole arm, or perhaps even his life, owing to the exhaustion of his system. Fortunately, for reasons which there is not space to record here, the Select Committee has postponed the passing of the Bill, and has called for fuller and further information on many vital points on which there were insufficient and contradictory reports. This is in itself the fullest justification of those who oppose many parts of the Bill; for it is well known from the published official documents that the Bengal Government, as represented by its over-zealous secretary, had been eager to have the Bill passed into law with all its faults, instead of awaiting the further criticism and the closer consideration of the subject for the Indian public and your English readers.

IMPORTANT MEETING AT DERBY, CONDEMNING LORD RIPON'S POLICY.

ON Wednesday, the 30th ultimo, a meeting of working men was held in the Lecture Hall, Derby, to hear addresses on "Our policy in India, and how it affects the interests of the working classes of Great Britain." Mr. F. Ley, proprietor of the Vulcan Ironworks, presided, and in a comprehensive address introduced the speakers, Mr. Pfoundes, F.R.C.S., and Mr. F. T. Atkins, delegate from the working men in India. After the addresses had been delivered, and several questions, asked by persons among the audience, had been answered, the following resolution was carried with only four dissenting votes:—

"That this meeting recognises the important interests that unite Great Britain and India, and condemns the policy at present pursued which has created widespread discontent in India, promoted a sense of insecurity which retards the development of industries and militates against the welfare of natives as well as Europeans. It further condemns, as grossly unjust, the present policy which denies to the descendants of Englishmen domiciled in India the advantages and privileges extended to natives of that country."

The large hall was crowded, and the addresses were well received, enthusiasm characterising the proceedings throughout. A vote of thanks to the speakers, and another to the chairman brought to a close another successful meeting, in which the working men of Derby were made acquainted with the cruel and dishonourable policy pursued by the present Liberal (?) Ministry toward their countrymen in India.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

CHEAP JUSTICE.

We are not without hope that Sir Richard Garth's minute upon the stamp duties, imposed upon legal proceedings in this country, will bear fruit. The Bombay correspondent of the Pioneer makes some interesting remarks upon the subject, but somewhat mars their force by saying:—

"The practice under which litigants have to defray to the State, in stamps and fees, the whole of the charges incurred by the State in connection with its courts of justice, has of course the great practical advantage that it tends to discourage frivolous and vexatious proceedings at law."

There is little hope of reform while this delusion lasts. No one, of course, will deny that individual cases occur in which the cost of proceedings deters the unscrupulous from incurring it, but it is cheap justice that destroys the litigious spirit. The practical advantage of which the writer speaks has no existence. The real tendency of costly proceedings is to deny justice to the poor, and to encourage the unscrupulous and the litigious to drag their adversary into a labyrinth where he is unwilling to follow them. The writer proceeds:—

"In theory it is as indefensible as would be arrangements for throwing the whole cost of the police, and of the administration of criminal justice, on rogues and their victims, the general public being exempt from any contribution. In the one case as in the other, it is not the parties whom circumstances actually force into court who alone benefit by the existence of the judge and magistrate, but Society at large."

There is some confusion here also. If it were possible for us to throw the whole cost of the police and of the administration of criminal justice on the 'rogues,' most persons, we think, would regard it as a very happy—indeed, an ideal—arrangement of things.

"The cost of the administration of criminal justice is however borne, and rightly borne, by the people at large: the costs of civil justice are thrown upon the unsuccessful litigant."

But Sir Richard Garth has shown in his minute that we positively make the litigants in our Indian civil courts defray the cost of administering criminal justice as well. What follows is unexceptionable:—

"But if I, being in no way concerned in any particular case, pay cheerfully for policeman and judge, in order that I may not be robbed or murdered; why should I not equally join in a general payment for the civil judge, in order that I may not be cheated? If I am not cheated it is entirely due to the existence of the civil courts that I escape, and for that protection I ought to pay as much as my less fortunate fellow-citizen; if I am cheated, why should I, in claiming the benefit of the protection the law affords to me, have to begin by making a special payment for it? These are questions I can put, but cannot answer."

All this is very forcibly put, and we hope the Chief Justice will take an opportunity of recurring to the subject. It is now sixteen years since Mr. P. Sreenavasa Row, the principal Sudder Amin of Vizagapatam, published his admirable protest against the new Stamp law as it was called, Act 26 of 1867.

"Unlike an income tax," said the writer, "which troubles the well-to-do citizen once a year, and is then forgotten, and unlike the Penal Code which torments only those who offend law and justice, the Stamp Act is a continually recurring cause of loss and harassment to the people, rich or poor, honest or dishonest. From the poverty-stricken cultivator to the rich zemindar, from the shepherd to the crafty sowcar who sports with litigation—all experience the scourge of the law, but it falls heaviest upon the poor and simple."

It is thirty years since Sir George Campbell in his "Modern India" called attention to the evil which has since received so serious a development, and declared our administration of justice to have brought about "a lamentable demoralisation of the people." Protest after protest has been recorded at intervals ever since, but without result, and the pursuit of justice in India to-day is more costly than ever it was. We can but call attention to the fact as often as it comes under our notice, and our consolation is that it is not without its effect on the final issue of things.

DRUNKENNESS ENCOURAGED BY GOVERNMENT

The London correspondent of the Indian Mirror writes:—

Mr. O'Donnell asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether it was true that the whole district of Alumdabad had been farmed to a single individual for the sale of spirits, who guaranteed to Government a minimum revenue from that source of Rs. 73,525, and whether such contract bound Government to afford the contractor every facility for the sale of spirits by licenses, and the keeping open of the spirit shops to a late hour, so that he may be able to pay the Government demand and recoup himself with profit.

The answer of Mr. J. K. Cross was that the usual arrangement for the introduction of the Sudder Distillery system had been made in Alumdabad, the holder of the distillery engaging to pay a still head duty of two rupees a gallon. Facilities were given to the contractor to sell the liquor, but that the number of shops was reduced since 1881. In 1879 35,000 gallons had been consumed, when the duty was one rupee and one anna per gallon, and 27,000 gallons in 1881, when the duty was two rupees.

The answer of Mr. Cross is an evasion, and Mr. O'Donnell is doing good service in bringing the matter before the Legislature.

A NATIVE SOLDIER SAVING THE LIFE OF A EUROPEAN OFFICER.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

ABOUT fifteen days ago, Lieutenant Campbell of the Guides, then quartered at Abazai, was paddling a canoe up stream beyond the fort, when he was accidentally upset by the rush of water in a rapid. On the canoe turning over, Mr. Campbell became entangled by the framework and a waterproof sheet that was over his legs; and when at last he extricated himself, he was almost exhausted for want of breath. He called out to some villagers on the bank, who took no notice of him. Luckily, however, Subadar Samandar Khan, of the Guide Corps, saw the predicament his officer was in and very pluckily plunged in to the rescue. He was just in time to seize Lieut. Campbell as he was sinking for the third time and contrived to assist him to the bank, where they were both helped out by the ferrymen. Lieutenant Campbell was insensible for nearly an hour, but eventually came to, and the next day was none the worse for his immersion. But for the prompt action of Subadar Samandar Khan, who is a fine old soldier, the young officer would inevitably have been drowned. It is to be hoped that the Subadar will be recommended for the Royal Humane Society's Medal.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

[From the Bombay Gazette, April 18.]

Major General Lucas, Royal (late Bombay) Artillery, unemployed list, is at present at Calcutta.

The services of Surgeon Major Boustead have been placed at the disposal of H. E. the Commander in Chief.

Major Bullock (M. S. C.), deputy commissioner, Amraoti District, has obtained three months' privilege leave.

Major E. P. Mainwaring, Bengal Staff Corps, 4th Ghorkas, is about to proceed to Europe on furlough for one year.

Lieutenant E. E. Hight, Bengal Staff Corps, wing officer, 1st Punjab Infantry, is proceeding on furlough to Europe.

Lieutenant R. W. Sanderson, 2nd Punjab Volunteer Rifle Corps, has been permitted to resign his commission.

Captain F. W. Begbie, adjutant, 1st Punjab Volunteer Rifle Corps, has been granted leave to visit Kashmere.

Lieutenant M. C. Barton, Royal Engineers, Bengal establishment, is about to proceed to England on furlough.

Six months' furlough to Europe on medical certificate has been granted to Brigadier-General Annesley, the Adjutant General.

Captain G. H. C. Dyce, 21st Punjab Native Infantry, will embark at Kurrachee about the 12th instant, on furlough to England.

Lieutenant F. T. Hall, Bombay Volunteer Rifles, Poona

Detachment, is about to resign his commission, he having been transferred to Burmah.

Colonel Bendyshe Walton, C.I.E., Bengal Staff Corps, who served as Commandant of the Calcutta Volunteer Rifle Corps, from 11th January, 1867, to 8th November, 1878, has been awarded a good-service pension, vice Lieutenant General A. Bunney, C.B., deceased. Colonel Walton has the medal and clasp for Gujerat, and also for the Relief of Lucknow, where he was severely wounded, mentioned in despatches and granted brevet of major; he was also employed against the hill tribes at Peshawur in 1851-52.

The services of Surgeon T. R. Mulrooney, M.D., Indian Medical Service, have been placed at the disposal of the Home Department for employment under the Punjab Government.

The Hospital Assistants class are to provide themselves, at their own cost with uniform, the estimated total cost of which is set down at Rs. 83-13-10. This amount is about 33 per cent in excess of a 1st Class Hospital Assistant's monthly salary.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—At a district court-martial held at Mean Meer on April 1, 1884, No. 1135, Private J. E. Leigh, 1st Battalion, East Lancashire Regiment, was charged with offering violence to his superior officer, Corporal G. H. Grant, at Mean Meer, on March 24, 1884. The court found the prisoner guilty of the charge, and sentenced him to be imprisoned with hard labour for two years. The sentence has been confirmed by General Hume, C.B., commanding the Lahore Division, who has remitted one year of the imprisonment awarded.—Private Robert Faulkner, 2nd Battalion, South Wales Borderers, was charged before a European district court-martial with striking Sergeant H. Kirby, his superior officer, while in the execution of his office, on board Her Majesty's Troopship Euphrates, on March 25. The court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to be imprisoned with hard labour for six months. Brigadier General S. Edwardes, commanding Bombay District, has confirmed the sentence.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE KIRWEE BOOTY.

Sir J. HAY asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the sum of £276,000, with interest, retained by the Indian Government, as proceeds of the movable estate of the captured ex-princes of Kirwee, and not yet distributed to the forces of the Crown, ought to be carried over to the Consolidated Fund under the Act 1 Vict. c. 2, sections 2 and 12, if not divided as prize-money to the troops; and whether, in reference to the payments to India, on account of the grant in aid of the Afghan War, he proposed to recover that sum from India for the public Exchequer.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: The money referred to by the gallant Admiral in the first part of his question, represents, I presume, the value of the promissory notes issued by the East India Company and held by the Raos of Kirwee. On the rebellion breaking out, the Indian Government, on the 9th of January, 1858, gave the usual notice that these notes, the numbers of which were known, had been stopped. The captors of the Raos claimed to have the value of these notes distributed as prize-money. The Indian Government refused, and it has been decided by the Board of Treasury, after hearing counsel in 1869, and subsequently in the Law Courts, that the captors' claim was inadmissible. The cancelled notes were never found by the capturing force and never formed part of the booty. They never passed into the possession of the Crown, nor has the Crown any right to them. I do not propose to take any steps to recover the amount from India.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Mr. GORST asked whether returns could be given showing the annual dates, since the transfer of the government of India to the Crown in 1858, of the migration of the Government of India from Calcutta to Simla, and the dates of its return to Calcutta, and the extra annual cost imposed upon the taxpayers of India in consequence of this annual migration of Government; also the ages of the respective members of the Indian Council, their professions, the length of time which each has resided or served in India, and the period which had in each case elapsed since the termination of such residence or service.

Mr. CROSS: There are no materials at the India Office which will enable me to give the first return asked for; but the question shall be submitted to the Government of India. The second return shall be presented if the hon. and learned member will move for it; and if he will consult me as to the form of the return, it shall be made as complete as possible.

THE MYSORE TERRITORY.

Mr. J. M'CARTHY asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether the Madras officials, who were concessionnaires gold yielding land, conceded on advantageous terms to them by the British Resident of Mysore during the Regency of the Rajah, continued to receive their pensions and salaries; and, if so, whether this was in accordance with the rulings of the Secretary of State's despatches, No. 22, November 25, 1862, and No. 17, of July 9, 1863, categorically prohibiting civil and military officers from holding land in the Mysore territory.

Mr. J. K. CROSS said: The Government of India some months ago directed that the three officers connected with the Mysore concession who are still in the service should at once sever such connection. They do not, however, think it necessary to go further than this, having no doubt that these officers acted in the bona fide belief that they were not contravening the orders of the Government in acquiring their shares in the concession. As regards retired officers concerned in the matter, Government has no ground for interfering with their pensions. The papers explaining in more detail the views of the Government of India and of the Secretary of State are now complete; and if the hon. member will move for them they shall be presented.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

THE KIRWEE PRIZE MONEY.

Sir W. BARTHELOTT asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether high legal opinions had declared that the sum of £276,000 and other funds realised from securities and jewels of the enemy and retained by the Indian Government were distributable as proceeds of the capture of Kirwee and its chiefs; whether any judicial decision or dictum in any law courts had overruled those opinions; whether the Treasury Board, when it decided in May, 1869, that those moneys were not booty within the meaning of a certain Indian proclamation, was aided by legal assessors or founded its decision on any judicial precedent; and whether the Treasury Board retained any jurisdiction in matters of prize booty since the passing of Lord Cottenham's Act, 3 and 4 Vict., c. 65, s. 22, which was framed to abolish this jurisdiction.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: In reply to my gallant friend's last question I may say that the section of Lord Cottenham's Act to which he refers only empowers the Court of Admiralty to decide questions relating to booty of war when they are referred by Her Majesty in Council to its judgment, and without in any respect taking away from the Board of Treasury the power of returning such answer as it may deem fit to petitions addressed to it. The Board of Treasury, therefore, was acting within its powers in hearing and adjudicating upon the claims of the captors of Kirwee as against the Secretary of State for India in Council in May, 1869. I may mention that these claims had no reference to funds realised from "jewels," the proceeds of which, and of similar property, were distributed as prize. The captors on their part, dissatisfied with the decision of the Treasury, brought an action in the Court of Chancery against the Secretary for India, who demurred to their petition on the ground that it rested with him as trustee for Her Majesty to declare that property taken in war should be treated as booty, and distributed as a matter of grace and favour among the captors. Vice-Chancellor Hall overruled the demurrer, but his ruling was reversed by the Court of Appeal, and the House of Lords, on May 19, 1882, upheld the decision of the Court of Appeal. It is not usual to state publicly how far the Treasury is guided by legal opinion in making its decisions; but I may say that it was not without consultation with the most eminent legal authorities and the fullest examination of precedents that the Board arrived at its decision in 1869.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson's Overland Circular of May 1 says:—In the produce markets the business has been of moderate extent since the last mail, and although the tone is flat, prices generally have not experienced further depression. The recent heavy fall upon coffee has at length caused a better demand, and to-day the quotations of East India show 2s. to 4s. recovery from the lowest point. Upon plantation Ceylon the rise is about the same, or even more for bold qualities of both. Rio has been steady. Costa Rica of the new crop has partly found buyers at previous rates to an advance for color and fine. There is an improvement in the deliveries here, but the stock continues very large. The Netherlands Trading Company declare 111,464 bags, 5½ cases Java for their sale on the 7th inst., including about 90,000 bags of ordinary qualities, against a total of 106,000 bags bags last year. Good ordinary valued about 28 cents. By telegram from Batavia dated the 22nd ult., the Government crop is estimated at 916,000 piculs. The Havre and New York markets appear more settled than of late. Burmah rice, to arrive per steamer, has sold at firm rates. The sugar market is depressed, with a downward tendency. Importers have accepted very low rates for a few cargoes Java off the coast, and transactions on the spot are chiefly in crystallised Demerara, the lower qualities of which show a further slight decline, while good to fine grocery maintain a relatively firm position. Beet sugar shows weakness, and is lower than hitherto quoted. Refiners have accepted some further decline upon stored goods. China tea is without alteration, a moderate amount of business being done during the week. There is a strong market for Indian tea, with prices rather dearer. Nothing of interest has transpired in West India cocoa. In the spice markets, black pepper is firmer, on account of renewed speculative operations for arrival, and an advance now required. At the public sales Singapore white went at fully previous rates. Cochin ginger has met with steady buyers at the late decline. At the public sales of cinnamon on Monday there was a very small supply, the quantity or Ceylon sold being under 100 bales, but at firmer rates. The Tellicherry was chiefly bought in.

TEA.—From Messrs. Hawes and Hertz's Fortnightly Indian, Ceylon, and Java Report.—Business was resumed after Easter on the 17th ult., since when sales have been comparatively heavy. A decidedly better feeling has been noticeable throughout, and a more general disposition to buy, which has resulted in an advance in value of all the more desirable kinds. Deliveries are reported to be hardly satisfactory, but this is probably due to the holidays intervening.

SUGAR.—There have not been any sales in West India, and the market continues very depressed. Beet is offered upon further reduced terms. In the Clyde market prices are dull. The following is M. Bertrand Silz's report, dated Paris, April 30:—"The rain which has fallen since last Sunday has given new vigour to the 'bears,' who through their numerous offers have lowered prices. The discouraging reports from the United Kingdom have also helped to throw an unfavourable aspect over things, and the situation is also taken advantage of in order to replace them on forward terms. In this way 'bears' are helped to cover their sales for this month's delivery, and they also find it easy to depress the market. As uncovered sales are very important, and as refiners are, notwithstanding the very easy sale of their produce, almost bare of stock, the least unexpected event would entirely modify the present state of things."

A FEAT OF TELEGRAPHY.—We have often heard of the wonderful line between this country and Teheran, the capital of Persia, a distance of 3,800 miles, but we scarcely realised the fact that good signals were obtainable through so great a length of wire until recently, when we availed ourselves of an invitation from Mr. W. Andrews, the managing director of the Indo-European Telegraph Company, to make a visit of inspection. It was between seven and eight on Sunday evening, April 13, when we reached the office. In the basement of an unpretentious building in Old Broad-street we were shown the Morse printer in connection with the main line from London to Teheran. The courteous clerk in charge of the wire, Mr. Blagrove, informed us that we were through to Emden, and with the same ease with which one wires from the City to the West-end, we asked a few questions of the telegraphist in the German town. When we had finished with Emden, we spoke with the same facility to the gentleman on duty at Odessa. This did not satisfy us, and in a few seconds we were through to the Persian capital (Teheran). There were no messages about, the time was favourable, and the employees of the various countries seemed anxious to give us an opportunity of testing the capacity of this wonderful line. T. H. N. (Teheran) said "Oafi Kurrahee," and in less time than it takes to write these words we gained the attention of the Indian town. The signals were good, and our speed must have equalled fifteen words a minute. The operator at Kurrahee, when he learnt that London was speaking to him, thought it would be a good opportunity to put us through to Agra, and to our astonishment the signals did not fail, and we chatted pleasantly for a few minutes with Mr. Malcom Khan, the clerk on duty. To make this triumph of telegraphy complete, Agra switched us on to another line, and we were soon talking to a native telegraphist at the Indian Government Cable Station, Calcutta. At first the gentleman "at the other end of the wire" could not believe that he was really in direct communication with the English capital, and he exclaimed in Morse language, "Are you really London?" Truly this was a great achievement. Metallic communication without a break from 18, Old Broad-street, London, to the telegraph office in Calcutta! 7,000 miles of wire! The signals were excellent, and the speed attained was not less than twelve, perhaps fourteen, words per minute.—Telegraphist.

TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1884.

THE RUSSIAN ANNEXATION OF SARAKHS,
THE CROWN OF MR. GLADSTONE'S POLICY.

Just as we go to press, the astounding news is telegraphed from St. Petersburg that Russia has obtained from Persia the cession—or, at least, the recognition of Russian possession—of Sarakhs! And further, we learn that Sarakhs—which is virtually the frontier post of Afghanistan, and dominates Herat—is to be made the capital of a new Russian province, that of the Tejend or Hari-Rud, the river of Herat!

It will be remembered that when Merv was annexed by Russia the other day, the apologists of the Gladstone Government declared that "Mervousness" was obsolete because Sarakhs had taken the place that formerly, belonged to Merv as the key of Afghanistan and India.

It remains to be seen, now that Sarakhs too has gone the way of Merv, what excuse for British scuttling will be invented by a Government that is a disgrace to the British name, and whose imbecility threatens the most serious dangers to the British Empire. We must defer further comment until some more details have been received of this last achievement of Mr. Gladstone's policy.

A REFORM FOR INDIA.

In this age of reforms, it seems a pity that, while much energy is bestowed on matters of minor importance, real and serious evils should be going on unnoticed. One of such evils, viz., the bad road system of Bengal, it is proposed here to point out, together with its cause and proper remedy.

The evil is two-fold, and may be shortly, if rudely described as the strangling of traffic, and robbery of local road funds. It is in the system; and if, in some parts of Bengal it has not yet shown itself, that must be either because traffic has not yet been developed, or because Nature has provided ample means in the shape of water ways or other advantages.

What is meant by the strangling of traffic may be better understood by means of an example than by a general description. The example will be taken from Hooghly district, which is known to the writer, is advanced among Bengal districts, has large trade, and has been described by a high authority as well provided with roads. The example chosen is the Tarkeshwar road, because it was of such undoubted importance that a railway has been made to serve exactly the same district.

This road runs from Sarafoolly station of the East Indian Railway on the East to Tarkeshwar on the West, a distance of about twenty-two miles. The Eastern half is metalled with broken stone to a width of eight feet; the Western half is unmetalled, with a soft surface of mud or sand. The population depending on it chiefly for communication with the railway, is over a hundred thousand.

The road has the following defects:—

(a) The narrow metalled way cannot stand long without repair, and, when it has to be repaired, must be blocked completely. It has been blocked for weeks at a time more than once within the last few years.

(b) The soft portion goes into dust in dry weather, and into mire in wet. In wet weather wheeled traffic cannot pass over it, and the wet season last three months every year.

(c) The road is twenty-two miles long, yet the District Committee maintains only about three feeders in all, unmetalled and ill-kept, though the railway is to have a station every three miles.

The road, then, is metalled eight feet wide for half its length only, and has almost no feeders. It ought to be metalled twenty feet wide, all its length, and to have a feeder on each side every mile. Traffic is first kept from the road by want of feeders, and then smothered in the dust, mire, and blocks on the road itself. Such a process may well be described as strangling.

But for the chance of private enterprise having proposed to make a railway, this road would now be in the condition described above, without hope of remedy. There are many other roads in about as bad a condition with almost as pressing need of relief, but without much prospect of it. The strangling process is going on all over Hooghly District.

The examples of robbery of local road-funds will be taken from the same district. Police District Kistanagar has an area of about seventy-five square miles; a population of over 50,000, and pays in road rates about 5,500 rupees yearly. The District Road Committee maintains within this area only about four miles of district road, which cannot cost 200 rupees yearly, and there is a yearly grant for "village roads" (to be distributed at discretion) of about 500 rupees more. So this large district gets barely an eighth of its funds for its own uses.

The Tarkeshwar road runs along the south bank of the Kamna River. On the north bank a block of some eighty square miles might be marked out on the map, with a population of some 60,000, and paying road cess of about 6,000 rupees, within which not a mile of district road is maintained by the Road Committee, and which does not get back a twelfth of its road rates for any purpose whatever. There are other large areas of ten, twenty, and fifty square miles to be found in the district which has the same grievance.

As the ratepayers of these large areas are deprived of the benefit of their road-rates against their will, it seems hardly unreasonable to describe the system under which this is done as robbery.

Having the evil, we have next to search out the cause, and that is not far to seek. It is that two essential principles have been departed from. These are:—

1. Spend on roads as long as the return exceeds the cost.

2. Let those who get the return bear the cost of maintaining the roads.

As to the former principles, of course, the balance on the side of returns should always be as great as possible.

If the former principle were attended to, we should not find the traffic strangled; if the latter, we should not find local road funds robbed. If all were right, we should not find local funds robbed to prevent the strangling of traffic, and yet, after all, the attempt failing through shortness of funds.

It is not want of money in the country that causes the shortness of funds. If the country were so poor, all the more need to spend on roads, for money judiciously spent on roads produces wealth as surely as seed judiciously sown, produces grain. But where there is money to support a railway, there has, surely, long been wealth enough to support a good road.

In defence of the existing state of things, the following argument is used:—

It is the rule now, that all roads must be rate-supported. The whole fund available for roads in a district is, therefore, the road cess, a rate on land. Where this is, as in Hooghly district, levied at the highest legal rate, the limit of the fund has been reached. If there is not enough for all roads, both great and small, some must be neglected, and if so the small must yield. Without the great roads they are useless, while without them the great roads may be of some use.

High authorities have said that twice or three times the amount of the present fund might be spent yearly with advantage in Hooghly district. Some look for relief in the construction of railways and tramways; but those can thrive in few places. Some would raise the legal maximum road rate, but, seeing how the road fund is now spent, that would be unjust and would be bitterly opposed. Some would bow to the evil, persuaded by the arguments that it cannot be helped.

But, if the argument is sound, and yet its result in practice is evil, something must be wrong with its foundation. If it be examined, the whole argument is found to depend on the rule, "All roads must be rate-supported." Because this has been taken for granted, there is no remedy for the evil.

Why has the rule become so firmly established in Bengal? It is one of those things whose truth should have been proved by experience. Experience in Bengal has proved it to be a bad rule. What says the experience of England? There the problem of roads has been fairly well solved; and to England the advocates of "rates alone" refer as an example of the sound principle of the established system in Bengal.

A road is a fixed means of cheapening transport. Railways, canals, bridges, harbours, are all forms of roads, besides what we call roads. The order of development in England was first parish roads, then turnpike roads, then canals, and railways.

Parish and municipal roads have always been maintained by rates; turn-pike roads, canals, and railways, some bridges, and most harbours, by tolls or dues. The characteristic of rate-supported roads is that they serve a small area, and cost little to keep up; of toll-supported roads, that they are of wider usefulness, and are costly to maintain. Rates and tolls help one another, and each has its place in the system.

When the road costs little to make, when it is used by the people of a small area, then to each of these it is much easier to pay down once for all as much as may be necessary for his share in keeping up the road, rather than to pay a small sum each time he uses it. Tolls would also in such a case be more difficult and costly to collect, swallowing too great a share of the income. In England, there is from a mile and a half to a mile and three quarters of district road for every square mile of area. This means that the road rates are laid out near where they are raised. We find no such blank spaces as those in Hooghly district described above, which pay rates, and get no return. Every neighbour pays rates, and there are roads in every neighbourhood.

When the road serves a large area, it is difficult to assess rates according to the benefit received; where the road is costly to maintain, the ratepayers will grudge the expense. Owing to these two reasons all roads which are useful to wide areas, and which cost large sums to maintain, have been maintained by means of tolls, and not out of rates. Before the days of railways turnpike roads, maintained by tolls, were the great thoroughfares for through traffic. Turnpike roads are still in use, though not nearly so much as before. In England and Wales during 1882, the income of turnpike trusts from tolls was £135,000.

22. It has been said that roads in England formerly supported by tolls have been thrown on the rates because the principle of rate-supported roads had superseded the principle of tolls. All that has happened, however, is this, that, owing to the introduction of railways, change of trade routes, and other causes, many roads which used to serve large areas, and which cost much to maintain, now serve small areas, and cost little to maintain. The same principle which required them to be maintained by tolls before requires them to be maintained out of the rates now. Tolls are still paid, but chiefly on the railways. More than half of the £66,000,000 yearly paid at the 5,400 railway stations in the United Kingdom, which are the chief modern toll-bars, goes for the construction and maintenance of the permanent way, and is in all strictness a turnpike toll.

The principle of tolls is fully recognised in practice in Bengal, except as regards what we call roads. Railways, canals, tramways, bridges, ferries, and markets are all maintained by tolls. If the principle had been extended to ordinary roads there should have been a toll on the Tarkeshwar road, for it serves a great area, and every mile of the metalled road costs the road cess of ten square miles to maintain.

There was a toll levied for the maintenance of this road, but it was abolished. Had it been retained, the contributions of the traffic would have been enough to keep the road in good order, and local areas would have had their own rates for their own use.

Thus, the negative experience of Bengal, and the positive experience of England, alike show that there are works which rates are not so well-fitted to do as tolls. The evils pointed out above can plainly be traced to persistence in employing the rates for work which they are unfit for. This evil is all the more glaring in India where roads have to do much of that work which is done by railways in England, but without the tolls on which railways depend for support.

The remedy for the evil has been pretty plainly hinted at already. It is first to withdraw all road rates from employment on general work, and to restore the funds to their proper duty of making and maintaining local roads. This would put an end to such scandals as have been pointed out above, of large districts paying road cess year after year, and getting no return.

Next, for maintaining such roads as are of general use, are too costly for the local rates to support, tolls should be established. The rate-made roads would act as feeders to those turnpike roads which in many places might in the end be replaced by railways.

To the principle of toll there can be no objection in Bengal. When traffic can be transported as cheaply without roads as with them, men may grumble at spending money on roads. When rates can be assessed over large areas according to benefits received, and ratepayers give cheerfully many times the present rates which they grudge, then tolls will cease to be a useful means of obtaining money for maintaining roads which are of general use and great cost.

To the working of tolls in Bengal objections have been made. It is said that their collection gives openings to extortion, but that is equally true of the collection of rates. It is said that they discourage traffic, but they do not discourage traffic nearly so much as the strangling that goes on now for want of them. By separating the toll funds, by careful management, and by strictly spending the whole fund on the road which pays it, tolls could be made into a harmless and useful institution.

For constructing roads which might afterwards be maintained by tolls a Government grant might very properly be given. Roads are the chief educators, the best famine insurance; they cheapen and make more efficient police and justice, they cheapen goods and encourage trade, they awaken new industries, and relieve the land of the heavy pressure which it is now ill able to bear. Every work for which public money is now spent is most efficiently forwarded by good roads.

Major A. D. Campbell, Staff Corps, general duty, Fort William, on promotion to lieutenant colonel, has accepted leave out of India, and sailed from Calcutta on the 5th April.

THE WOKING INSTITUTE.

[FROM AN OCCASIONAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

A FEW days ago we called attention to the foundation of an Oriental Institute at Woking, created for the purpose of providing a centre of Oriental scholarship in England, and for enabling Hindus, Sikhs, and Mahomedans to reside in this country and to prosecute their studies without contracting any social taint, or doing violence to those caste or religious sentiments which are cherished by the mass of Indian Society. Hitherto it has been impossible for Indians of tender conscience to visit England from the difficulty of residing here, or of even reaching this country, without abandoning the sacred and semi-sacred usages which it has been repeatedly proved they would rather die than sacrifice. Hence, up to the present time, all the advantages to be derived from studying in the very centre of scientific life in London has been monopolised by the few Indians who have been content to face social ostracism, and to throw in their lot with the ruling race. These men are not always the best of their kind; for, among a choice few of exalted intellect who rise superior to national prejudice, there is always a painfully large percentage of reckless or designing men, who adopt the new ideas for self-interested motives. Certain it is that such men forfeit the respect of their countrymen by abandoning their caste usages, and when they return to India are unable to exercise that influence for good which their education and experience would entitle them to wield. Specially valuable, then, must be an institution which will enable every Indian who desires it to visit England, and to gain all the benefits which such a visit cannot fail to confer, and to do this without forfeiting the good opinion of his compatriots. To Dr. G. W. Leitner is due the praise for making this possible, by purchasing the Royal Dramatic College and its extensive grounds at Woking, and fitting the place up for the reception of worthy Indian gentlemen. Each resident is to be provided with separate water-supply, bathing and cooking conveniences, and every other requisite for the preservation of caste; and it is the intention of the founder to charge no rent whatever for the use of the premises. Generosity can no further go than this; and it may confidently be anticipated that many wealthy Easterns will be proud to associate themselves with such a noble enterprise by contributing to the support of an institution so directly beneficial to their co-religionists.

The full name of the institute is the Punjab Oriental University, Museum, and Guest House, and it is so called, because the first conception of such an institution originated with the Anjuman-i-Punjab. It is designed to act as a European branch of the Punjab University—the only Oriental university in the world—and to carry on the work of that body in England, by conducting examinations (just as some examinations of the London University are conducted in the Colonies) for the degrees of Bachelor, Master, and Doctor of Oriental learning, and for the diplomas of high proficiency and honours in Oriental languages, literatures, and laws, corresponding with the various grades of Maulavi, Qazi, Pandit, Munshi, Bhai, and other Oriental examinations adapted to various parts of the East. The institution will correspond with the Oriental Societies of Europe, and with European philologists, and obtain and give aid in the development of Oriental learning. Should sufficient funds be forthcoming, it is also intended to train Europeans and Natives of good family for professional or official careers in the East, by means of a staff of resident professors. It is anticipated from these arrangements, if support be found for carrying them out, that many of the difficulties hitherto experienced by Europeans in dealing with Orientals, and vice versa, will be removed by the accurate knowledge of each other's languages and sentiments which will thus be gained and the mutual respect engendered.

The Museum, which it is proposed to form, will illustrate various parts of the East, and more especially the useful arts, manufactures, and products of the Punjab; with the view of stimulating commerce between England and that province. It is proposed to buy up the whole of the exhibits sent from the Punjab to the recent Calcutta Exhibition, and to add this valuable collection to those in the possession of the founder, which are of singular rarity and completeness, and to invite contributions in kind, such as specimens of workmanship, from others willing to add to what cannot fail of becoming an important and interesting display of the produce and industries of India.

Our Eastern Empire has good reason to be proud of the able man who has so energetically and generously laboured for the welfare and enlightenment of the people, and whose constant desire it has been to promote feelings of mutual respect and esteem between Europeans and Indians, and to strengthen the hands of Government in every act tending to the peace and tranquillity of the country and the contentment of the people. It can safely be predicted that the name of Dr. G. W. Leitner will long live in the hearts of the people of India as that of one of their ablest friends, and that he will long be remembered in Europe for his great abilities and for the generous use he has ever made of them."

HOME NEWS.

OBITUARY.—Sir Edward Clive Bayley, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., died on Wednesday, at Wilmington Lodge, Keymer, Sussex, aged sixty-two. He was the last surviving son of the late Mr. Edward Clive Bayley, of St. Petersburg, by his marriage with Margaret, daughter of Mr. James Fenton, and grandson of the late Mr. Thomas Butterworth Bayley, of Hope Hall, Lancashire. He was educated at Haileybury College. In 1841, he entered the Bengal Civil Service, and after passing through the several grades of the executive and judicial services, became, in 1861, officiating secretary of the Government of India in the Foreign Department. In the following year he was nominated Home Secretary to the Government of India. He was an ordinary member of the Supreme Council of the Viceroy of India from 1873 to 1877, and was President of the Indian Council from August to September in the latter year. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in Trinity Term, 1857, and was Vice Chancellor of the University of Calcutta from 1869 to 1874. He was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of the Star of India in 1877. Sir Edward Bayley married, in 1850, Emily Anne Theophilus, eldest daughter of the late Sir Thomas Theophilus Metcalfe.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—A special general meeting of this Company was held on Monday April 28, at the Guildhall Tavern, Mr. J. Farley Leith, Q.C., presiding, to consider a bill vesting the company's undertaking in the Secretary of State for India in Council. The solicitor having read the provisions of the bill, the chairman reminded them of the continued prosperity which the company had enjoyed. The Secretary of State for India had decided to exercise the option given to purchase the undertaking at the expiration of the first twenty-five years of the lease of ninety-nine years which had been granted to the company. The price to be paid was to be based on the average market price of the stock in three years preceding the notice of purchase, and from an estimate which had been made by the directors, the average price in the period mentioned had been £150 6s. 3d. per £100 of stock. There was a dispute as to one day in this calculation, but the matter had been referred to an eminent Queen's Counsel, who had decided in favour of the company. He (the chairman) had no doubt that the amount mentioned would be the sum paid to them. The Government had decided to pay the purchase price in annuities, which would be divided into two classes, A and B, the former receiving the full amount of the annuities, the latter participating, less the amount to be set aside for sinking fund to cover the capital at the expiration of the period of ninety-nine years, of which there were seven-three years to run from June 30 next. The purchase money gave a trifle more than 6 per cent. on the £100 stock, and the £150 to be received in the shape of annuities would give a little over 4 per cent. With regard to the B annuitants, allowing for the sinking fund, they would receive 3½ per cent. The object of the B annuities was to enable trustees to hold. In the course of the discussion which followed, several shareholders expressed a desire to have an opportunity of reading the Bill. The opinion was expressed that the Government ought to pay the expenses attending the distribution of the annuities. The chairman having moved a resolution approving the bill, an amendment was proposed, with the approval of the chairman, adjourning the meeting to Monday next. The amendment was carried.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 35,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—In bills on Calcutta, Rs. 29,000, average rate, 1s. 78½d., and on Bombay, Rs. 85,000, average rate, 1s. 77½d.; in telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 9,20,000, average rate, 1s. 78½d., and Bombay, Rs. 10,25,000, average rate, 1s. 78½d., making a total of Rs. 20,59,000. Tenders for bills on both Presidencies at 1s. 7¾d. and above, and for telegraphic transfers at 1s. 7 13-16d. and above, will receive in full. From the commencement of the financial year till Tuesday night remittances for Rs. 1,82,30,000 had been sold, realising £1,502,852. The amount to be offered next Wednesday is to be reduced to 30 lakhs.

INDIA THREE-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. DEBENTURES.—The Secretary of State in India, in Council gives notice, with reference to the advertisement dated the 6th ultimo, that the whole of the £5,000,000 therein offered, has been applied for, in accordance with the terms of that advertisement, by holders of the like amount of Indian Four per Cent. Debentures falling due on the 16th of August next.

CLAN FORBES AND MALWA COLLISION.—In the House of Lords, on Friday, before Lords Blackburn, Watson, and Fitzgerald, the hearing of the appeal by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, from a decision of the Court of Appeal, was concluded. The action arose out of a collision which took place in November, 1882, between the Clan Forbes (s) and the Malwa (s) at Suez, near the entrance to the canal. The Court of Appeal held the Malwa, belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, entirely at fault, and the House of Lords has affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal, holding the Clan Forbes free of all blame.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The programme of the season, commencing on May Day, has been issued. The directors refer to the International Exhibition, which will continue open. Arrangements have been made to light the interior of the Palace by electricity. The dramatic performances will be resumed at intervals up to the middle of August. There will be several great choral concerts, popular fêtes, firework displays, and flower and fruit shows, together with many special entertainments.

THE SILVER MARKETS AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

MONDAY.—The bar silver brought by the Para from the West Indies has been sold at 51d. per oz. for India, while 50d. was paid for the Mexican dollars which came to hand by the same vessel. The demand for coined silver was strong, and at the advance of ¼d., compared with the last business price, the whole remittance offered was bought for China. The Calcutta telegraphic transfer rate is rather easier at 1s. 7 27-32d., Bombay remaining at 1s. 7¾d. China rates for four months' bills are, however, firm at 3s. 8¾d. in Hongkong and 5s. 1¼d. in Shanghai, Rupee Paper is unchanged at 82½ 82½ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 79¾ 80 for the Four per Cents.

TUESDAY.—There has been scarcely any business in the Silver Market, recent arrivals of bars and dollars having already been purchased. Prices of both kinds of the metal were reported this evening at 51d. and 50d. per ounce respectively. Some fresh remittances of uncoined silver are expected shortly from Brazil as well as from Chili. Rupee Paper and all Eastern exchange rates are unaltered.

WEDNESDAY.—The Indian exchange rates being weaker at 1s. 7¾d., the price of bar silver has declined to 50¾d. per ounce standard. The Araucania, from Chili, has brought about £50,000 worth, but none of this has been disposed of, and the above price is almost nominal. No business has been done in Mexican dollars, but their price has fallen in sympathy with bars to 49¾d. per ounce. China exchange quotations remain at 5s. 1¼d. in Shanghai and 3s. 8¾d. in Hongkong, and Rupee Paper is unaltered at 82½ 82½ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 79¾ 80 for the Four per Cents.

THURSDAY.—Rather a large amount of business has been done in bar silver to-day, but as the parcels offered exceeded £80,000 in value, a further reduction of 1-16d. in the price had to be submitted to. At 50 13-16d. per ounce the whole of the arrivals per Araucania and Holbein found buyers on Indian account. No transactions have been reported in Mexican dollars, which are nominally quoted at 49¾d. per ounce. The Eastern exchange rates are all unaltered. Rupee Paper continues firm, the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. more especially. These are now quoted at 82½ 82½, and the Four per Cents. at 79¾ 80. The India Council have sold six-and-a-half lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Bombay at 1s. 7 13-16d. per rupee.

FRIDAY.—The Indian exchange rates are easier at 1s. 723-32d., and bar silver has consequently receded 1-16d. to 50¾d. per ounce. At that price some amounts were again bought for India. Mexican dollars are still quoted at 49¾d., and business in them has been quiet. The demand for Rupee Paper continues, and the market closed firm. The Four-and-a-Half and Four per Cents. are quoted at 82½ 82½ and 80 80¼ respectively. China rates of exchange are unaltered.

SATURDAY.—An arrival of bar silver, valued at about £47,000, per Handel, was offered on Saturday, but did not find any buyers. The market, in fact, was paralysed by the announcement of the suspension of the Oriental Bank, and no actual quotations are obtainable for either bar silver or Mexican dollars. All Eastern exchange rates are unaltered. Rupee Paper has not suffered by the disaster which was so extensively discussed to-day, there being at the close a demand for both the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. and Four per Cents., which are again quoted at 82½ 82½ and 80 80¼ respectively.

MONDAY.—After having been thoroughly disorganised on Saturday, the Silver Market has resumed the appearance it presented on Friday. The refined bars which were consigned by the Handel have been purchased for India at 50¾d. per ounce. Mexican dollars are still wanted for China, but there being none here to be disposed of, business in them has been at a standstill. Indian rates for telegraphic transfers are firm at 1s. 7 13-16d., owing to the dearth of money on the other side, but there is still no alteration in the exchange advices sent from China. Rupee Paper keeps firm at 82½ 82½ for the Four-and-a-half, and 80 80¼ for the Four per Cent.

"Amateur Gardening for Town and Country," the first number of which has just appeared, is an attractive illustrated periodical, well edited, and embracing topics relating to the home garden, villa farm, poultry yard, and housekeeper's room. As a popular weekly journal, published at a penny "Amateur Gardening" bids fair to meet with a hearty reception.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA." A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing FORTNIGHTLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt, grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

CHLORODYNE

COLDS, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, on dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 36 & 38, Russell St., W.G.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria. IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 36 & 38, Russell St., W.G.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, April 24; Madras and Allahabad, April 23; Calcutta, April 22.

In our issue of May 6, we commented somewhat severely on a statement attributed to Lord Kimberley, in his Lordship's reply to the deputation regarding the limits of age for admission to the Indian Civil Service. From the published reports of that reply, the impression was conveyed to our mind that Lord Kimberley had represented Lord Lytton as having been, during his Viceroyalty, somewhat opposed to the extended employment of natives in important positions in the Civil Service. We were aware, from personal knowledge, that the exact reverse was the truth—and that no Viceroy had ever laboured so earnestly, or done so much, in this direction; and we were accordingly indignant at what appeared a shameful misrepresentation. We are, now, however, able to state, on indispensable authority, that Lord Kimberley never said anything of the kind. His lordship, in reply to Mr. Lalmoohan Ghose, stated that he was aware of the existence of certain correspondence on the subject between the Government of India and the India Office; but he said nothing whatever to justify the false impression that he was of opinion that Lord Lytton had been in any way hostile to the extended employment of Natives in high and responsible positions in the services of the State.

We are glad to observe that the Englishman takes precisely the same views as that more than once expressed in these columns, on the suggested Commission of inquiry on the Bengal Tenancy Bill. Our contemporary says:—

"We are informed that the Lieutenant Governor desires to appoint a Commission to go through the country and examine into the probable results of the proposed Rent Bill in each district. The news is good news if the scope of the Commission is to examine minutely into the circumstances of each district to openly record evidence, and to examine those who are interested one way or another—if in fact it is to be a Commission like the Indigo Commission of 1860-1. If, on the other hand, its operations are to be confined to hurried visits to head-quarter stations, and to consultations with a few persons, to be selected by the Commission itself, it is to be feared the results will not be such as to throw light upon the very vexed question which now agitates the country. What we have steadily advocated is a Commission of the nature which we are told is about to be appointed; but we have no less strenuously urged that its inquiries should be very minute and searching. The Indigo Commission forms an excellent pattern upon which such a Commission might work. But very little is known by the great mass of the public as to the condition of the rural community. On the one hand we are assured that the ryots are a down-trodden and oppressed race; on the other we are informed that they are the masters, and the landlords the serfs. The truth probably lies between the two statements. The present is a fitting time to examine the question and to base legislation upon that examination. If this be carefully and diligently done, and if every opportunity is given to both sides to show what the real condition of things is, we are confident that the Rent Bill will be so altered that its authors will renounce it as a changeling, and no child of theirs. We trust that inquiries will not be confined to officials, nor yet to zemindars."

THE petition to the House of Lords of the London Committee against the Bengal Tenancy Bill has been presented by the Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon, and another petition from the same body to the House of Commons has been presented by the Hon. Edward Stanhope, M.P. We trust that these petitions will receive the attention they deserve, both on account of the importance of their subject and because of the exceptional experience and knowledge of the Anglo-Indian gentlemen whose signatures they bear.

THE Indian papers to hand by this mail bear ample witness to the sensation produced in India by the annexation of the Merv territory by Russia. We have still to receive the papers referring to the still more important advance to Sarakhs.

THE St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times thus comments on Lord Granville's feeble profession of ignorance about the Sarakhs business, under date of May 8:—

"The explanation of Lord Granville in the House of Lords on the subject of the Russian acquisition of Sarakhs has been telegraphed to St. Petersburg, and in the summary of it given by the Press, his Lordship is reported to have stated that the rumour of the cession of Sarakhs to Russia has not been confirmed. This rumour, it needs to be repeated, was a positive statement made by the official gazette of the Caucasus, published at Tiflis, on the eve of Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff's departure for the Transcaspian region, and has not yet been contradicted officially. In any case there is no doubt in the minds of those who are familiar with the matter, and who regard it from a practical point of view, that sooner or later Sarakhs is to be considered Russian, and this is confirmed by the new frontier line drawn on the new edition of the Russian staff map of Central Asia, marked "Revised up to 1884." This map, which has only just been republished, clearly shows that the Russian boundary, after leaving Luftabad to Persia, completely cuts off the Attok and Sarakhs from the Shah's dominions. No maps of this region, it is true, can be trusted for accuracy, and in addition to this it is, of course, argued that the one in question is not official, although published by the cartographers of the General Staff. The explanation which it is expected here will be given on the subject, and which has possibly already been vouchsafed, will no doubt turn upon the point of there being two Sarakhs—the ruins of old Sarakhs on the left bank of the Tejdend, and new Sarakhs on the right. The Russians have possibly only acquired old Sarakhs; but the Kavkas newspaper stated that the Sarakhs ceded to Russia by the new frontier convention with Persia, on whichever side of the river it may be, was to be evacuated shortly by the Persian garrison. There can, therefore, hardly be any difference in this distinction, practically considered. It very much resembles the absurd mistakes and misunderstandings in regard to the difference between Koshut Khan Kali and Merv on the occasion of the Russian entry into the latter so-called "stronghold." General Komaroff in his telegram stated that he had a skirmish with the Tekkes of Fort Koshut Khan Kali on the road to Merv, whereas Koshut Khan Kali is the fortress of Merv itself. As a Russian observed to me to-day, 'There is no such city as Merv, it is a term applied to the whole region.' The cession of Sarakhs can hardly make any trouble between England and Russia, in the present accommodating temper of both Governments. And if Russia did promise not to take Sarakhs, she did not refuse to accept the session of it by Persia on the terms of a properly concluded convention, such as the Kavkas has recently mentioned. The amiable reply of the Russian Foreign Office to the English Note on the subject of Merv, published in the Allgemeine Zeitung, is on the whole, correct."

THIS week's telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times contains material for very grave reflection, in connection with this same subject. It appears that the Indian Daily News has unearthed a very serious intrigue, started by an anonymous Englishman, and carried on by two Parsis; in which an attempt is to be made to get up a native agitation "to strengthen the Viceroy's hands" against Lord Kimberley.

Now that the life of Lord Ripon's former Private Secretary, the heroic Gordon, is hanging in the balance at Khartoum, we trust that His Excellency's voice has been added to the general chorus of the English nation, in crying shame on the miserable Government that has betrayed and deserted the faithful soldier whose wonderful self-sacrifice served to keep Mr. Gladstone in power. Even the French workmen sends twenty francs from Lyons "à joindre à la souscription pour secourir le défenseur de Khartoum"—whose betrayal is worthy, he says, "ni de l'Angleterre ni de sa vieille réputation." As Lady Burdett-Coutts writes to the Times, "The English nation has sprung to its feet and, moved by a spirit akin to his own, is eager to strike a blow on its own account on behalf of a man sent out in his country's name." But what avails it all, while the Government lies paralysed in the grip of an octopus Radicalism?

THE anonymous Englishman, who is thus playing the traitor, is described in the Parsi circular as "an honoured English friend." The Times correspondent justly says, after giving an account of the disgraceful circular that has been published by the Indian Daily News:—

"Unless the Indian Daily News be deceived—which is hardly possible—it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that some Englishman in an influential position is playing the dangerous game of encouraging native agitation, and of exciting the ignorant masses to support the Viceroy not only against his confidential advisers here, but also against the Secretary of State."

As the general tendency of the policy which this circular supports seems to be identical with that pursued by Lord Lytton's Government, in the way of extended employment of natives, we consider it to be of the highest importance that the identity of the "Englishman in an influential position" should not be discovered, and his veil of anonymity torn away. We are quite sure that he is in no way connected with the late Conservative Government; and in order to make this fact clear to the public, he will, if he has a spark of honour in him, come forward and take the responsibility for his very questionable proceedings.

We shall look with interest for fuller reports of the important letter to the Government of India on the subject of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which has been published in Calcutta.

THE Economiste Français has been publishing an interesting series of articles on Lord Ripon's revolutionary policy in India, under the title of "L'émancipation politique de l'Inde Anglaise," from the facile pen of M. Maurice Jametel. M. Jametel, who is a distinguished member of the Société d'Economie Politique de Paris, has long been known as an authority on Indian questions, and writes with a very clear perception of the true bearing of recent legislative proposals. We may perhaps be pardoned if we quote here M. Jametel's reference to the part borne by this journal in recent discussions:—

"Au milieu de toute cette agitation, l'Allen Indian Mail de Londres se distingue par son ardeur à défendre les droits des colons indiens; son excellente rédaction se fit l'organe des associations qui s'étaient formées à Londres et aux Indes pour la protection des droits des ces derniers, et pendant tout le temps de la discussion du Libert Bill, elle publia de volumineux suppléments destinés à porter à la connaissance de tous les péripéties étonnantes de la lutte. Aussi pour être juste envers elle, il faut reconnaître qu'elle a été pour beaucoup dans le compromis qui vient de clore un débat, le plus irritant dont l'Hindoustan ait été le sujet, depuis la trop fameuse rébellion de 1857."

THE lamented death of that amiable and accomplished Indian statesman, Sir Edward Clive Bayley, leaves a gap in the London circle of Anglo-Indians that will not easily be filled.

THE anniversary meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society will be held at the rooms of the Society, 22, Albemarle-street, W., on Monday next, May 19, at 4 p.m. The Society's annual dinner takes place the same evening at 7 p.m. in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times tells us that, although the authenticity of the rumour regarding the cession of Sarakhs to Russia is generally doubted in India—as well it may, so long as India retains any good opinion of the Gladstone Government—still, the mere rumour has "increased the uneasiness which has been felt since the annexation of Merv." Gradually throughout the Empire, every British interest seems to be coming up before Mr. Gladstone with the words of the old Roman gladiators—"Ave, Cæsar Imperator! Morituri te salutant."

THE Englishman gives the following report on the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending April 22:—

"Although five sailing ships have been taken out of the market during the last week, arrivals continued on such a liberal scale, that our unfixed tonnage stands much increased, and amounts to-day to 54,000 tons. Considering the very limited demand for tonnage, and the general slackness of business, this is a heavy amount of unemployed shipping, representing as it does, a carrying capacity of near 80,000 tons, and we fear, unless a considerable general improvement takes place, rates of freight have no chance of being at all better for several months to come. Most of the shipping business doing is going forward in steamers at miserable rates, nor is there much chance of improvement visible in this direction."

We take the following report on the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s circular, April 22:—

"The reports from Tirhoot, Champarum, and Chuprah continue very unfavourable; there has been no rain since our last issue, and but little cessation of the hot west winds; latest advices state that there has been a change of wind to the east, and that some clouds have gathered. Each succeeding day now without rain lessens the chance of even a fair crop, and should rain hold off much longer we fear the outturn from Behar generally will be but poor. So far as Lower Bengal goes, the only district that has had good rain is Jessore, and a little has also fallen in some parts of Kishnaghur. From all the other Zillahs the advices are about as bad as they can be. From the Doab we hear that much difficulty is experienced in getting water from the Canals for the purposes of irrigation. Altogether, with the exception of Jessore, crop prospects are worse than they were at the date of our last issue."

THE following report on the Calcutta Tea Market is taken from Messrs. Moran and Co.'s weekly returns:—

"The market has been entirely closed during the past fortnight. Samples of the new season's crop as yet to hand compare very favourably with last year's early muster's. Assam showing considerable improvement. In the upper Districts of Assam there has been good rainfall, but in Kamroop it is still wanted, and cold weather prevails in Cachar. In the latter district some gardens have suffered severely from hail. Drought still continues in Darjeeling and the Terai, but in the Doars a fair fall of rain has occurred within the last few days. From the Kangra Valley we hear of cold weather accompanied with hail, and from Chota Nagpore, that rain is much wanted. From Chittagong favourable weather is reported. As the end of this month is generally considered to be the close of the season, we append a few extra remarks to our usual report. The quality of the crop of 1883, taken all round, was fully up to the average of late years, and this in many cases has enabled owners of property to cover what would otherwise have been heavy losses; for the outturn, through climatic causes, was most disappointing. We are of opinion that the figures given us at the beginning of last year for an estimate were rather too sanguine, but had the weather been too propitious they might have been realised. An early cold weather was universal over all the districts, and blight of various kinds did great damage especially towards the end of the year."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending April 25:—

"Surgeon Major H. S. Smith, Civil Surgeon, Allahabad; Baboo Govind Chunder Dutt, late Assistant Accountant General, Bombay; Baboo Dinonath Sen., C.E., late Executive Engineer of the Public Works Department; Mr. A. K. Green, barrister-at-law, Madras; Lieut. W. du V. Lysley, 60th Rifles."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

"Rain has fallen heavily in Cachar and Sylhet and parts of Upper Assam, and in smaller quantities along the Malabar coast. Slight showers have also occurred in parts of Bombay, Mysore, Central India, and the Punjab, and at Dacca in Bengal, and Lucknow. The standing crops in the Madras Presidency continue generally favourable, but the outturn of those recently harvested has for the most part been below the average. In Coorg rain is much needed for the coffee blossoms, and prospects are bad, owing to low prices. In Bombay the harvesting of the rabi has been completed in several districts. A scarcity of drinking-water exists in parts of Dharwar and Kaladgi. In Hyderabad and Berar harvesting operations are still in progress, and in the Akola district preparations have commenced for the ensuing kharif. In Central India and Rajputana reaping is nearly over and prospects are fair; but there is a scarcity of water in Marwar. In Punjab the rabi harvest has begun in three districts. Prospects continue generally satisfactory, except in the south-eastern districts, where the crops on unirrigated land have failed. In the North Western Provinces and Oudh strong west winds have prevailed, and the weather has been unusually warm. A scarcity of water and fodder exists in some places. The rabi harvest is not yet over. In the Central Provinces the rabi is being threshed, and preparations for kharif ploughings are reported from one district. Rain is much needed throughout Bengal for the cultivation in progress, and drinking-water is scarce in several districts. Dry west winds have prevailed and done much damage to silkworms and the mango crop. The rabi harvest is nearly over. In Assam the weather has been stormy and rainy. Cultivation is in progress, and prospects are satisfactory; but rain is needed in Gauhati, where none has fallen. In Burma the rice crop has been reaped, and no agricultural operations are going on. Cholera and smallpox continue prevalent in most provinces, particularly in Bengal. Smallpox has abated in Rangoon. Prices are generally stationary."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated May 11:—

"A LETTER from the Government of India to the Government of Bengal on the subject of the Rent Bill has just been published. It begins by requesting the Local Government to take the measure and the report of the Select Committee into consideration, in order that the Supreme Government may be made acquainted with the views of the Bengal Government and of those officers whom the latter may think it expedient to consult. Attention is called to the points which the Committee desired to have referred to the Local Government, with a view to the eliciting of further information. Some other matters are also mentioned, for example, the question whether the existing revenue establishments are sufficiently numerous to cope with the additional duties imposed by the Bill, and the question of introducing the system of a general survey and record of proprietary rights.

"It is then pointed out that the doubtful feature of the Bill is the proposed conversion of occupancy ryots (who sublet more than half their holdings) into tenure holders; and it is suggested that inquiry should be made into this subject. Remarks are also made on chapters four and five, which deal respectively with the ryots holding at fixed rates, and with occupancy ryots. The Supreme Government expresses its agreement with the view of the Select Committee, that the gross produce test as regards enhancement should be abandoned, and is inclined to think that the most feasible check on high renting is to limit the percentage of increase obtainable at any one time on the existing rents, when rent is enhanced, either by private agreement or by suit.

"As regards non-occupancy rights, the Supreme Government is disposed to think that the Bill goes far enough in protecting them for the period during which they are acquiring occupancy rights, but would be glad to learn the views of the Bengal Government. It accepts the decision of the Select Committee on the question of 'abandonment' by the tenant, and its definition of 'proprietors' private lands.' Regarding distraint, it says that if the power of distraint is to be maintained at all, the process can no longer be left to the unsupervised action of the zemindars' servants, and that a reference to the Courts is an essential safeguard. Various other points are mentioned, and the Government of Bengal is requested to answer the letter by the end of August.

"A letter has also been sent to the Calcutta High Court, inviting the opinion of the Judges on several points, such as whether the right of appeal from ex-parte decrees should be restricted; whether landlords should be empowered to institute by a single plaint a suit against several independently holding tenants; and whether the defendant in a suit for arrears should be allowed to appeal before depositing the amount decreed.

"It was officially announced yesterday that, owing to the arrangements made by the Secretary of State, there is no reason to anticipate any necessity for borrowing in India this year, and that the Government has no present intention of raising a loan. It seems probable that the resources available for the Secretary of State will enable him to make such a reduction in drawing as will save the Indian Government any necessity for borrowing. The opium crop now being brought in is one of the largest on record, and it will have the effect of greatly strengthening the reserves. The Quetta Railway operations now progressing will, however, entail an unforeseen call outside of the Budget estimates.

"The fall of the Oriental Bank has been the principal topic of conversation in business circles during the past week. The anticipations expressed when the news of the catastrophe was first received have been fulfilled, and the event had no disturbing effect on trade in India. But in Ceylon its effect was more serious. A panic seems to have prevailed at Colombo for some time, but it was eventually allayed by the Government undertaking to guarantee the payment of the Oriental Bank's notes. Much sympathy is felt on all sides, and it is generally hoped that the efforts to re-establish the bank may be successful.

"In Upper India, and especially in the Delhi and Hissar divisions of the Punjab, the weather continues to cause anxiety. As yet, however, no great calamity need be feared, unless the summer rains fail. Some small works have been opened here and there, and every preparation has been made to develop these into regular famine relief works should the necessity, unhappily, arise.

"The weather has been most unusual in Lower Bengal for the last fortnight. In the neighbourhood of Calcutta heavy rain has fallen daily, and there is every appearance of the monsoon having burst six weeks before it had been expected; while in some other parts of the province there has been hardly any rain since the beginning of the year. On the whole, however, the harvest prospects are fairly good, and the recent rain has had a decidedly beneficial effect on the public health by checking the smallpox and cholera epidemics which prevailed during March and April.

"The Calcutta Englishman states that a dispatch will be sent home this week containing the remarks of the Government on the report of the Education Commission. Owing to the non-receipt of any communications on the subject from any local Government, except that of the Punjab, the Supreme Government is unable to enter into much detail, but confines itself to the discussion of general principles. Its opinions are said to agree in the main with those of the Commission.

"It is stated that Dr. Richardson, whose inquiries on the subject of cholera have been frequently mentioned of late, is inclined to think that the virulent poison which he has discovered in choleraic alvine discharges may be one of the ptomaines, or cadaveric alkaloids. If this theory be correct, it would appear that this particular ptomaine is engendered by the bacilli discovered by Dr. Koch.

"For some time past the native newspapers have shown singular unanimity in condemning the existing rules regarding the limit of age for admission to the Civil Service competitions, and have sharply attacked the Secretary of State for refusing to alter those rules. An article in the Indian Daily News would seem to prove that a persistent effort is being made to get up an agitation on this subject. That journal publishes a circular, signed by two well-known Parsees of Bombay, which is evidently intended to reach only native sympathisers, who are urged to lose no time in promoting united action.

"The circular is accompanied by a letter, the signature of which is suppressed, but which is described as being written by 'an honoured English friend,' who is in the best position to advise, and whose advice they have always gratefully followed. This 'honoured friend' does not hesitate to advise the natives to strengthen the Viceroy's hands by sending in numerous memorials. He tells them that Lord Ripon holds the most decided opinion on the subject, and that if supported he will still strive to induce Lord Kimberley to re-consider the matter.

"Unless the Indian Daily News be deceived—which is hardly possible—it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that some Englishman in an influential position is playing the dangerous game of encouraging native agitation, and of inciting the ignorant masses to support the Viceroy not only against his confidential advisers here, but also against the Secretary of State.

"The following items of news reach us from Cabul. The Ameer has appointed Khan Baba-Khan Kizilbash Governor of Kunar.

"The Brigand Sadu has carried off 300 camels laden with provisions intended for the troops in the Mongol country.

"A famous mollah at Cabul having declared the use of tobacco to be contrary to the Mahomedan law, the Ameer has submitted the question to a council of mollahs from all parts of the country. If their decision be against the indulgence in tobacco, its use in Afghanistan will be prohibited; but if they pronounce it lawful, the anti-tobacco prophet is promised imprisonment at Candahar.

"The Civil List and Pension List has been reduced by seven lakhs of rupees.

"The cession of Sarakhs to Russia, although its authenticity is doubted, has increased the uneasiness which has been felt in this country since the annexation of Merv. Another rumour, which is also pronounced to be doubtful, is that the Russians have advanced beyond Sarakhs.

"A Turcoman eye-witness has furnished the following particulars of the capture of Merv. He arrived at Merv on March 6 last, and found that some weeks before Colonel Alikhanoff, with two Russian officers and fifty Akai horsemen, had been there and persuaded a deputation of Elders to accompany them to Askabad. Some of the Elders, however, refused to accompany the deputation, and declared that they would resist the Russians, and the tribes were divided in opinion. On the 8th the deputation returned with the news that the Russian troops were close at hand, and invited the tribesmen to take water to them on camels. Some were about to comply with this request when Baba Khan and Kajiar Khan, the leaders of the anti-Russian party, threatened to kill any camels that might start, and exhorted their followers to resist the Russian.

Colonel Alikhanoff arrived on the 10th with 100 Russian and Akhal cavalry, but on the advice of some friendly Turcomans he retired to Ata where the Russian camp was pitched. On the same night Kajjar Khan's men fired at the Russian picquets, but fell back when their fire was returned. Next day all the Tekke Elders, except Baba Khan, Kajjar Khan, and Hakim Khan, went to Ata, and escorted the Russians to Merv. The Russian force consisted of 2,000 horse and foot, with two guns. Shortly afterwards Baba Khan was bribed into submission, but Kajjar Khan refused to accept a bribe, and collected 8,000 men, with whom he attacked the Russians, who opposed him with a body of 400. A skirmish followed, the Tekkes being beaten with the loss of three or four of their number. Thereupon all idea of offering further resistance was abandoned. It is not known where Kajjar Khan has gone.

"The eye-witness added that the Russian commander, whom he calls Yanur, wished to build a fort near the bazaar in Koshut Khan Kali, but the Mervli protested, and offered a site near Mahomed Niazbin's fort. The Russians, however, pointed out that it would be difficult to obtain supplies there.

"This informant also says that Colonel Alikhanoff visited Pulikhisti, which is well within the Afghan frontier, in order to inquire into the state of affairs at Punj deen, where there is an Afghan outpost, and that it is believed the Russians will build a fort at Pulikhisti without regarding any Afghan protests."

AN INTERESTING GATHERING OF ENGLISH AND INDIAN LADIES.

(Indian Mirror.)

Some of our contemporaries publish the following:—"An interesting social gathering of ladies was held in Peace Cottage, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Mozumdar, No. 73, Upper Circular-road, on Saturday, the 5th April, at half-past five. The following ladies among others were present:—Mrs. Reynolds, Miss Reynolds, Mrs. Murray, the two Misses Murray, Mrs. Grant, Mrs. K. B. Stuart, Mrs. Bailly, Mrs. Cowie, Mrs. S. N. Tagore, Mrs. B. L. Gupta, Mrs. Ram Sunker Sen, and about thirty other Hindu ladies. Mrs. Mozumdar read a short address of welcome, of which the following is a translation:—Dear Sisters,—I have invited you to-day not to hold a grand meeting or to discuss religion or politics, but I have called you in love, and you have kindly come that we may meet for the sake of our mutual pleasure to talk on agreeable subjects. Such intercourse increases friendship and goodwill between the races, and such friendship is the essence of all moral and religious relations. English women and Bengali women are of very different temperaments. The English lady hesitates to mix with the Native lady, and the latter feels shy and awkward in the presence of her European sister. But I feel when we are the children of the same God, subjects of the same Queen, and inhabitants of the same country, why should we not, in spite of differences in dress and habit, unite in goodwill and friendship? Let us meet to learn each other's manners and customs. Let us, if possible, discard what is wrong in them. It cannot be expected that European ladies should live as we do, and perhaps it is equally impossible that Hindu ladies should change their habits and live as Europeans; but it is both possible and desirable that we should meet and mingle, trying to learn what is good in each other's character and ways. English ladies have come to this country, leaving behind them their relatives and friends. Is it not our duty to receive them as our friends and sisters, and is it not their duty to help us to improve ourselves in knowledge and manners? I am, therefore, very glad to receive you all in my house, and hope there will be similar meetings in other houses."

"The ladies then partook of refreshments, and remained together for some time. The meeting terminated very successfully."

APPREHENDED SCARCITY IN BIHAR.

Our Tirhut correspondent has sounded a note of alarm in his district and Bihar generally. The failure of the kharif or rice, and the rabi or spring crop, seems to be tolerably widespread. In his letter he put the bhadoi at five-eighths, the rice crop at three-eighths, and the rabi at a quarter the average crop. We may take his estimate as fairly near the mark for the neighbouring districts of Saran, Darbhanga and Champaran. Locally, where inundations occurred, such as in the valley of the Ganduck Dearas, and the lowlying lands of the Bagmati, the bhadoi was totally destroyed, and though the rabi crops are fair, yet the drought has caused the grain in the ear to be less than it ordinarily would have been. Estimates of crops are never quite reliable, and the amount of stocks in hand can never be correctly appraised. The following figures are only intended to put the prospect of the population of Bihar before the public.

The average grain outturn for Bihar may be estimated as follows:

| | Tons. |
|-------------------|---------|
| Muzafarpur | 751,000 |
| Saran | 671,000 |
| Darbhangha | 861,000 |
| Champaran | 517,000 |

Taking a sanguine view of the present season of 1883-1884-1885 outturn, we will put the crop result at one-half of the usual average, viz.:—

| | Tons. |
|-------------------|---------|
| Muzafarpur | 365,191 |
| Saran | 335,192 |
| Darbhangha | 416,281 |
| Champaran | 253,134 |

Taking the consumption at three-quarters of a seer per individual, we have for one year an expenditure of—

| | Tons. |
|-------------------|---------|
| Muzafarpur | 534,595 |
| Saran | 504,430 |
| Darbhangha | 570,038 |
| Champaran | 290,000 |

which leaves an apparent deficiency in—

| | Tons. |
|-------------------|---------|
| Muzafarpur | 170,404 |
| Saran | 169,248 |
| Darbhangha | 153,751 |
| Champaran | 40,866 |

In the early, and, it may be said, the middle, stages of a scarcity there must always be an extreme element of uncertainty. Our knowledge of the stocks of grains and the habits of the people, of the actual produce of the fields, and of the many things which act and react on the market, are not such as to enable us to calculate eventual results with any approach to certainty. This is especially the case in Bihar and Bengal, where any system of agricultural statistics is in its infancy, and the executive can only gradually build up a system by which they can read the famine pulse. The whole country north of the Ganges has an average density of (in the 1872 census) over 631 per square mile, but in parts of Saran it is 984. Throughout Saran, Muzafarpur, and Darbhanga districts, with an average area of 9,000 square miles, the average density is 751 per square mile. Looking at this great density of population, and noting the fact that only some 3 per cent. is urban, the intelligent reader will grasp the truth that even a partial failure of the crops of one year must entail considerable hardship on a great part of the population who have nothing to fall back on, and whose hope is in the Indian Government, and God, who in His mercy will succour the thirsty and the hungry.—Englishman.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEAR JUSTICE, SLOW AND UNCERTAIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In page 459 of the Mail of the 6th inst., you have indicated how the real tendency of costly proceedings in Indian courts is to deny justice to the poor, and to encourage the unscrupulous and the litigious to drag their adversaries into labyrinths whither they are unwilling to follow.

In to-day's Times the third article commences with, "English suitors complain of the delay of litigation."

Our subjects in India would not object to the costliness, if there were any certainty in our decrees; but the system of appeals, and the slowness of our procedure in deciding them are sufficient to drive litigants to despair. Even after an English judge of great experience has carefully heard and decided a Civil suit, an appeal can be taken in non-regulation provinces to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The latter court consists of one judge only, often imperfectly acquainted with the local laws and customs of the province; he can reverse or alter at pleasure the judgment of the Divisional Court, and his decree can only be interfered with by Her Majesty's Privy Council in London, sitting thousands of miles distant from the scene of contention. During the past three months three officers have succeeded each other in the Gazette as Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, Mr. SPARKS, Dr. DUTHOIT, and Mr. YOUNG.

It is scarcely fair to the owners of valuable property to commit it to the disposal of one man who is not profoundly acquainted with the law; in Oudh there are many customs and local laws, on the interpretation of which opinions vary. Two judges should sit together to try appeals from the decrees of Divisional Courts. Litigants would accept the united decision of two learned Englishmen; if not, the party dissatisfied must make up its mind to pay the enormous charges of a final appeal to the Privy Council.

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, should without delay be amalgamated with the High Court at Allah-had, and two of the judges should every three months sit together at Lucknow to hear appeals.

Nothing excites hatred towards the English Government in India more than the sense of injustice caused by the slow, expensive, and uncertain administration of the laws. A poor man has but little chance of obtaining his rights, if opposed by a rich and unscrupulous litigant. Ladies of rank are the greatest sufferers. The widow of one of the most loyal noblemen in Oudh has at present a suit pending in court; her pleader boasts of getting Rs. 1,000 a day every time he appears in the case, and it is believed that his fees will exceed Rs. 50,000!

Yesterday was read in the churches how Absalom seduced the hearts of the Israelites, because David did not give sufficient attention to the administration of justice. Let us beware lest similar evil overtake us in India.—Your obedient servant,
May 9. T.

SPRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

PROMOTION IN THE STAFF CORPS.

There has been a good deal of correspondence lately on the subject of promotion in the Staff Corps, and on perusal of some of the letters written thereon, it appears that a good deal of uncertainty exists in the minds of correspondents regarding the means that are being employed to promote the scheme of accelerated promotion. A recent report from the fountain head, has, however, reached us, and shows clearly that good solid work is being done by Mr. Alison and the distinguished committee presided over by Colonel Malletson, C.S.I. They have published articles on the subject in all the principal London papers, and every member of Parliament has received a statement of the question of accelerated promotion in the Staff Corps. The leading military journals have taken up the subject, and every effort is being made to secure the support of influential military men. On examining the report of the Committee it appears that there is now a balance of close on £350; which, though it will serve as a foundation for starting on, still requires to be augmented by the subscriptions of those who have not yet helped the fund. Twenty-five rupees, the amount of the subscription, is trifling when compared with the results to be obtained. Another point on which the report lays stress is, that to ensure success, individual petitions must be sent in by subscribers, and the form which the petitions should take is clearly shown. On this point the report says:—"In order to adequately place the case before Parliament, it is necessary that the Committee should be supported by a large number of petitions, and it is hoped that every officer interested in the accelerated promotion question will prepare and send to them a petition with as little delay as possible, so that a large number may be presented to Parliament during this session." And again:—"The Committee beg to add that officers need have no fear of presenting their petitions in the manner here indicated, as it has been ascertained that they may petition Parliament, and that such petitions need not be sent through any official channel." Now, after such an announcement, there is no excuse for subscribers and intending subscribers to defer any longer their petitions. These petitions can be sent direct to the headquarters of the Committee at No. 22, Grosvenor Mansions, Westminster, or through the agents to the Staff Corps Promotion Fund. The importance of these petitions cannot be overestimated; they are quite as requisite as the subscriptions to ensure success to the undertaking, and considering all the efforts that have been and are being made by the Committee of disinterested gentlemen to benefit the officers of the Indian army in accelerating their promotion, we think that the officers themselves should throw off their apparent languor, and support, to the last echo, this effort which is being made at home in their behalf.—Englishman.

THE NATIVE PRESS ON THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE.

(Indian Mirror.)

GREAT BRITAIN cannot afford much longer to trifle with her serious loss of prestige in Asia. The Times, in reviewing the debate in the House of Lords, is disposed to look upon the Russian occupation of Merv as a menace to Persia rather than to British India. It seems to be forgotten that the relations, in which the Courts of St. Petersburg and Teheran have for some time stood, are so close as to imply a fast alliance and even a feudatory subjection on the part of Persia to the White Czar! Russian statesmanship is, not to put too fine a point on it, as Snagsby says, altogether unscrupulous, and when Russian aggrandisement is to be furthered, it is perfectly indifferent whether a friend or an enemy is to be sacrificed. Even, if Persia should be the next victim of Russian ambition, that ambition will be whetted into greater sharpness for absorbing India. A Lahore telegram to a contemporary informs us that:—

Traders arriving at Peshawur from Cabul say that the occupation of Merv by the Russians is the engrossing topic of the day in Afghanistan, and is causing much excitement. The Amir regards the Russian advance with complacency. It is believed that a secret understanding exists between himself and the Russians. At the present time the Russians are reported to be in Cabul. On the other hand, it is believed that the Amir has made urgent representations to the Indian Government for more money, ammunition, and arms, without which he fears he will not be able to protect Herat. The Russian movements are being discussed in every bazaar in Upper India.

Judging from the character of the Afghan people, it is not difficult to understand the cause and nature of the excitement into which they have been thrown by the Russian annexation of Merv and the dangerous vicinity into which the Asiatic Empire of Russia has been brought to Afghanistan. The complacency with which the Amir Abdur Rahman is reported to be regarding the Russian advance is not at all strange or inexplicable. Abdur Rahman was maintained by the bounty of Russia during his exile in Russian Turkestan; and if he entertains a spark of gratitude in his breast, it must draw him towards Russia. Whether his people will follow him is, however, quite another question. The Afghan character is proverbially treacherous; and Abdur Rahman's intercourse with the Russians has probably improved upon his national character. Before the Government of India complies with any application from him for money, arms, and ammunition, it should take every precaution to be assured that they should be employed to thwart and overthrow the hostile designs of Russia, when attempted to be carried beyond the limits she has already reached.

THE BARODA INSULT.

THE Foreign Office are in a quandary. The outburst of ill-temper on the part of the Gaekwar is something for the like of which the office was totally unprepared. It has been reported that the guard of honour for General Watson was sent to the railway station by the Dewan according to custom, and that it was countermanded by the Gaekwar himself. What, then, are we to think of the following undignified attempt to get the Dewan to apologise, which appears in the columns of the official paper?

Regarding the reported unpleasantness between the Gaekwar of Baroda and General Watson, the Resident, due to disrespect shown by the State authorities in not furnishing the guard-of-honour and firing a salute on the Resident's return to the station, we are inclined to think that the Gaekwar personally was not cognisant of the slight put upon General Watson with whom His Highness has always been on the best terms. The Baroda Durbar is rather inclined to overstep its authority, and it is not unlikely that the Dewan and some of his friends are responsible for the alleged discourtesy. General Watson, as directly representing the Governor-General, is of course bound to insist upon the most complete apology.

The Gaekwar is a young man of anything but an amenable temper, and it is known that he has declared he will not apologise. It is suspected that this slight has been put upon the Resident by the Gaekwar because of the slight which he fancies was put upon himself at Ahmedabad. In order to smooth the way out of the difficulty, the suggestion is put forward that the Dewan, a Mohammedan noble especially selected for the post by the Gaekwar himself, has overstepped his authority. The utter and undignified absurdity of such a suggestion is shown in the fact that the Dewan must have known that to openly insult the Resident was to create a quarrel between the Government of India and the Baroda State, and to make it imperative upon the Government of India to insist upon his, the Dewan's, dismissal.

Then, again, the guard did go to the station, but it is a simple fact it could not have gone to the station without the Dewan's knowledge and sanction. No one supposes he would have first given the orders, and then have countermanded them so as to make clear his intention to pass the severest slight possible upon the representative of the Viceroy. We are told that the Resident must insist upon the most complete apology; but we fail to see what the Resident has to do with the matter. The Government of India, the Viceroy, is the party aggrieved, and it is for the Government to insist upon an apology. Any other Viceroy than Lord Ripon—even the imaginative Lord Northbrook—would have at once withdrawn the Agent and would have at once suspended all relations with the Baroda Durbar. What the Viceroy ought to do is even now to withdraw the Resident, and to leave the Gaekwar to communicate with the Government of India through the collector of the nearest British district, and to insist that, before friendly relations can be resumed, the Gaekwar must not only apologise, but must himself receive the Resident at the railway station, and conduct him to the Residency where in His Highness' presence the British flag should be again hoisted with fitting ceremony. Instead of making at this juncture the affair at Baroda an occasion for making the dominance of the Government of India felt in every Court of India, we have the Foreign Office hunting about for some subordinate on whom to lay the blame of an occurrence which goes a long way to prove that the Government of India, that is, the Viceroy, is neither liked nor feared by the native chiefs. We have come upon days when the Government of India cannot afford to be charged with even a suspicion of weakness.—Indian Daily News.

A SMALLPOX HOSPITAL.

A QUESTION has come to the front somewhat urgently with reference to the provision of a Smallpox Hospital for Calcutta. At present there is a shed for native patients in the rear of the Campbell Hospital, and in that hospital itself there are two rooms where Christians of all degrees and all nationalities must be placed if they be sent to hospital at all. The urgency of the case consists in this, that a person may be compelled to leave his own house, or may desire to do so for the sake of his friends or relatives, and there is no other place to which he can be sent, or to which he can go. The rooms set apart for patients of this class are the merest makeshifts. They are attached to the body of the hospital, in itself a singularly objectionable arrangement, and they are in every way below the requirements of the disease or the needs of the patients. Then, there is no proper staff of servants or nurses, and no sufficient allowance for special diets. We need not now go into details, but we may say that the public have a distinct grievance against the medical staff of the Presidency in that this arrangement has not been brought strongly to the notice of the Government. We feel sure that the Lieutenant Governor would never permit the wants of the public to be so entirely overlooked as they are in the case of smallpox patients, and that now if the doctors will move as they ought to in the matter, a reform will be undertaken without further waste of valuable time.—Indian Daily News.

THE HYDERABAD LIBEL CASE.

EXAMINATION OF MR. SEYMOUR KEAY.

THE action brought by Mr. Seymour Keay against the editor and publisher of the Deccan Times was resumed on April 5.

On the court assembling after tiffin, Mr. Keay was put into the witness-box and examined by Mr. Branson. He said: I was sent about the end of 1863, by the directors of the Bank of Bombay to establish a branch of the bank in Hyderabad. I was then twenty-two years old. The administrative staff consisted of myself as agent (I forget if Mr. Burn was accountant then or came after), Tatia Bapoojee, came with me from Sholapore as cashier, and the last witness examined was the English clerk. The cashier of the bank had to furnish large securities. The footing of the shroff was that he had to advise young Europeans who were new to the country on bazaar transactions. The value of money in Hyderabad was estimated by rates of exchange on hoondies on Bombay, the hoondies being drawn at fifteen days after date, the quotation being made in Seegoor rupees; it is now a nominal currency representing ten annas eleven pies of halli sicca rupees. The rates of exchange in the busy season, March to May, the cotton season, are lower than during the rains. The fluctuations in exchange were much greater than now and were so for many years after 1866. About 1866 and subsequently in the busy season the fluctuations were about 600 per cent. more than in the dry season. In view of these fluctuations transactions for future delivery in hoondies were essential and necessary, and business could not be carried on without them. In Bombay since silver has begun to fluctuate so much, and consequently the exchange with England, the exchange banks have been compelled to adopt the same system. As far as I remember, the actual rate in April 1866 must have been about 126, which I thought unduly high. In the monsoon months, had they been correspondingly high, the rates would have been six or seven per cent. higher. These would have been the natural rates without any higher operator appearing on the scene, like a bank or other capitalist. The effect of a bank or other capitalist appearing in the market and selling demand drafts for what they would fetch would be to reduce the rate at a very small expenditure. The whole full moon transactions for purchase of hoondies would drop correspondingly for the rains. The effect of an operator or a bank selling its drafts would be that other people would secure future delivery transactions at low rates. If the bank or other operator stopped its sale of drafts, the rate would gradually rise, and if the bank or other operator, instead of selling, began to buy, the rates would go up still higher. This would operate to raise the rates still higher. The profits would be represented by the difference between the low rates at which he had purchased, and the higher rates to which the exchange had been forced up by such operations. In April, 1866, as agent of the Bank of Bombay, I entered into an arrangement with Poorunmull's firm. The arrangement between the bank and Poorunmull was embodied in a letter from Poorunmull to the bank, dated 27th April, 1866. The original of that letter I have not been able to find on a search of the remaining records of the Bank of Bombay. The arrangement was that the bank should enter the market on the spot as a seller and sell its demand drafts on Bombay at whatever rate procurable, of course in consultation with the other party as to how low the rates should be driven; but when the rates had been thus reduced Poorunmull should enter the market as a buyer of native hoondies for the two groups of full moons which were then immediately ahead. The first group was the two moons for May and June, the second for the four full moons July, August, September, and October. These purchases were to be made entirely under the bank's supervision in two ways: first, the bank would not accept any hoondies from sowcars unless satisfied of their solvency, the bank having certain rules which preclude its taking more than a certain amount from each; second, with regard to the general extent of the transaction it was limited by the bank's approval of daily memoranda of purchases by Poorunmull. These purchases would necessarily terminate on any evening when the memoranda was not approved of. These memoranda were submitted in duplicate, one of which was kept by the bank and the other returned initialed by me to Poorunmull. The drafts being sold for what they would fetch, it was natural to expect loss would be incurred, and it was agreed half this loss was to be borne by Poorunmull. It was agreed the first three lakhs which Poorunmull would purchase were to be given over entirely to the bank by Poorunmull at purchased rates. The first of these three lakhs was to be made over on the 29th, two days after the agreement was entered into on the full moon of "Vaishak" and the other two lakhs were distributed over the full moons of May and June. The reason of this special provision of three lakhs was to wipe away the unnecessary cash balance which the bank had owing to sale of its drafts, and to return the same to Bombay. After Poorunmull had received in my estimation a sufficient number of hoondies at low rates caused by the bank's sale of its drafts, the bank was to appear openly as a buyer. The effect of this would be to send up rates at once both for future and present delivery. The profits on this were to be divided equally between the bank and Poorunmull. It is clear if the rates had so risen, the sowcar, who, say, had bought at Rs.122 beforehand, and when the full moon rate settled itself at Rs.128, he would sell his own hoondies at the higher rates and would thus make six per cent. In the pursuance of this arrangement, the Bank of Bombay did, at the end of April, 1866, and beginning of May, sell its own drafts to the extent of Rs.2,59,000, the average rates realised by the whole sale being Rs.123-1-11 per cent. The rates for future delivery did not go down in similar proportion. Poorunmull, did, in pursuance of this agreement, secure a large amount of hoondies for the two groups of full moons already mentioned. The average rate at which he secured hoondies for the first two moons, May and June, was Rs.124-14-4 for Rs.10,95,000; and for the remaining group of July, August, September and October he secured hoondies for ten lakhs at the average rate of Rs.125-14. These were all arranged for before May 15, 1866, by nine daily lists, which had been submitted to me for approval, and which were also included in the memorandum of debts sent to Poorunmull. Enclosed in my letter of December 7, 1866, registered (Exhibit 16) on May 15, I stopped further purchases of hoondies by Poorunmull's firm. I do not remember how it was done, but the stoppage of the daily memorandum would have been sufficient, even if no other intimation was given. I have no doubt other intimation was given. Immediately after this, on May 16, 1866, the bank appeared as purchasers. (Hoondie book shown.) I find here on May 17, 1866, after an interval of at least a month, during which no fifteen days' sight hoondies are mentioned, i.e., that the bank purchased no fifteen days hoondies in this time. It means that from April 13, to May 16, 1866, the bank purchased no hoondies. Except for the one lakh of Poorunmull's "Vaishak," above referred to, entered on April 30, 1866, the day after the full moon of "Vaishak," there was no purchase of hoondies until the May 17, 1866, which referred to hoondies purchased on the 16th May. I find on that day hoondies for Rs.25,000 were purchased, on the 21st and 23rd there are other two purchases amounting to Rs.12,500, on the 26th for Rs.7,500, on the 28th for Rs.30,000, &c. The effect of this was to set the rates rising a very great deal. The instantaneous rise appears to have been about 5 per cent. The bank had approved of hoondies of Rs.2,40,000 (Government of India currency) purchased by Poorunmull on the 29th May, 1866. It was necessary for the bank to advance this money to Poorunmull's firm to enable them to obtain these hoondies, they not being rich enough. I did advance (halli sicca currency), Rs.2,75,000 in two instalments to Poorunmull's firm. The custom is for the money to be paid for these hoondies on the full-moon day, but we do not get the hoondies till the "punchmee" (five days after), consequently I took two pro forma promissory notes from Poorunmull's firm. (Exhibits 16 and 17 shown, dated 23rd and 29th May respectively.) These are the promissory notes. One dated 23rd May, 1866, is for Rs.2,00,000, the other for Rs.75,000, both to mature on the "punchmee," that is the 3rd June, 1866. Hoondies for Rs.2,40,000 were bound to be delivered by bazaar custom to me by Poorunmull's firm on the 3rd of June 1866. Soorujmull Bankutlall was the representative of Poorunmull's firm who used to bring the daily memoranda to me for approval, and who used to take back the initialed duplicates. These hoondies for Rs.2,40,000 were not delivered to the bank on the 3rd June 1866, as they ought to have been.

I made repeated demands for them. On the 6th June, 1866, I caused a written demand to be sent to Poorunmull's firm for these hoondies and signed it. (Copy proved by last witness Shreedhur.) No one came to me from Poorunmull's firm on that day (6th June, 1866.) Jamnadass came to see me the next day; he was their Amraoti Goomashta; he came about six or seven in the evening, not before. Up to that time no demand had been made, and during the three days there was no indication of hostility, only conventional answers being sent to the bank's demands, the object being, evidently, to work the bank into a state of apprehension by the delay. Jamnadass produced for the first time a long list, more than half a yard long of the hoondie engagements which he wished the bank to agree to. He had duly tested all the authentic purchases for the two "jaishas" and also a list of unauthorised purchases for the second "jaishat," but omitting entirely the authorised transactions for the four full moons following. I cannot swear to the amount of unauthorised purchases, but I fancy they would represent five lakhs. He had also another document, an undertaking in the native language, which he wanted the bank to sign, to the effect that the bank should renounce its claim to the profit of the four full moons purchases altogether, and that it should accept the unauthorised purchases for the remaining "jaishas" (full moons). He distinctly said the real reason they detained the hoondies was in order to get me to sign this document, and that they do still detain them. I do not remember the exact rates at which these unauthorised hoondies were purchased, but they were three or four per cent. more than the effect produced on the market by the bank's purchases. The character of the sellers of those hoondies was quite different to that of the other sowars with whom the bank had authorised dealings; they were petty grain dealers and others living near Poorunmull's shop, and our idea was that they were bogus purchases. As a matter of fact, if I had broken faith with the bank and taken such rubbish, which I could not possibly have done, the effect of the circulation of so much local currency in the market would have further enhanced the value for the subsequent four full moons which they demanded the bank should give them a release from. When this fraudulent demand was made I asked Tatia to turn over the Marwarree document into English in the office. He did so, and Shreedhur (the last witness) brought me the translation. This was written in pencil. I copied it on to a sheet of the bank's letter paper. I gave it back to Shreedhur along with his pencil draft. I told him to take it to the native officer, and he returned with Jamnadass, who asked me to sign the letter. This was about twelve midnight or one in the morning or even later. I went to bed at 4 a.m. on that occasion. (Exhibit H shown). Yes, this is the document I signed. The date in the last paragraph (May 15, 1866) is the authentic date, which I knowingly inserted from the draft Shreedhur brought to me. In this document under compulsion I abandoned the hoondies for the four full moons, because I wished to recover my hoondies, and I had no means of enforcing the contract for the four full moons' hoondies, and as a matter of fact he has stuck to them (or rather to the profits arising from them) to this date. I put the date May 15, 1866, because it was the authentic date on which the purchases were closed, and this can be proved by the initialed memoranda by me in Poorunmull's hands. It was perfectly impossible for me to have accepted the unauthorised hoondies Jamnadass tried to foist on me without having been guilty of breaking trust with the bank. I never wrote any other document in reference to these hoondies, or rather to Jamnadass's demands except this one (Exhibit H).

The court then adjourned to April 8, when,

Mr. Keay's examination was continued by Mr. Branson. He said: Before the document (Exhibit H.) was written I had a very prolonged consultation with the bank cashier Tatia. There was great difficulty in discovering how the Marwarree list of hoondies purchased bore upon the character and contents of the draft brought for my signature. I do not think it was mentioned that in this list the dates of purchases, or alleged purchases, were entered opposite the transactions or group of transactions. We had difficulty first of all in finding any allusion to the lists in the draft, and eventually found it at the end in the words, "I have conveyed to you a memorandum explaining your share in the above bargains. We had still greater difficulty in finding out how we were to sign the list brought by Jamnadass. We found this list of hoondies concluded with May 19 or 20, the equivalent of the Marwarree date. That date corresponded with the date in the latter paragraph of the Marwarree draft, brought for signature, and the list of hoondies. We decided to put in the actual date. The true date was in the upper half of the list, from May 1 to May 15, the false ones were from May 15 to May 20, and occupied the lower half of the draft. We determined to put in the correct date, so that by doing so we would have been enabled practically to sign both documents so as to recover the hoondies. There may have been an English list of some sort made out, but to the best of my recollection I initialled the Marwarree list after Tatia.

The witness then, at Mr. Branson's request, proceeded to point out the internal proofs that Exhibit H was a document prepared by Jamnadass to forward his own ends. He continued:—The reason why I could not resort to the courts was, that in those days I could not possibly have obtained redress in the native courts. Poorunmull resided out of the jurisdiction of the British courts; besides another matter of urgency was that the hoondies had been drawn by a number of persons, and were maturing very shortly, and a financial crisis had occurred in Bombay. In the previous month the Commercial or Agra Bank had failed, and every one might have been said to have been tottering.

Mr. Branson: You remember Mr. Burn's somewhat confused account. Tell us what you have to say about it.

Witness: I had certainly no conversation at midday with Mr. Burn, because Jamnadass appeared at 6 p.m. that day, and everything was done by lamplight, and till he appeared we had no knowledge of what line he was going to take. I never asked Mr. Burn to make a blot on a blank sheet of paper for the purpose of writing a letter on it. I see there is a blot on this exhibit (Exhibit H). I have no recollection how it got there. I instructed Mr. Burn very late at night to make an office copy, a facsimile copy, apart from the one to be entered in the book, and it was an important document as it was going into the enemy's hands. There is a broad distinction between a letter generally and a letter containing an agreement. It is usual among all persons who take care of their interest, or of their bank, to have private marks. I see such private marks in this letter (Exhibit H). It is to guard against the possibility of forgery. It is not true, as stated by Mr. Clark, that the first thing I said to Mr. Burn on going to the office of the Bank of Bombay, "Burn, do you remember making a copy of the blot?" What I did say was, that I asked him if he had seen the libel. He said he had seen something about it. I said, "I want you to be a witness as regards the Poorunmull transaction." He replied, "I do not remember anything about it, except that I made a sketch of a blot." I said, "Instead of sketching a blot, most of the documents will be found to be in your hand-writing." He still persisted he knew nothing about it, because I only went into his room when the matter was finished. As a test question, I then asked him whether he did not remember entering a vast amount of hoondies in the book on the following day. He replied he did not remember, and did not believe he had entered any such special blot. I said in that case there was no use my calling him. I telegraphed to the Amraoti branch about this. Shortly after this transaction, I had received from the Amraoti branch a few days after receiving back the bank's hoondies from Jamnadass, a letter about a hoondie on Poorunmull for Rs. 50,000. I telegraphed to the Amraoti agent, warning him not to do any business with Poorunmull. I wrote the same day confirming the telegraph. (The letter book, Exhibit U, was shown to witness.) That is a copy of that letter (pointing to a letter in the book).

Witness here drew attention to the fact that in Exhibit T (office copy of Exhibit H), the date 15th May was not in figures but in letters, to show the absolute necessity of having a true copy.

Witness continued: I reported this matter of Poorunmull's confidentially to the board of directors in Bombay. I have searched carefully, but I have not found that letter, but I trace, on reference to it in this letter-book, this letter No. 304, dated 23rd June 1866, containing a reference to my private letter, dated 16th June 1866, which was copied into the private letter-book, that is the letter above referred to. By that letter (Exhibit G) on the 7th December, 1866, I served on him a statement of debt and demanded payment from Poorunmull's firm. In that statement I claim for the four full moons of July, August, September, and October, which I had been obliged to relinquish under duress. The statement shows that the profits are not so large as was expected. Had Poorunmull's firm acted honourably, the total profits on both groups would have been Rs. 40,000, half of which would have fallen to the bank's share. The actual purchase rate of Rs. 10,00,000 of hoondies being Rs. 129-10-0 for the two groups of four full moons, and assuming the rate during the rains to obtain, as it naturally would, at Rs. 126-10, showed a natural profit of Rs. 40,000, one-half of which belonged by right to the bank. The result of the fraud was to compel us to reduce our rates, he having appropriated the ten lakhs. The bank had no interest in keeping up the rates. I consequently sold demand drafts in the bazaar, on or before the said full moon and reduced his illicit gains thereby. Notwithstanding this, there was still a profit in his hands of Rs. 8,700. I communicated this fraud of Poorunmull's to Bheem Rao, the witness called the other day (Saturday) and to a number of other people. I subsequently had an explanation of this fraud from some members of Poorunmull's firm. I think it was Gunshamdass, who said some months after he had found out that Jamnadass was dishonest, and threw the whole blame of the transaction on him, and said he had caused Poorunmull more loss than he had put the bank to. Neither Gunshamdass nor any member of Poorunmull's firm ever made the slightest complaint to me about having been improperly treated by the bank nor by me. He never made any claim against me on the bank. I have subsequently had many and some very large transactions with Poorunmull, one being represented by Exhibit B 1 of the City Commission; it represented twenty-three laes of rupees. (Shown Exhibits Q and R, letters from Mr. Saunders and Sir George Yule.) I received this letter (Exhibit Q), dated 21st March of last year, from Sir George Yule. The other I received from Mr. Saunders, as agent of the Bombay and Bengal Banks. I had the management to a very large extent of British Government funds for about five years, the Government cash balance alone amounting to from eighty to one hundred lakhs. I left the Bank of Bengal in 1872. I have since almost entirely resided here, carrying on business on my own account, and for the affiliated firm here of the late William Nicol and Co., of which I was a partner, and since then on my own account, and as secretary, treasurer, and agent of the Hyderabad Spinning and Weaving Company. Mr. Fraser was wrong in stating that the practice of the bank before his time had not been to give and receive differences instead of writing drafts or accepting hoonies. I demonstrated to the Bank of Bengal, in my letter, dated the 12th December, 1871, paragraph 6, that I had made a profit by transactions of this nature of Rs. 70,397-10-3 by receipt of differences without risking one pie of the bank's money. I never had such a conversation as stated by them with Mr. Munden or Mr. Carrs; it is simply an invention of Mr. Munden's. I wish to say I deny the existence of any kind of conversation with Mr. Robert Clark about the blot. What I did say about the blot was confined to what I have already stated. I said about it to Mr. Burn. I do not think Mr. Robert Clark was present. I have a strong impression he was not present when I first went in.

The plaintiff was cross-examined at some length by Mr. Forbes. He denied that he had ever been censured by the Bank for entering into these forward hoonie transactions.

What was Poorunmull's object in asking you to sign the Marwarree document?—The document brought by Jamnadass would have operated to bar the bank from claiming its profits on the four months' cheap purchases, and it also would have made the bank declare itself responsible to accept a whole lot of unauthorised hoonies for the full moons of two "jaishits." I believe Jamnadass thought he would bar the bank from obtaining redress in any court, as the city court do not recognise duress in one sense of the word, or would have done so then. The proof of duress required by the city court would be very different from that required by a British court. If satisfied of it I suppose they would as honest men recognise it.

In reply to further questions witness said:—I had no conversation whatever with Mr. Munden on the subject of the transaction with Poorunmull. I state this on my oath, I was not on such a footing with him that I could possibly have had such a conversation. I had no conversation with regard to this matter with Mr. Carrs. I was not on such a footing with him as to have had such a conversation. I unhesitatingly affirm that every word I used is untrue. I mean the conversation as regards any alleged transaction with Poorunmull is a falsehood, every word. I gave them no version of any sort with regard to this transaction. I also say Mr. Clark's evidence is false as far as it relates to a conversation between him and me, or me and him, and Mr. Burn as regards the blot; though, I will not say it is wilfully so in the case of Mr. Clark. I prefer to think Mr. Clark's falsity is due to misapprehension; he might have carried on an exactly similar conversation with Burn after I left and believed it was what I said—I have no doubt a conversation with Mr. Bullock took place. I have no recollection what it was. From what he says I have no doubt there might have been a conversation. I had a conversation with Mr. Fraser.

Do you remember with any or other of these having had any conversation, which would have been calculated to leave the impression on their minds that you had substituted one document for another?—No, not calculated, if properly understood.

Did you ever use the words "substituted document" to any one of them?—I cannot say, I did not in the sense inferred; it is highly impossible I ever did so, which, as far as I am aware is an invention of the libeller.

Do you remember you said you did?—I remember Mr. Fraser said so in his evidence, and I also remember that Mr. Fraser refused to assert that there was the idea of transfer in his use of the word, that is handing one document from one person to another. Mr. Fraser used the term "substituted" in the sense of "gave" to Poorunmull a document other than he expected, but not instead of one he had already got. I certainly did not tell Mr. Fraser that two documents were prepared. I told him that there was an original document from which there were two translations prepared which differed from the original. I heard Mr. Fraser's evidence. I objected to his use of the word "substituted" or "substitution," because he could not explain any transfer in the sense of the libel. I cannot now say whether I objected to any other portion of his evidence without reading it. I remember without reading his evidence, I also objected to his stating there was only one Mahrattee document instead of two. Had I more time allowed me I should have made the matter more clear in my cross-examination of him. I do not think I used the expression, "I paid the blackguard off in his own coin." I did not make use of the term "Blackguard;" it is not a word I make use of. I have no doubt I made use of some expression to show that I prevented an atrocious swindle, which Mr. Fraser thoroughly admitted I had made use of. A great part of Mr. Burn's evidence is untrue. I never asked him to copy a blot; that is not true. The part about my conversation with him at mid-day is false. His saying that I made an intimation of what I intended to do is fictitious.

What is your opinion of a person who has acted as Mr. Munden says you did?—My opinion as to the conduct of a person so acting would depend on the magnitude of the fraud, and the extent of the villany attempted by the assailant, the interests of the party, and as to whether there were other and better means of defeating the said fraud.

In order to save your bank a loss of three lakhs of rupees, would you have resorted to the substitution of a document?—I cannot possibly say whether, in order to save my bank the loss of a sum of three lakhs of rupees by fraud, I would substitute one document for another, that is, taking back one from a native and giving to him another of a different character in its stead, leaving him under the impression that he had received the first one. It would depend on the magnitude of the fraud and want of other means to defeat it. I have never been placed in that position.

Do you think your directors would approve of your adopting such a course?—I am not at all sure but that my directors would have approved of my adopting such a course if I had the opportunity, always supposing that the fraudulent person had no right to obtain either of the two, or any whatever.

Did you live in the Residency jurisdiction in 1856?—I did. There was some sort of a Residency court existing, but not a regular court as now exists. It was presided over by a British officer for the trial only of small claims. Large claims where one party resided out of British limits were referred to the city courts. I speak of my personal knowledge, that a special court of inquiry had to be appointed in the case where Lutcheeram used the bank. The rule was all cases were referred to the city courts even when one party was residing in British limits, which authority was delegated by the Nizam's Government.

Mr. Forbes: That is so now.

Witness: I am not aware that this case of Lutcheeram was specially referred by the Minister to the Resident. My impression is plaintiff filed his suit, and I accepted service. If that existing Residency court could have entertained a suit against Poorunmull, it would have been useless to have filed a suit as the other party (Poorunmull) lived out of British jurisdiction, and no decree could have been enforced. I find that the plaintiff Lutcheeram first addressed the Nizam's Minister. As far as I am aware, neither the Minister nor the Resident ever interfered in the protection of large interests either judicially or quasi judicially. Poorunmull did not take Exhibit H to the bazaar, though he announced he was desirous of doing so. He did not take it, owing to the lateness of the hour. I have written lately on political matters. I have done so since about the last two and a half years—that is to say, signed by myself. I am ambitious of entering Parliament. I am the author of the article in the Nineteenth Century, headed "Spoliation of India," in the July number for 1883. I am responsible for the circular "Prospectus British India Commission and Indian Reform Association." I did not compose it. I altered it for India. This article contains, as far as I have stated them, my opinions with regard to India. I honestly believe all I have stated as my own views.

Mr. Forbes here read a portion of the article in the Nineteenth Century from the words "never before perhaps in the course of history," to the words "European officers."

Mr. Keay said the only object in reading that was to prejudice the judge of the court as a military officer. (Laughter).

Cross-examination continued: I did ask Mr. Fraser in cross-examination whether it was not customary for the Bank of Bengal, after they contracted for future delivery, to afterwards cancel the agreement as far as actual delivery is concerned and accept or pay difference. This question had no reference to the present suit, but was asked on your question, as an admission was sought to be obtained from Mr. Fraser that the receipt and payment of such differences was improper banking. I certainly consider the receipt and payment of differences as proper banking. It depends on the character of the transaction out of which such payments or receipts arose. They are the opposite of speculative, they are certain in the results, which you desire to obtain, to protect the operator from the monsoon losses, the great fluctuations in rates of exchange on the arrival of the dates against which he wishes to operate. In order to secure a profit a bank or operator has to influence the market rate in order to increase his profits just in the way Poorunmull and I did. I was never excluded from the Residency in the sense that I received any notice: I ceased visiting in Mr. Saunders's time.

Re-examined by Mr. Branson:—

State why you ceased visiting at the Residency.—It is a political secret still, I have no wish to bring it forward, but will do so if called upon.

Mr. Branson said the question showed the malice of the whole defence, and he insisted on its being answered.

It was agreed that the question should be answered without any names being made public.

Mr. Keay's statement was summarised as follows:—I was not excluded from the Residency, but was requested by Mr. Saunders in a friendly way not to visit him, so as not to embarrass him in the difficult relations then existing between him and the Government of India in consequence of a rumour that he wished to use me as his financial (adviser?) and it was well known in all respectable circles that my ceasing to visit at the Residency was due to some political reason not generally known and had nothing to do with any matter of personal character. Poorunmull's transaction being of special character, the head offices of all banks have a rule that transactions of such description cannot appear in ordinary letters. The character of the letter may prima facie have been libellous, and could not be bandied about amongst ordinary clerks in the head office.

The Court then adjourned till Thursday, the 10th April, when Mr. Forbes would address the Court for the defence. Mr. Forbes was summoned as a witness for the plaintiff, but was not called, and the plaintiff's case was closed.

THE NORTH-WESTERN FRONTIER OF INDIA.—Under the auspices of the East India Association, a meeting of officers and gentlemen interested in the affairs of the British Empire in the East was held on Monday at Exeter Hall, Colonel G. B. Malletson, C. S. I., presiding, for the purpose of considering the North-Western Frontier of India and the British policy in relation thereto. The principal address was delivered by Mr. H. G. Keene, C. I. E., who elaborately reviewed the situation with a view to establish three points: (1) that a friendly influence in Afghanistan, with easy access to the Helmand Valley, and a well-founded confidence in the attachment of the peoples of India, are our main sources of strength; (2) that our naval power is the best guarantee for whatever line we may lay down, if it be done with due resolution; (3) that, while not doubting that the British Government is fully informed, it is necessary for the assurance of the public mind, both here and in India, that the world of friends and foes should participate in the information. Supposing that the rulers of India have to deal with an adversary whose advance was paved with broken pledges, and whose protocols were the epitaph of good faith, the greater should be their inducement to an outspoken avowal of intentions and capabilities. The present state of things was perplexing native Indian opinion with alarm and doubt; but only let the people know that their protection is strong and ready in the hands of rulers who disinterestedly desire their welfare, and the North-Western side of India will be as strong as any other. A discussion followed, closing with the customary votes of thanks.

The Government of India have sanctioned the following appointments in the Hyderabad Contingent:—2nd Cavalry—Lieutenant C. W. Maguire, Officiating Squadron Officer 3rd Cavalry, to be Officiating Squadron Officer and Adjutant, vice Lieutenant E. L. Wright, seconded for appointment as aide-de-camp to General T. Wright, C.B. 3rd Cavalry—Lieutenant E. F. H. McSweeney, Officiating Wing Officer, 6th Infantry, to be Officiating Squadron Officer, vice Lieutenant Maguire. 2nd Infantry—Major J. J. Kennedy, Wing Commander and 2nd-in-Command, 3rd Infantry, to be Commandant, vice Colonel C. V. Conway-Gordon, deceased. Captain F. G. Maltby, Wing Officer, to officiate as Wing Commander and 2nd-in-Command, vice Captain J. G. Proudfoot, appointed officiating Commander 3rd Infantry. Captain J. G. Proudfoot, Wing Commander and 2nd-in-Command, 2nd Infantry, to be officiating Commandant during the absence on leave of Colonel D. Shaw.

Paymaster (Honorary Captain) W. Christie, 13th Hussars, is about to proceed to England on medical certificate. A Committee of Paymastership will act for him.

THE MAHARAJAH OF DARBHANGA ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE full text of the Maharajah of Darbhanga's dissent from the report of the majority of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill—which we publish in extenso this week in a special supplement—amply confirms the impression produced by the summary of this important document which was telegraphed by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times. The Maharajah's minute of dissent is a State paper of the highest interest, and exposes in a masterly manner both the revolutionary character of the Bill as a whole, and also the pernicious tendency of many of the amendments that have been forced through the Select Committee, in defiance of the indignant protests of the minority. That the Government has been victorious "all along the line" in the Select Committee, goes without saying. The affectation of a "full and impartial inquiry"—by a body nominated, with a cynical disregard of decency, strictly for the purpose of voting straight—has been carried to a degree of absurdity that is positively laughable. But with all their advantages of numbers and influence, Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert will, we believe, find it after all impossible altogether to counteract the force of the unanswerable arguments which have now been publicly recorded by such high authorities as the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the Hon. Kristodas Pal, and which are unquestionably backed up by the whole weight of competent Native opinion throughout India. The Viceroy may, of course, use his official majority to thrust his Radical views on the country in spite of all argument; but the moral victory will still remain on the side of the oppressed minority, and we are confident that public opinion in England will insist on the reversal of a policy that has been so clearly proved unjust and dishonest.

Perhaps the most screaming part of the farce of "impartial inquiry by the Select Committee" is to be found in the dissent recorded by the Hon. H. J. Reynolds; who blandly differs from his colleagues—risum teneatis, amici—on the ground that they have favoured the landlords at the expense of the tenants! We all know the part the "bonnet" takes in the old "confidence trick;" at the moment when the country bumpkin is inclined to be a little suspicious of the benevolent sharper, the "bonnet" comes forward as a disinterested spectator from the crowd, and gives proof of his unbounded confidence in the benevolence and righteousness of the principal performer in the little game. Mr. Reynolds is far too upright and honourable a man knowingly to pose as the "bonnet" for any Government; but we fear that his very guilelessness has put him at a disadvantage in acting with allies less simple-minded than himself. It was difficult for the Roman augurs to meet without a smile; surely, Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert will be forced to laugh outright when they read Mr. Reynolds's dissent.

The imputation of interested motives on the part of an opponent is usually the most prominent feature of a Radical argument. When all other pleas fail, abuse the plaintiff's attorney. Absolutely the only answer that has as yet been attempted to the powerful protests of the opponents of the Tenancy Bill has been the assertion that, as representatives of the landowning interest, they are pecuniarily interested in opposing the Bill. Our Radical friends care nothing for the fact that this very assertion proves that the proposed legislation is so far confiscatory that it takes away from the landholders their property without offering them any compensation—on operation not easily distinguishable from "dacoity in excelsis." But these base imputations become simply ridiculous when offered in the case of the Maharajah of Darbhanga, whose annual donations to every good cause and princely charities are on a scale that proves him to be inaccessible to mere personal considerations of a pecuniary nature. A nobleman who subscribes huge sums towards the endowment of "Ripon Professorships" can hardly be suspected of opposing Lord Ripon merely for the purpose of protecting his own pocket. And we believe the same may be said of the whole body of the more wealthy zemindars of Bengal—a body whose munificence in all matters of public benevolence is not surpassed in the world. No honourable man cares to be looted by any one—least of all by the very Government whose first duty ought to be to protect its subjects; and it is quite reasonable that this sentiment should make the zemindars of Bengal bitter in their complaints of Lord Ripon's oppressive policy. But both the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the Hon. Kristodas Pal have amply shown that the injury which that policy proposes to inflict on the zemindars is by no means the only, or even the chief, objection which is taken to it by the native noblemen and gentlemen of Bengal. Even if Lord Ripon were to propose to compensate every zemindar for the loss he will suffer, it would still be the duty of every public man in India, with any feelings of patriotism or humanity, to protest against a measure that will pauperise and enslave the ryots, and will benefit no one.

Lieutenant Colonel Sir J. W. Campbell, R.A., who had been ordered to proceed to Quetta to command the Royal Artillery in that district, now goes to Colaba instead. The Quetta command, therefore, remains to be filled.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 30,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers, were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were:—In bills, on Calcutta, Rs. 60,000, average rate 1s. 7½d.; in telegraphic transfers, on Calcutta Rs. 10,26,500, average rate 1s. 7½d.; on Bombay, Rs. 10,60,000, average rate 1s. 7½d.; and on Madras, Rs. 9,65,000, average rate 1s. 7½d.; or a total of Rs. 31,11,500. Tenders for bills on Calcutta at 1s. 7½d. will receive about in full, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 7½d. about 90 per cent. and above in full. Later in the day bills for Rs. 61,000 on Madras were sold at 1s. 7 13-16d., and transfers for Rs. 1,00,000 on Bombay at 1s. 7 15-16d. per rupee. Between April 1 and May 6 the remittances had reached Rs. 2,35,89,000, and they realised £1,945,770.

The Secretary of State for India in Council gives notice that he will be prepared to receive at the Bank of England, up to 2 p.m. on Friday, May 6, tenders for a loan of £3,000,000, on security of stock to be created under the provisions of the East India Loan Acts, and to bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, payable quarterly at the Bank of England, on Jan. 5, April 5, July 5, Oct. 5 in each year. The stock will not be redeemable until Oct. 5, 1948, but will be redeemable at par on or after that day, upon one year's previous notice having been given in the London Gazette by the Secretary of State for India in Council. The books of the stock will be kept at the Bank of England, where all assignments and transfers will be made. All transfers and stock certificates will be free of Stamp Duty. Trustees are empowered to invest trust funds in this stock, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the trust. The minimum price, below which no tender will be accepted, has been fixed at £93 10s. for every £100 of stock.

OBITUARY.—Major General William George Lennox, late of the Bengal Army, has died at Glasgow, at the age of eighty-seven years. He entered the Bengal Army in 1818, before the birth of Her Majesty, and obtained the rank of captain in 1830. He was originally attached to the 43rd Regiment of Bengal Native Light Infantry, with which he served throughout the campaign in Afghanistan from 1839 to 1842, with the force under General Sir William Nott, and assisted at the capture of Ghuznee, Khelat, Candahar, Istalif, and Cabul, being rewarded with the Afghan medal for his services. He also received the bronze star for his services at the battle of Maharajpore, in the Gwalior campaign of 1843. Later on he was engaged in the campaign on the Sutlej in 1846, taking part in the battle of Sobraon, for which he also received a medal, with the brevet rank of major. In 1847 he attained the regimental rank of major, and was for some years in command of his corps, the 43rd Light Infantry. In 1853, on attaining the position of lieutenant colonel, he was transferred to the command of the 22nd Regiment of Native Infantry, which was stationed at Fyzabad, in the province of Oude, at the outbreak of the Indian Mutiny in 1857. With his wife and youngest daughter, he was preserved during this troublous period, nearly all the other officers of his regiment, and of the force which he commanded at Fyzabad, having been put to death by the mutineers, or having died in attempting to escape.

His regiment having mutinied, and been struck off the strength of the Bengal Army, Colonel Lennox was transferred to the command of the 63rd Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry, and continued to serve in that capacity till his retirement from the Indian service, with the honorary rank of Major General in 1861. The late Major General Lennox married, in 1822, Mdlle. de Laval, who had arrived at the French settlements in India, with her parents, from the Mauritius, on that island passing from French into English hands; and less than two years ago, at Kelvinside, Glasgow, the aged couple celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage, in the presence of their children grand children, and great-grand children.

THE SILVER MARKETS AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

TUESDAY.—Some trifling amounts of bar silver have again changed hands at 50½ d. per ounce, but there is nothing fresh to report of the market for Mexican dollars. Eastern exchange rates remain at rs. 7 13-16d. in India, 3s. 8½ d. in Hong Kong, and 5s. 1¼ d. in Shanghai. Rupee Paper is firm at 82¾ to 82½ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 80 to 80¼ for the Four per Cents.

WEDNESDAY.—Only a small amount of business was again done in bar silver, the price of which remains at 50½ d. per ounce. Mexican dollars continue to be nominally quoted at 49½ d., but there are none here at present, though there is some demand for them. Indian rates for telegraphic transfers are firm at rs. 7 27-32d., and the Hong Kong quotation for four months' bills has advanced to 3s. 8½ d. Rupee Paper is still wanted, and prices this evening are ¼ to 3-16 higher. The Four-and-a-Half per Cents. closed at 82½ to 83½, and the Four per Cents. at 80½ to 80¾.

THURSDAY.—The silver market is in every respect unaltered. Bars are quoted at 50½ d. and Mexican dollars at 49½ d. per ounce, and although there is some demand for both articles, business remains at a standstill, owing to the want of supplies. Indian exchange rates are firm at rs. 7 27-32d. to rs. 7½ d., and China rates are stronger at 3s. 8½ d. in Hongkong, and 5s. 1¼ d. in Shanghai. The number of buyers of Rupee paper has increased, and the market for this security is very firm. The Four-and-a-Half per Cents. have advanced ¾ to 83¼ 83½, and the Four per Cents ½ to 80¼ 80½.

FRIDAY.—The silver market remains firm. Bars are now quoted at 50 13-16d., chiefly because there have as yet been no fresh arrivals, while the current quotation for Mexican dollars is 50d. per ounce. The coined silver is wanted for China, and the available supply is still very short. Indian exchange rates are again quoted at rs. 7 27-32d. to rs. 7½ d. per rupee; but the advices received from China show an advance to 5s. 1¼ d. in Shanghai, and 3s. 9d. in Hongkong. There has throughout the day been an increasing demand for Rupee Paper, owing to the issue of the new loan in sterling and not in currency. The inquiry was chiefly for the Four-and-a-Half per Cents., which have by degrees advanced from 83½, at which they closed on Thursday night, to 84¼ 84½, there being still buyers at higher prices which have now been reached. Although these securities are not thoroughly understood by the general investing classes, their relative cheapness, compared with other Indian loans, is attracting attention. As, however, the demand has been for the security bearing the higher rate of interest, only a nominal quotation could be obtained for the Four per Cents., at the close.

SATURDAY.—The Silver Market is still very scantily supplied, and prices are firm. A small amount of business has been done in bars at 50½ d. per ounce. Mexican dollars are again nominally quoted at 50d. The directors of the Bank of Bengal have reduced their discount rate from 11 to 10 per cent. On the other hand, the Indian rates for telegraphic transfers are firm at rs. 7 29-32d. in Calcutta and rs. 7½ d. in Bombay. China exchange rates show no alteration. Rupee Paper has again attracted a large number of buyers, and the market closed with a strong appearance. The Four-and-a-Half per Cents. are now quoted at 84½ 85, and the Four per Cents. have risen in sympathy, their nominal price being 81¼ 81½.

MONDAY.—Small supplies and a moderate demand for immediate shipment have caused a further advance in the price of bar silver, the trifling amount received ex Elbe having been sold at 50 15-16d. per ounce. Mexican dollars continue to be nominally quoted at 50d., but the announcement of a consignment may be expected any moment per French steamer. Indian exchange rates are a shade easier at rs. 7½ d. in Calcutta and rs. 7-32d. in Bombay. The Shanghai quotation for four months' bills is rather higher at 5s. 1¼ d. The market for Rupee Paper keeps strong, the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. closing at 84¼ 85, and the Four per Cents. at 82 82½.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—The China auctions to-day consisted of 630 packages green tea. Prices were about on a par with last Monday's green tea sales, or, if any change, rather tending to easiness. The private market remains almost at a standstill. At the Indian sales 5,000 packages passed the hammer, all teas over 1s. per lb. realising firm or firmer rates. About 300 chests Java also sold. For to-morrow 4,691 packages Indian (making a total of 21,652 packages for this week), with 1,600 chests of Java teas, are advertised.

SUGAR.—The market continues strong, and the business done includes crystallised and refining West India, of which particulars do not transpire. Several cargoes of Java have sold; 100 tons native Penang sold this week at 9s. Beet, for prompt shipment, is fully 1s. to 1s. 3d. above the lowest point of the week, and in the Clyde market pieces are about 1s. higher than on Friday last. Here an advance has also been paid.

COFFEE.—The Dutch sales have gone above valuations, this market is firmer, and the supplies at auction chiefly sold at full rates to 1s. per cwt. advance. 329 casks, 81 barrels and bags Plantation Ceylon—small 56s. 6d. to 58s. 6d.; middling dull to fine middling color, 65s. to 71s.; rather bold, 75s. to 76s.; good to fine bold, 82s. to 97s.; superior, 100s. to 107s. 319 casks, 440 bags East India sold—Coorg medium, 62s. to 63s.; bold, 75s. to 80s. 6d.; pale sorts, 56. 6d. to 63s.; small in proportion. Two casks, 266 barrels and bags Jamaica mostly sold—mixed pale, 45s. 6d. to 47s.; gray, 58s. 6d. to 59s. 6d. 156 half frazils Mocha bought in at 87s., and 1,387 bags foreign about two-thirds sold—Guatemala ordinary, 46s. 6d. to 47s. 6d.; foxey greenish, 49s. 6d. to 50s. 6d.; grayish, 58s. 6d. to 59s.; color, 64s. to 64s. 6d.

SPICES.—Black pepper has been active during the week at advancing prices. White also higher, and the improvement maintained in to-day's auctions, 110 bags Singapore selling at 10½ d.; also 30 bags London made 11¼ d., and 31 bags fine washed Mangalore at 8½ d. to 8¾ d. Of Zanzibar cloves, 2,000 to 3,000 bales sold by private contract up to 5½ d. for fair, but the market is now quiet and the tendency easier. At the public sales to-day, of 929 bags a few lots sold at 5½ d. Cochin ginger small supply; 350 packages went at firmer rates for rough; small and hard to fair, 37s. 6d. to 40s.; small and medium part cut, 47s. 6d. to 50s. 130 packages nutmegs good part sold fully 1d. lower for the smaller sorts; Penang small, 1s. 9d. to 1s. 10d.; bold, 3s. 1d. to 3s. 2d.; Singapore limes, small to medium, 1s. 9d. to 2s. 6d.; Batavia brown, 1s. 9d. to 2s. 6d. per lb.; 8 cases Penang mace, 1s. 2d. to 1s. 4d. for very common to fair red; 8 cases Dutch, 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d. per lb.; 320 boxes cassia lignea bought in, 27s. 6d.

SAGO.—Common small rather dearer. 1,165 bags sold at 10s. 6d. to 11s. 6d.; fair, 11s. 6d. to 12s.; good, 12s.; 60 bags large at 14s., and 58 bags medium bought in at 14s., and 210 bags Sarawak flour at 11s. to 11s. 6d.; also 489 bags seed pearl tapioca at 12s.; 4,500 bags flake one-third sold—Singapore, 1¼ d. to 1½ d.; Penang, 2¾ d. per lb.

RICE steady to-day. During the week a cargo of 1,660 tons Rangoon, due, sold at 8s. 4½ d., open charter; one per steamer, 1,950 tons, at 8s. 4½ d., quay terms, Liverpool; and one Bassein steamer, about 2,000 tons, at 8s. 1½ d., open charter.

MONDAY EVENING.

TEA.—Public sales for the coming week are heavy, 29,867 packages China, 13,000 packages Indian, and 2,150 chests Java teas being already catalogued. To-day's auctions consisted of only 2,500 packages greens and new make congous which passed, the Ping Suey greens specially, at lower prices. 27,500 packages China teas will be offered to-morrow "without reserve," and meantime the private contract market is at a standstill.

COTTON.—The market has been very firm with a moderate demand. The sales since Friday amount to about 1,500 bales, including Tinnivelly at 5¼ d., Coconada at 4¾ d., and Benal at 4 5-16d. to 1¾ d. per lb. For arrival, Tinnivelly, May-July, Suez, 5¼ d. to good fair. Forward delivery, July-August, 6 23-94d. to 6 24-64d.; August-September, 6 28-64d. for middling l.m.c.

An extra capitation allowance of Rs. 5 per annum will be granted for each volunteer officer who has passed a qualifying examination in tactics. The examinations are fixed for 1st February and 1st June for Bengal, and 1st March and 16th October for Madras and Bombay.

It is expected that Lieutenant Colonel Sartorius, who is on his way back to Bombay from Egypt, will rejoin the Marine Battalion as second-in-command, Major Echalaz and Captain Simpson reverting to the posts of wing commander and wing officer respectively.

Lieut. Col. Durand, pay examiner, Madras, has been selected to officiate as Controller, Military Accounts, Bengal, superseding Major H. H. P. Cowper, his departmental senior, late Presidency Paymaster here. Lieutenant Colonel Durand was about proceeding on privilege leave to Europe, but will not now go until the return of Lieutenant Colonel M. C. Perrean Controller, Military Accounts, from furlough.

PROFESSOR MONIER WILLIAMS ON INDIA.

THE Boden Professor of Sanskrit delivered a lecture on India last week before the University of Oxford, and said that, having just returned from his third Indian journey, he felt humbled by a sense of the little he had learned, compared to what he had still to learn of that wonderful land, which was a semi-continent containing one-sixth of the human race. Perhaps the point that had impressed him most forcibly was that India was a land of surprises, contradictions, and anomalies, which over-precise, over-logical, and self-opinionated persons had better not select as the sphere of their life's work. The political economist must expect to see his cherished dogmas brushed away; the philologist his linguistic rules disregarded; and the student of religions his book evolved theories upset by actual experience in India. Then that most unchangeable of countries had during the last hundred years undergone more changes than any other. In the middle of the last century six foreign invasions occurred. Vast districts were depopulated, innumerable homesteads ravaged; Thugs and robbers made all travelling unsafe, widow-burning, infanticide, and human sacrifices were common; no man's life and property could be called his own; the whole country was hastening to anarchy, chaos, and ruin. What a change had our rule effected, and what vast improvements had the lecturer himself witnessed! Order for chaos, good government for anarchy, justice for oppression, a watchful police for plunderers and murderers, a well-organised army for unruly bands of soldiers, peace and security for war and rapine, well drained land for feverish swamps, cultivated fields for wild jungle, comfortable cottages for lairs of wild beasts, engineering works of greater magnitude than can be seen in any other part of the world, 10,000 miles of railway connecting every province; districts once shut up within themselves and hostile to each other brought into interconnection; tramways running in large towns; post-offices and telegraphs in nearly every village; caste—the bane of progress—giving way before facilities of communication; laborious, trigonometrical, topographical, industrial, and archaeological surveys extended to every district; trade and commerce developing; old industries reviving; new ones being introduced (as proved by the recent Calcutta International Exhibition); continually increasing plantations of tea, tobacco, indigo, and chinchona; new jute factories, cotton mills, paper mills being erected, new coal mines being exploited; new hospitals, sanatoriums, orphanages, and admirably arranged gaols; education everywhere gaining ground, and a new departure being inaugurated by the recent Education Commission, which had just published its exhaustive report, a fourth University just added to the three already existing; women admitted to the University examinations, and at Calcutta even to degrees; new colleges and schools (like the Muir and Mayo colleges) being established; European literature and philosophies more and more appreciated; a free Press giving birth to an increasing progeny of ably-conducted newspapers, magazines, and native books; municipal institutions and self-government gradually advancing; the whole tone of native thought and feeling being elevated and Christianised, if not converted to Christian dogma. And were no reflex benefits conferred on us? One of the chief was the invaluable training-ground afforded by India for developing the administrative ability and energy of the young men we sent there. Great Britain might well be proud of the work done by her sons, often in an exhausting climate and under many difficulties and drawbacks. But she ought to be grateful for the advantages she gained. And was there no reverse side to the picture? It was to be regretted that the old social gulf between the rulers and the ruled remained still unbridged. Yet native caste prejudices were greatly to blame, and the Professor had lately found examples of his fellow-countrymen, high in office, living on terms of the greatest personal friendship with the Indian community around them. Undoubtedly there was a great increase of cordial co-operation between Englishmen and Indians in every department of work. The Professor deplored the yawning gulf still existing between the educated natives and the mass of the people, and between the educated husband and his ignorant wife. He lamented other evils. The killing of cows and oxen caused great offence. They were sacred animals and essential for agriculture. More encouragement should be given in University examinations to proficiency in the vernaculars; the degrees of Pandit and Maulvi should be given for proficiency in Sanskrit and Arabic; the out-still system was increasing drunkenness, while it increased the revenue. More might be done to deter the people from ruining themselves by borrowing from usurers at rates of interest varying from 12 to 75 per cent. and by squandering large sums on marriages, caste festivals, and funerals. Mr. Leslie Saunders had called a meeting of the most influential inhabitants of his district, and persuaded them to combine together for the creation of a strong public opinion opposed to such pernicious customs. Why were rich native minors so often committed to the tutelage of plausible Baboos, who demoralised them instead of really educating them? Why were the native States allowed to maintain useless armies which drained the resources of India, when their military ardour would be quite as well satisfied by making them furnish contingents to serve with our army outside their own territories. The Professor then adverted to the new route likely to be soon opened to India, which, he predicted, would lead to a great development of intercourse between Europe and our eastern possessions. Mr. Cust had lately travelled by this route, so far as it was completed, and had published a map, a rough copy of which was exhibited in the lecture room. A railway ticket might be taken from London to Odessa; thence the traveller was transported by fine Russian steamers in two days to Batoum, at the other end of the Black Sea. There comfortable Russian railway carriages were in readiness to take him in thirty-six hours to Baku, on the Caspian. The trajet in fine steamers to Michaelovsk, on the other side, took one day. At Michaelovsk was the terminus of the new Central Asian Railway, which the Russians had completed some months ago for 144 miles, as far as Kizil Arvat. They were pushing it on to Herat by Merv, lately occupied, and Sarakhs, just ceded by Persia. We on our side, as announced in the Times of April 28, were pushing on our line to Quetta. We should be compelled, though against our will, to carry on our railway through Candahar and meet the Russians at Herat. English influence ought to dominate in Afghanistan; but the Professor had been cured of Russophobia by his repeated travels, and hoped we should meet the Russians at Herat as friends. There was room for both. The Russian Empire was being impelled towards Herat, notwithstanding the disclaimers of its Government, by the same law of self-preservation and the same necessity of progress which was impelling the British Empire, against the wishes of its Government, towards the same goal. It was only a question of a few years. If we remain friends with Russia, the journey from Calcutta to the Indian frontier would soon be accomplished in nine days. Professor Monier Williams concluded by saying that his main object in visiting India a third time was to endeavour to induce the Supreme Government to found six scholarships for natives in India to be attached to the Indian Institute. He was happy to say that the Viceroy and his Council had asserted to the proposal, which was enthusiastically supported by the educated classes in India, and now only awaited the sanction of the Home Government.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE
OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing Fortnightly (in Bombay) a magazine
somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence
no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A LASKARI DICTIONARY,

OR,

ANGLO-INDIAN VOCABULARY OF NAUTICAL
TERMS AND PHRASES IN ENGLISH AND HINDU-TANI.

Chiefly in the Corrupt Jargon in use among Laskars or Indian Sailors.

Originally compiled by Captain Thomas Roebuck, Madras Infantry, Professor of Hindustani, Examper, &c., in the College of Fort William, Calcutta. Revised and corrected by William Carmichael Smyth, Esq., B.C.S., and now carefully re-edited and enlarged by GEORGE SMALL, M.A. MISSIONARY,
Formerly of the B.M.S. at Calcutta and Benares, now to the Laskars, &c., in London, in connection with the Asiatic Strangers' Home, Limehouse.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We have received a copy of what we venture to predict will prove one of the most useful books that ever fell in the hands of a ship's officer—a vocabulary of the sea jargon of Indian Laskars. In the brief space of eighty-two pages
Mr. Small has given us some 1,400 nautical terms, embracing nearly the whole vocabulary of native crews. We congratulate Mr. Small on the completion of a book which, if it is the least pretentious, is, to our thinking, the most useful and the most enduring of all the books he has yet written."—Statesman, Calcutta.

"Of the value of the present edition, for the intended purpose, it is difficult to speak too highly."—Home & Qu.

KNOWLEDGE:

AN

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF SCIENCE,

PLAINLY WORDED—EXACTLY DESCRIBED.

Edited by R. A. PROCTOR.

"KNOWLEDGE" is a Weekly Magazine intended to bring the truths, discoveries, and inventions of Science and Art before the public in simple but correct terms—to be, in fact, the "minister and interpreter" of Science and Art for those who have not time to master technicalities, and—at a price within the reach of all.

The first number of Volume V. commenced with No. 114, January 4, 1884. Among the subjects for this year we may mention that arrangements are made or in progress for a Series of Papers on

"Flowers," by Mr. GRANT ALLEN;
"Electroplating," by Mr. SLINGO;
"Dreams," by Mr. EDWARD CLODD;
"Microscopic Studies," by Mr. H. J. SLACK;
"Tele-copic Studies," by F.R.A.S., and Mr. R. A. PROCTOR;
"Cookery," by Mr. W. M. WILLIAMS;
"Tricycles," by Mr. J. BROWNING;
"Happiness," by Mr. THOMAS FOSTER;
"Insects," by Mr. BUTLER;
"The Almanack, Mapping, the Zodiac, and Constellation Figures," by Mr. R. A. PROCTOR;

Besides others on "Chance," "How to get Strong," "Plain Facts in Physics, Apparitions," various Mathematical Subjects, simply treated; Whist, chiefly Illustrative Games; and Chess, chiefly simple discussions of the Leading Openings.

Vols. III. and IV. (January to December, 1883) are still to be had, price 7s. 6d. each.

PRIZE NOTICES.

"The best magazine published."—Vanity Fair.
"One of the most welcome additions to our stores of knowledge."—Fun.

"Seems to us to improve month by month in piquancy and variety."—School Board Chronicle.
"Remarkable for lucidity of style."—Hampshire Advertiser.

"It is learned without pedantry, correct without compromise, and withal interesting."—Yorkshire Independent.

"It is exactly what it professes to be—a popular journal, treating scientific questions in a style which can be perfectly understood by anyone of ordinary intelligence and education."—Chemists' Journal.

"Certain to secure a wide circle of readers."—Broad Arrow.

MAHARAJAH OF DARBHANGA.

PRINCIPLES OF THE BILL.

I would base my dissent to this Bill on the broad ground that it does not settle the land law of Bengal on a firmer, juster, or more satisfactory basis than it now stands on, and that it will neither keep the cultivation of the soil in the hands of a substantial peasantry able to withstand the vicissitudes of seasons, nor tend to promote the accumulation of wealth, the sound growth of credit, and the progress of agricultural improvements; also, that while it fails to accomplish the only objects which in Lord Hartington's opinion justified the introduction of such a Bill [Despatch, August 17, 1882, paragraph 21] it at the same time involves great and entirely novel departures from both the ancient custom and the existing law of Bengal [Despatch, August 17, 1882, paragraph 9] a course which that very same authority has with the true instinct of statesmanship condemned as unadvisable.

I find it difficult to understand what are the principles on which Government proposes to change the present law of landlord and tenant. In the statement of "Objects and Reasons" (which it is customary to send to the Members of the Council with every Bill) it is stated that Act 10 of 1859, though admittedly beneficial, was in some important points so unsuccessful that it had resulted in Behar in rack-renting of raiyats and oppression by zemindars, and in Eastern Bengal in preventing zemindars from obtaining enhancements to which they were legally entitled and even in difficulty in recovering their legal rents. From this we may gather that the main objects of the Bill are to protect raiyats on one hand, and on the other to facilitate the zemindars' collection of legal rents and their making legal enhancements of the same.

If it can be shown that the results of Act 10 of 1859 have really been such as Mr. Ilbert states (which, however, I would, as far as Behar is concerned, most emphatically deny, and of which, I would here specially notice, no proof whatever has been shown), then no landlord or raiyat could oppose equitable measures taken to attain what, as I above notice, appear to be the nominal objects of the proposed Bill, nor do I see that in any of their various memorials the zemindars have raised the slightest objection on these points.

Had the Bill adhered simply to these objects, all would have been well; but departing altogether from them, clauses of the most revolutionary character, and infringing strictly guaranteed rights, have been introduced, which have created a great deal of unrest and mistrust in the minds of the zemindars. It is true that the Government of India have never said that they wish to deprive the landlords of their vested rights; on the contrary, they have always declared that they do not wish in any way to trench on the vested rights of landlords that were guaranteed to them at the time of the Permanent Settlement, but the result of the passing of this Bill would be practically to negative such declaration.

No legislation whose object it is to deprive one class of its vested rights (without giving that class any compensation) and to give those rights to another class, has, I think, as yet been passed in India, nor do I think that legislation of this sort is ever likely to be enacted. Some such theories have been advocated by certain advanced thinkers in England, but in India, until this Bill appeared, no such theories had been heard of, and even in England there is a marked difference of opinion on this point among the most advanced thinkers.

Notwithstanding that the Government of India have, as I before remarked, never officially said that they wish to do away with the Permanent Settlement, and that the Secretary of State in his letter is most distinct in declaring that he is against any legislation that is likely to trench on the vested rights of any class of the community, notwithstanding this, the proposed Rent Bill has created an amount of ill-feeling and distrust never before excited in India by any Bill affecting the rights of the people; and the cause of such feeling is that, although these professions have been made by Government, still the most of the clauses of the proposed Bill are revolutionary and are directly against the principles on which we are supposed to legislate. The feeling to which I allude has of late been greatly aggravated and intensified by a memorandum that was published by the Government of Bengal on Jan. 5, 1884. I quote below a passage from this memorandum, and the principles contained in it are, I would suggest, quite enough to create distrust and ill-feeling in the mind of everybody interested in the Bill. The passage runs thus:—

"The Lieutenant Governor then thought that, while it was well . . . to have history on one's side, yet the decision of the question . . . turned more on appeals to the requirements of the present . . . than on historical researches. He therefore paid more attention to the practical character of the proposals made in the Bill than to their historical justification."

Apparently overlooking the fact that our rights as zemindars have been clearly defined and legislatively recorded at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the Lieutenant Governor here implies that our rights, and I suppose the raiyats' rights too, are but indistinct in the haze of historical research, and that in consequence alleged present wants affecting those rights should be met by measures, framed not in accordance with the past guarantees of the Government of India, but in the light of views held by a present Local Government. On this ground, he has, it would seem, been biased by views formed with regard to what some consider to be present necessities, and has disregarded the zemindars' vested rights.

We, the zemindars, on the other hand hold that we are one of the classes most interested in this Bill, and that our rights naturally should not only be fully inquired into but protected.

It may be thought, though I do not for one moment admit it, that the landlords' rights are prejudicial to the interests of the people at large. If so, the matter ought boldly to be faced, and the landlords be allowed "compensation for disturbance" and ordered to surrender their rights. But it is hardly fair to the zemindars that the letter of the Government of Bengal of September last (which, it now seems, did not exhaustively enter into the question of the landlords' rights, and which had great weight with the deliberations of the Select Committee), should ever have been put forward before that committee as the result of an impartial inquiry, and that the able minute of the Chief Justice which fully entered into the legal aspects of the question should not have been published with the other official papers.

The zemindars, as a body, have objected to the Bill ever since it came out of the hands of the Rent Commission. Meetings were held in almost every district of Behar and Bengal, and in all these meetings the revolutionary clauses were condemned, and it was the general opinion that the Bill was a wanton interference with the existing customs and the ancient land law of the country. Raja Siva Prasad in Council in March last correctly described what are the feelings of the landed proprietors, when he said that, "If such a Bill passes, it will shake the faith and confidence of the people."

Under this head I would only add that the general principles of this Bill, viz., the proposal to invest occupancy raiyats with these rights in all fresh lands on the very day that such lands are settled with them, the restrictions that are for the first time proposed to be placed on the right of free contract in favour of the raiyats without giving any reciprocal advantage to the zemindar, and the limit of 25 per cent. enhancement that is also for the first time proposed to be placed in a Bill, one of the primary objects of which is to give the landlord further facilities for the enhancement of his rents, can but be looked upon by the zemindars as not only a wanton digression from the recognised laws and customs of the country, but as a confiscation of their vested rights. The Bengal and Behar zemindars have, as a class, been the most loyal of Her Majesty's subjects in India, and, trusting in the known good faith of the English Government, they have always believed that no Government of India would wish or think of depriving them of their vested rights or of turning a deaf ear to their representations.

Under these circumstances the zemindars are naturally alarmed at the publication of such an official memorandum by the Bengal Government as that I have above quoted from, one which leads them to believe that the Government of Bengal has not thought fit to make a full inquiry into their rights before committing itself to the opinion expressed in its letter of September last.

I would ask what have the zemindars done to deserve this treatment? Are they really as rapacious and unscrupulous as the Government of Bengal thinks them to be? If so, where are the facts to show it? Have we got any statistics to show that it is the general custom in Bengal for the zemindars to change the lands of the tenants every twelfth year? Are there any statistics to show that the treatment of the non-occupancy raiyats is so very oppressive as to justify the introduction of such an idea as compensation for disturbance in our legislation, an idea which is entirely novel to the people of the country, and which was not even dreamt of by the ancient lawgivers? Is there in fact any proof that rack renting and oppression in Behar is so common as to call for the destruction of the proprietary rights?

A great number of official opinions have been published, but few or no statistics to show that the conduct of the zemindars is really so oppressive as described in the above mentioned letter of the Bengal Government. Further, I would ask, is there any ancient law to show that according to ancient custom the raiyats had occupancy rights in all the village lands, and that the zemindar had no proprietary rights in any lands except those that he cultivated himself?

I would now at more length record under different headings those points in connection with the proposed Bill as it left the hands of the Select Committee which leads me to dissent from it.

THE PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.

Throughout the whole of the discussion of the Rent Bill it has always been officially declared that it is not the object of the Government to infringe on any of the rights that were guaranteed to the zemindars or raiyats at the time of the Permanent Settlement. On this point therefore, the zemindars, the raiyats, and the Government are all at one. The question now to be decided is, what were these rights? On this point, however, there is a great difference of opinion, though I for one cannot make out how there can possibly be any difference of opinion on a well-defined question of this sort. The wording of the Permanent Settlement regulations is most clear, and they distinctly declare the zemindars to be the actual "proprietors of the soil" and not mere rent-receivers, as some people seem to imagine.

There are others who go beyond this, and hold that the zemindars as a class did not exist before the time of the Permanent Settlement, and that before this period they were mere collectors of rent for the Government. In answer to these, I enclose for publication translations of two* firmans granted by the Muhammadan Emperors to two of the oldest families in Behar; one of these was granted to the family of Bhojpur or Doomraon, and the other to the family of Darbhanga; and these clearly show that at least some of zemindari families of Behar were in existence not only before the time of the Permanent Settlement, but even before the establishment of the English Government in any part of India.

As regards the rights conferred on the zemindars by the Permanent Settlement, I cannot do better than quote a passage from the regulation itself. It runs thus:—

"The Governor General in Council declares to the zemindars, independent taluqdars, and other actual proprietors of land, that no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever. The Governor General trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed for ever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruit of their own good management and industry. To discharge the revenues at the stipulated periods without delay or evasion, and to conduct themselves with good faith and moderation towards their dependent taluqdars and raiyats, are duties at all times indispensably required from the proprietors of land, and a strict observance of these duties is more than ever incumbent upon them for the benefits which they will themselves derive from the orders now issued."

"I consider the zemindars as proprietors of the soil, to the property of which they succeed by right of inheritance, according to the laws of their own religion, and that the sovereign cannot justly exercise the power of depriving them of the succession nor of altering it when there are any legal heirs; the privilege of disposing of the land by sale or mortgage is derived from this fundamental right, and was exercised by the zemindars before we acquired the Dewany."

These are the opinions of Lord Cornwallis and Sir John Shore, the actual framers of the Permanent Settlement, and both of them are emphatic in declaring the zemindars to be the "proprietors of the soil." These opinions, moreover, were endorsed by no less a personage than Pitt. Mr. Dundas, the President of the Board of Control, in a letter to Lord Cornwallis, says:—

"I thought it indispensably necessary that the measure should originate with the Board of Control, and likewise that I should induce Mr. Pitt to become my partner in the final consideration of so important and controverted a measure. He accordingly agreed to shut himself up with me for ten days at Wimbledon and attend to that business only. Charles Grant stayed with us a great part of the time. After a most minute and attentive consideration of the whole subject, I had the satisfaction to find Mr. Pitt entirely of the same opinion with us. We therefore settled a despatch upon the ideas we had framed, and sent it down to the Court of Directors."

As regards the rights of the raiyats, I might simply mention that the rights that are now proposed to be given to them are very different from those that they enjoyed at the time of the Permanent Settlement. In fact, they had, properly speaking, no proprietary rights in the land at all. They could not transfer their holdings, nor is there anything in the regulations to show that the raiyats had the right to hold on at fixed rates without the consent of the zemindar. There is besides nothing to show that the rate of rent was regulated by the value of rice, wheat, and some other cheap food crops, which, according to a late declaration of the Secretary of the Bengal Government, are the only "staple crops." I would here quote a passage from Sir John Shore on this subject:—

"It is, however, generally understood that the raiyats by long occupancy acquire a right of possession to the soil, and are not subject to be removed; but this right does not authorise them to sell or mortgage it, and it is so far distinct from a right of property. This, like all other rights under a despotic Government, is precarious. The zemindars, when an increase has been forced upon them, have exercised the right of demanding it from the raiyats. If we admit the property of the soil to be solely vested in the zemindars, we must exclude any acknowledgment of such rights in favour of the raiyats, except where they may acquire it from the proprietor."

"In every district throughout Bengal, where the license of exaction has not exceeded all rule, the rents of the land are regulated by known rates, and in some districts each village has its own. These rates are formed with respect to the produce of the land at so much per bigha; some lands produce two crops a year, some three; the more profitable articles, such as mulberry plant, tobacco, betel leaf, and sugar cane, render the value of the land proportionably great. These rates must have been fixed upon a measurement of the land, and the settlement of Turymul may have furnished the basis of them. In the course of time cesses were superadded to that standard, and became included on a subsequent valuation, the rates varying with each succeeding measurement. When a measurement of the land takes place, the existing rates are confirmed, and generally with some additions."

In this passage the definition of staple crops is not limited to rice and wheat, and the other cheap food crops; on the other hand, it shows that in those days the value of the more valuable kinds of produce, like tobacco and mulberry was taken into consideration.

Before concluding this subject, I quote a passage from another high authority who lived immediately after the Permanent Settlement. I refer to Lord Metcalfe, who, as is well known, was no admirer of the Permanent Settlement, as is evident from the passage I quote below, but he also is of the opinion that the zemindars were vested with the proprietary rights in the soil by the Permanent Settlement:—

"I need not say that I am no advocate for the regulation proprietors of our creation. I consider their creation to have been an enormous error, which has not been attended by any benefit whatever; but having created them, and declared them to be proprietors, we gave them, I conceive, after the reservation of the Government revenue, all the rights of property that it was in our power to give, that is, all the rights that did not previously belong to others. We had no right to destroy the pre-existing property of others, in order to confer on our new-fangled proprietors; we could not legally or justly give them a single field which previously belonged to others; but we could and did give them the right of the Government in every field in their zemindari, and we superadded the full property in lands, not owned or occupied on a permanent tenure by others. Having done so, although we have a right, and are bound to protect the ancient cultivating proprietors and occupants in all their rights, whatever they were, and ought to be ashamed of ourselves for not having done so, we have no right to step in, between our proprietor and the cultivator of his own planting, on lands declared to be his own property, with a view to destroy the engagement which they have mutually entered into, and prescribe others of our own fashioning. . . . I would let the regulation proprietor have all his just rights. It could never have been intended when we created proprietors, that they were to be merely entitled to a percentage on the revenue. It was meant that they should be really proprietors, which they are and ought to be, in every case in which that would not affect the previous rights of others, but as we had no power, that is, no lawful power, to take away the rights of others, we have not given them one jot of those rights, and are bound to maintain the ancient proprietors and holders of permanent rights against those of our own creation."

In a disputed legal question of this sort, it would have been well if the opinions of the High Court Justices, the Advocate General, and the other law officers of the Government, and some of the leading lawyers of the country had been consulted. But in this matter, as in the matter of statistics, I find a remarkable want of information among the official papers that have been published. One of the zemindar's chief stand-points is the Permanent Settlement, and on this point it was most necessary that the Select Committee should have the best legal opinions procurable. No such opinions have, however, been consulted.

CHAPTER III. OF BILL—TENURE HOLDERS.

Tenure-holders represent but one portion of the proprietary interest in land, as distinguished from the raiyati interest. I do not see any special necessity for legislating on the present occasion for tenure-holders, properly so called. Their rights are pretty well ascertained, and as a class they at least are quite able to look after their own interests. I could understand the formal reproduction of the provisions of Act 8, of 1869, B.C., with respect to tenures and under-tenures, but I fail to perceive sufficient reason or justification for changes in the substantive law in this respect. In my opinion, the whole of Chapter III. should be recast, the provisions of Regulation 8, of 1819 retained in their integrity, and the relevant provisions of the Bengal Council Act 8, of 1869, simply reproduced.

The injustice of substantive changes is very much enhanced by the direct and indirect promotion of certain occupancy raiyats (viz., those who sublet and those who possess more than 100 bighas) to the status of tenure-holders, as explained at length by my honourable colleague.

CHAPTER IV. OF BILL—RAIYATS HOLDING AT FIXED RATES.

Whatever might have been the necessity felt by the zemindars for facilities in the collection of arrears of rent since the imposition of new Government cesses on lands, and however urgent the necessity felt by a certain class of landlords in Bengal proper for increased facilities as to enhancement of rents, I may say that the zemindari of Bengal and Behar are entirely at one that they would much rather put up with existing inconveniences and hardships, than accept the gift of the proposed legislation. If, however, the law is to be changed, it is but fair and just that the novel provisions of Act 10, of 1859, which are admitted by the highest authorities to have worked wrongful loss to the zemindars, should be modified or repealed. "The presumption arising in the tenants' favour from twenty years' holding at an uniform rate of rent may be said now to have worked out its object, as every tenant who cared for it, has had an opportunity for the last twenty-five years to insist upon the granting of receipts and to take care for their preservation. Vide sections 3 and 4, Act 10, of 1859.) Such being the case, apart from any other facts, it would have been proper to extend the period of uniform payment which should give rise to the presumption. But the necessity for such a change is rendered more urgent by the fact that in its existing shape it works positive and unmerited loss to the zemindar. The Honourable Rai Bahadur has in his dissent already called attention to the recorded opinions of the Honourable Mr. Reynolds in his memorandum, dated the 18th May, 1881. (Report of the Government of Bengal on the proposed amendment of the Law of Landlord and Tenant in that Province, Vol. I. pp. 181-182.) The same opinions have been recorded by Mr. Dampier, Senior Member of the Board of Revenue dated the 19th May, 1881, and although the Honourable Mr. Reynolds thought fit to change his mind, the arguments which were advanced by himself and by Mr. Dampier have not been refuted. (Ditto, Vol. II. p. 460.) Mr. Dampier condemns the retention of the presumption section, not only on the ground already advanced by the Honourable Mr. Reynolds, that the real effect of such a statutory presumption has been not conservative but productive, creating "in the vast majority of instances new rights, instead of merely establishing those which already exist, but for the support of which full proof is not attainable," but also on the further ground of public policy that "the presumption amounts practically to a declaration that when an estate passes to a purchaser from a hostile vendor at a forced sale, in the majority of which cases, no zemindari papers are available to the purchaser, every tenant who has held without change of rents for twenty years shall acquire the right of permanent occupancy at a fixed rent." Mr. Dampier adds a further argument on the ground of public policy, that such a provision drives the landlords to institute enhancement suits every twenty years, "lest their rights should pass away sub silentio."

CHAPTER V. OF BILL.—OCCUPANCY RAIYATS.

In approaching the subject we must bear in mind the great distinction between the actual cultivator and the middlemen. Whatever increases the prosperity of the agriculturist conduces to the prosperity of the nation, but the middleman whose prosperity is dependent on what he can squeeze out of the cultivator, is a useless member of society, who simply adds to the difficulties of the situation. Whatever tenderness is shown by the ancient custom of the country or the "official literature" of bygone generations, is limited to the cultivators of the soil, and not to those who having gone into occupation of land for agricultural purposes, set themselves up as microscopic proprietors displaying within their limited spheres the quintessence of all the possible vices and abuses of the zemindari system. If there is to be a radical change in the law, this is a class of men who ought to be excised from our agricultural system, as they are the greatest hindrance towards the rise of that "substantial peasantry able to withstand the vicissitudes of seasons" which it is desired to bring into existence. I am quite willing to recognise the necessity of allowing the validity of sub-letting in certain special cases, but beyond that limit I would not go. In all cases where the occupation of land was allowed for agricultural purposes, I would insist upon the right of occupancy being made conditional upon the bona fide cultivation of the land by the tenant himself, or by hired labour, and I would not allow the transfer to any other than a resident cultivator. Two of my amendments proposed in committee, embraced this question. The one, allowing the sub-letting of an entire holding in case of females, minors, &c., was adopted; but the other, which would restrict the transfer to bona fide resident cultivators, was not carried.

It is a well-established fact, that sub-letting has brought ruin upon the cultivator; and that middlemen have the most to answer with respect to the embarrassment of the agricultural situation, and that a raiyat holding direct under the zemindar is in a much better position than the korfa or kaliai raiyat. (A good example will be found at pp. VIII. IX. 355-60 of the first vol. of an avowedly anti-zemindari complication entitled, "The Zemindari Settlement of Bengal," quoting from various official and non-official utterances). In the face of this, it is simply a wanton aggravation of existing difficulties to raise occupancy-raiyats en masse to the status of tenure holders and rent receivers, and to afford facilities to other than cultivators to acquire by occupation or otherwise the right of occupancy. Taking for granted that the raiyat requires protection from the arbitrary act of zemindars who purposely shift them from land to land to prevent their acquiring a right of occupancy in any one given bit of land (a practice which, I contend, has not been proved), the Select Committee would create a presumption in the raiyats' favour (viz., that because they now hold land they must have held that land for twelve years) a presumption opposed in itself to the actual state of things in the agricultural population, as occupancy of land is daily changing, owing to causes over which the zemindar has no control. This presumption ignores the circumstances that there are vast areas of riparian land in these provinces, which are constantly the subject of alluvion and diluvion; that throughout the border lands of these provinces there is still in force an active process of reclamation from jungle; that in the interior districts the pressure of population upon the soil has led and is daily leading to the encroachment of cultivation upon waste and pasture lands; that the existence is notorious of a large number of paikashi cultivators, who try their chances all round without being attached to any particular locality; and that there are numerous cases in which old raiyats voluntarily relinquish their jotes, owing to a diminution of the productive qualities of the soil, and other sufficient reasons. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, can it be said that a fair and reasonable judge, in the absence of any other evidence whatsoever affecting the probabilities of the case, could, from the mere fact of a tenant's holding a plot of land to-day, deduce, or much less feel himself bound to deduce, that the same tenant must have occupied the whole or at least a part of the same plot for the last twelve years?

With reference to the proposed presumption that all raiyats have occupancy rights, I would here cite a few instances where I think it will be simply impossible for the zemindar or thiccadar, though the raiyats have not got occupancy rights, to rebut such a presumption.

1. In those cases where the landlord acquires possession by buying up the property at an enforced sale for Government revenue, the defaulting zemindar, whose property is thus bought up, is naturally in the majority of such cases hostile to the man who has bought it, and so refuses to give up the papers of past years. How is a zemindar in such cases to rebut the presumption?

2. Where one estate is let out to two or more patnidars or thiccadars, how is a patnidar in such cases to rebut the presumption that the raiyat has not been holding lands in the other patni or thiccadar land of the estate?

This leads me to protest against the proposal to invest an occupancy-raiyat (though his holding may be only one yard in area) with occupancy-rights in all fresh lands he takes up, on the very same day that such lands are settled with him. Because a raiyat can cultivate a small piece of land, that is no reason why he should be able to cultivate large bits of land. He may take them simply to sub-let or sell it.

Then, too, the word "estate" is most vague. An estate might mean a small bit of land, or it might mean large tracts of the country. The word "village" would be more convenient. It has a well-defined boundary and it represents a specific area.

TRANSFER AND PRE-EMPTION OF OCCUPANCY-RIGHTS

It is abundantly clear, that by the ancient land-law of the country no raiyat, resident or non-resident, had the power to sell or mortgage his raiyati interest. The Legislature and the judges have respected this by holding that the right of occupancy is not transferable against the will of the landlord, except by custom. The contention on the part of the Government seems to be, that, as a matter of fact, the custom has grown everywhere, but the statistics to which appeal is made are not really to the point, as they do not show in how many cases the zemindar was a consenting party before or after the transfer.

A custom of this kind would be so notorious that there ought not to be the slightest difficulty in proving it in a court of justice to the satisfaction to all classes and interests, and I maintain that the wholesale introduction of transferability is uncalled for in the absence (1st) of specific and proper evidence to show that it is universally recognised; and (2nd) of any particular instances of the failure of justice in the civil courts from the inability of purchasers to establish a really existing and flourishing custom. Such a wholesale extension of occupancy rights as is now contemplated, must be detrimental to both proprietor and village community alike, as it takes from the former the power of keeping on his land those peaceful and friendly raiyats whom it is his interest to retain, and opens the door for them to be ousted by mahajans or hostile zemindars, who can buy up their rights, and settling a different class on their lands, bring quarrels, litigation, and ruin into village.

I would suggest that the old custom of the country, by which such holdings were not transferable, was one specially tending to the security and well-being of the village community, as it prevented to a great extent those who had no interest in it forcing their way therein, and by setting up interest opposed to those of the community at large, and of their proprietors, ruining the village peace and prosperity.

In support of this theory I would point to the disastrous consequence attendant on right of transfer having been recognised among the Dekkhan raiyats, and also to the disturbance among the Sonthals, due mainly to the oppression of the mahajans into whose hands they had fallen; and I desire to protest against the raiyats on my own and other zemindaries being as a natural result, if this Bill is passed, made over to the tender mercies of mahajans and other land speculators.

It is true that compensation for the introduction of the new right of transfer is offered to the proprietor in a proposed right of pre-emption, but why, I would ask, should the proprietor be forced to buy what is already his own? The proposed restricted right of pre-emption will be but small relief to the proprietor, and I would suggest that, if allowed at all, it should be made far more effective by its extension to every transfer of a raiyati right (except by way of inheritance), and if the same right could be extended to the case of "tenures" as well, a self-acting machinery would be provided for the extinction of middlemen's interests, much to the good of all parties concerned. I would much sooner prefer free sale to bona fide resident cultivators than the right of sale to any one and every one, subject to a phantom right of pre-emption. It is supposed that the transferability of occupancy-rights would be of benefit to indigo planters in Behar, but I know many such who are opposed to the proposal, and the Bengal planters, as a class are entirely opposed to the same.

COMMUTATION OF RENTS.

In considering this question I would notice first, that Bhowli or rent payment in kind is not the custom on my own estates, nor do I consider that in those parts it would be as advantageous to either proprietor or cultivator as money payment of rent. But there are parts of Behar peculiarly circumstanced, where Bhowli is the custom, and money payment the exception; and suddenly to introduce so complete a change as is contemplated under this heading, would, I think, press very heavily on all classes. This is a matter which may fairly be left to time, the experience of past generations showing that with the gradual increase of prosperity and civilisation payments of rents in kind have a tendency to change into money payments, and I would deprecate such a change being suddenly forced on.

Personally, this question does not much affect me; but as the representative of the Behar zemindars, I would here record their opinions, and that I think they are worthy of consideration.

The practice of paying rents in kind was no doubt the original method for paying rents, and its retention in parts of Behar is due to its manifold advantages in the present condition of the people, as well as to the known desire of the people of this country to stick to old customs. Akbar's great Hindu financier Todur Mul had fixed the rent of the raiyat at 1/3 of the gross produce. Aurungzebe had increased this to one half; and the zemindars, taking into consideration the difficulty of the appraisement of the price of the straw, have fixed the share at nine-sixteenths of the produce of the crops, and giving to the raiyats the whole value of the straw.

Where the agricultural community has no other occupation to fall back upon, it is distinctly an advantage to the cultivator, that however small the produce of his field in a season of scarcity, he should retain a part of it; on the other hand, a tenant who is bound to pay a uniform money rent, finds that in many cases the value of his whole crop is not equal to the landlord's fixed money demand. Viewed in this light, the cultivator who pays rent in kind is much better prepared to meet scarcity, than the tenant who pays money rent.

As an example of what I mean, take a year in which crops have totally failed. The Bhowli-holder is liable for nothing to his landlord that year as he has no crop to share with him, but the money-rent payer is liable for his full year's rent irrespective of the failure of his crop, and may be driven either to borrow at ruinous rates of interest at a time when his credit is peculiarly low, or to pay the costs and interests of a suit by the landlord. The provision for commutation of rents in kind is therefore held to be undesirable, as rendering the agricultural population more liable to suffer in times of scarcity and famine.

Even in ordinary times (as the demand for rent generally coincides with the harvest), tenants paying rents in cash have in some cases, though the cases may be rare, to part with their grain at very low prices. The Bhowli tenant, on the contrary, has no such sacrifice to make.

Then, again, in large tracts of alluvial formation, when a single season may make an immense difference in the productive qualities of the soil (either for good or for evil), zemindars and raiyats find the Bhowli system to be that most convenient and equitable for settling rents.

Further, in a Bhowli system of settlement, the landlord every year gets the benefit of sharing with the tenant any increase in the productive powers of the soil, or in the area, or in the value of the produce; and if there is any decrease, the loss is shared by both the parties. There is therefore much less cause for any of the parties to be discontented, and then there is much less occasion for the landlords to institute suits for enhancement.

So much for the commutation itself. As to the manner of working it out, the revenue officer is to be empowered to fix the money rents, and the Bill provides that in settling such rates, he should be guided by the rate of money rents prevalent in the neighbourhood, and the average value of the rent actually received by the landlord for the last ten years. These rules are but vague; and as we know that, as a fact, different officers take very different views on all such matters, I do not think that a question of such vital importance should be left to a revenue officer to decide according to his own individual opinion, and that such a matter is one that can only be decided satisfactorily by mutual agreement or private contract between the landlord and his tenant. It is also argued on the side of the zemindars that it is more profitable to the landlord to get the share of the produce in kind, than to get a money rent, because (unlike the raiyat) he can afford to keep back his grain from the market at harvest time, and sell it to better advantage at a time of the year when the price of the grain is dear. This commutation therefore would amount in practice to a reduction of the income of the zemindars, which I do not suppose is the real intention of the Government.

I hope shortly to send in some statistical information regarding this, which I have not as yet had time to complete. There is another point in connection with this which is worthy of notice in the raiyat's interest, viz., that where the Bhowli system holds, the zemindar alone at his own cost keeps up the necessary dhooz bandhs for irrigation purposes, and no cost in connection with this, although they directly benefit by it, falls on the raiyats. Whereas where rent is payable in money, if the zemindar improves the productive powers of the land by irrigation works, the raiyat is liable to have his rent enhanced, and according to local custom is expected to share the cost of keeping existing bandhs, &c., in repair with his zemindar.

ENHANCEMENT.

About this subject as, on the subject of realisation of rents, it is thought advisable that the zemindars should get further facilities. The present law allows enhancement of the rate of rent through the Civil Court on three grounds only, the most important being, that the value of the produce, or of the productive power of the land, has been increased, otherwise than at the expense or by the agency of the raiyat, and everybody must admit that this principle is very fair, but it has been found in practice that it is most difficult to prove the "increase" in courts of law, and so enhancement through the Law Courts is almost at a dead lock. The zemindar therefore finds it easier and less expensive to enhance his rents by private contract, but even this is by no means at all easy to accomplish, owing to the unwillingness of the raiyats to pay any enhancement which they think is not obtainable through the Civil Court.

However, since Government has begun to publish the weekly price-lists of food crops in each district in the Gazette, we have better statistics to show the rise in prices. I therefore consider the proposal to make these price-lists the conclusive evidence of a rise in the price: a very good one, and by doing this the zemindars will no doubt get a certain amount of relief. I would however propose that the general wording of the present law should be retained and that the ground of enhancement should not be restricted, as is now proposed.

There are cases where the value of lands improves through other causes than those contemplated in this Bill; such cases might be rare and perhaps difficult to prove, but that is no reason why their existence should not be provided for.

The definition of "staple crops" in connection with enhancement, should not, I think, be limited to cheap food crops only.

All the old regulations are unanimous in declaring that the zemindars should enjoy the benefit of a change in the crops. Sir John Shore mentions this to have been the custom before the Permanent Settlement. At the present time, too, not only the produce of the food crops but sugar-cane, tobacco, betel, and various other crops also are appraised in those parts of the country where the rent is received in kind, and in the other districts we find a marked degree of difference in the rate of rents between those lands that grow cheap food crops and those that grow the more valuable crops.

This provision, therefore, is a "novel departure from the ancient law and the recognised customs of the country."

I see no necessity for any such additions being made to the old law which left it to the Court to give "a fair and equitable rate of rent" in all disputed cases, nor do I see the necessity for limiting the rate of enhancement. The inquiries which the Civil Court would have to make in each case would put that court in the best position to know what rate of enhancement would be fair and equitable, and there seems no sufficient reason for curtailing its power, and preventing its giving a higher enhancement than four annas in the rupee, even though it might be satisfied that a higher rate would be fair and equitable.

As regards the private enhancements, I fail to see the justice of doing away with free contract in this case. It is no easy thing for a landlord to get any enhancement by a private arrangement, and it is most undesirable that any loophole should be left for future dispute in such cases, and that the raiyat should at the time of the registration of his kubooliyats have the opportunity to contest his liability under the contract which he has already signed.

CHAPTER IX. OF BILL—MANAGEMENT OF JOINT ESTATES.

I gather from Paragraph 97 of the Statement of Object and Reasons appended to the original Bill introduced in Council, and from extracts referred to therein, that there exists an impression that the provisions for the appointment of managers for joint owners are much needed; and that the proposed legislation in that respect is necessitated by the repeal, in 1874, of certain portions of Regulation 5 of 1827, which has made the present law, Regulation 5 of 1812, Section 26, unworkable. The old regulations gave the power to the Government to appoint managers for properties, where there are joint proprietors, and where the conduct of these joint proprietors caused an apprehension of a breach of the peace. These regulations, however, were passed long before the enactment of the Criminal Procedure Code, according to which a breach of the peace was made a grave criminal offence. It was therefore found no longer necessary to make breach of the peace a civil as well as a criminal offence. The repeal of these regulations in 1874 was therefore on the footing of obsolete enactments, and, consequently, there is every reason, before reviving such procedure, to inquire how far the regulations of 1812 and 1827 were actually resorted to by public officers or private complainants, and with what success. I put a definite question to this effect in committee, but the only reply I obtained was that the information would be looked after; and to this day I have heard no more about it. In my humble opinion when such a law has solemnly been repealed as obsolete, the proposal for its revival ought to be preceded by the collection and publication of statistics. Neither theories nor mere general impressions should precede proposals for legislation. Facts, well established and clearly arranged, can alone justify them.

I cannot leave this subject without remarking that with the progress of education and the spread of levelling ideas a purely patriarchal form of Government is no longer needed for the benefit of the raiyats. If these provisions, therefore, are to be re-introduced, the proprietors of estates and tenures, and even the novel tenure-holders created by this Bill, could but view with dislike the proposal which leaves the entire management of their properties in the hands of the district judge without any right of appeal. Is there less chance of a judge giving a wrong decision in such cases than his order in them is to be final, or is the possible inquiry which may be caused by his order likely to be less than in the many other cases which as judge he has to decide, but in which the law refuses finality to his judgment, and provides for an appeal to the High Court?

While on this subject, I might mention that I proposed certain restrictions to be put on the management charges and the powers of the managers; I further proposed that the management charges should, on no account, be more than 12 per cent. of the gross income of the estate; and that in making this suggestion I was justified by the fact that in some cases the management charges under Government in the Court of Wards has exceeded even 20 per cent. of the gross income.

"The rate varied from division to division, having been as high as 25 per cent. in Rajshahye and Cooch Behar (where a thorough reorganisation of the system of management is urgently called for, and is now in progress), and as low as 5·1 per cent. in Orissa."—(Administration Report of Bengal, 1879-80, pages 44 and 45.)

Besides this, I made a proposal to the effect that no managers should be appointed on the ground of breach of the peace, unless all or at least one of the proprietors apply for a manager. I made this proposal, as I thought that, unless we put some restrictions of this sort, we are bound to see all the raiyats apply for joint managers in all ijmali estates and in all cases where they have instituted criminal proceedings for breach of the peace, simply to annoy the zemindars, and have failed. The Criminal Codes can more effectually treat this question than Civil Courts, as the powers vested in the Criminal Courts for the prevention of breaches of the peace are much more effective than those with which the Civil Courts are now proposed to be vested.

There was a third proposal which I made to the Select Committee, which was, that the managers should on no account be allowed to have the power of lowering rents without the consent of all the joint proprietors. I naturally think (and I moreover believe that everybody who has studied the subject at all carefully, or has any experience in the management of landed estates, and is besides not committed to official opinions on the subject, will agree with me in thinking) that the manager, who after all has only a temporary interest in the village, and who is supervised by a Government officer, whose other duties do not allow of his giving sufficient time to such supervision, would, according to the proposed Bill, have splendid opportunities of robbing the zemindars of their yearly income by reducing the rents of the raiyats, and filling his own pocket by taking a commission from the said raiyats as bribe for such reduction. What is the class from which the Government can, in such cases, recruit their staff of managers? Looking to the pay of such appointments it can only be much the same class from which they now recruit their Ameeris and Police Inspectors, who, as is notorious, are one of the greatest curses of the country. The Government cannot possibly hope to recruit their managers from the higher class of native gentry, on account of the small salaries such appointments are likely to command. The incomes of the ordinary joint proprietors are, as a rule, very small; and moreover in these days of heavy criminal penalties for "breaches of the peace" it is not likely that Government will be able to appoint one manager for a large number of estates, and so, by ensuring his getting a sufficiently large amount of monthly salary, secure the appointment of a trustworthy man.

To all the proposals about restrictions on the power of the managers, and the expenses of their establishment (which, in the opinions of the zemindars I have consulted, seems strictly necessary) I got the answer in Select Committee that the High Court is to be asked to frame rules. But we, the zemindars, maintain that the functions of the managers should not be left undefined, but that the Legislature should clearly define them. If it is really thought that the High Court knows more of this subject than the Legislative Council, then, why is it that the High Court was not consulted on the very much more important questions concerning the legal rights of zemindars guaranteed to them by the Permanent Settlement?

CHAPTER XII. OF BILL—RECORD OF RIGHTS.

It has been alleged that in some estates the zemindars do not keep up any proper records. If so, then in such zemindari survey and proper record of rights might be necessary; but this is no reason why in those estates where the records are perfect and where those concerned are contented with the records they have got, the raiyat and the zemindar should be put to the trouble of a survey.

All the zemindars measure their estates periodically according to the old system of measurement, and they have all some sort of rough measurement papers, and there are some who even go beyond this and have their estates not only measured but mapped out very much in the same way as is done in the estates of the Government. Their papers show the exact area and position of the raiyat's holdings, as well as the quality of the land and rates of rent payable.

There are a few zemindars who go even beyond this, and induce all their raiyats to sign the record book after fully explaining to each of them the particulars of his field, &c. This is no easy task for this zemindar. He has not, like the Settlement Officer of the Government in its khass mehals, the power to compel the attendance of the raiyate, hence he has to incur a great deal of expense, and the consequent trouble is immense.

Under these circumstances can it be said that it is necessary to have a general survey, at least those zemindaris where the records are perfect should, I think, be exempted.

I propose that if there is to be a survey it should be taken in hand in only those villages where the raiyats or zemindars wish it, as I do not see the justice of saddling them with the expenses of a survey which they do not wish for, and which, instead of doing good, is calculated to give rise to endless litigation.

In 1876 a law was passed compelling the zemindars to register their rights. We all know the amount of litigation this gave rise to. People who had no claims whatever came forward in the hope of getting some sort of claim recognised, and the result is that though eight years have elapsed since this Act was passed, many of the cases under it are still undecided, and many of the landlords who really have the best possible title to their properties, in addition to the attendant anxiety, have been unnecessarily put to a great deal of expense.

So much for the record of the rights of the zemindars who do not represent even one per cent. of the population.

If the period of eight years has been found insufficient to record the rights of such a small class of the people, will it not take ten times as long to record the rights of the tenants who represent nearly the whole population of Bengal and Bihar, and will not the litigation expense, worry, and agitation during this long period consequent on the necessary inquiries be injurious to all classes?

These are reasons which lead me to think that it is unnecessary to introduce the survey in any village except where those concerned request the Government to do it.

RECORD OF ZEMINDARS—KHAMAR OR PRIVATE LANDS.

This subject has been dealt with so very ably in the dissent by my hon. colleague, Rai Kristodas Pal Bahadur, that I need not add anything more than that I fully agree with all he has said about it.

CHAPTER XIII. OF BILL—DISTRAINT AND REALISATION OF RENTS.

It has been admitted on all sides that the zemindars need some more speedy and certain means for realisation of rent than they now enjoy, and that the present law is quite inoperative in those cases where all the tenants combine not to pay rents. Such a high authority as Sir James Caird recognises the difficulties of the zemindars in those estates where the "no rent" cry is once raised, and even in the Bengal Government's memorandum of January last, this difficulty is in a way admitted.

We zemindars had therefore naturally hoped that with this object we would be given some increased facilities for realisation of rent. In this, however, we have been greatly disappointed, and this Bill, if passed as it now stands, would leave us in this respect in a worse position than we now are, as instead of providing a summary and inexpensive method for the collection of our legal rents, it practically does away with distraint, the one only sure, equitable, and inexpensive process now allowed to us.

The present law provides that in those cases where the raiyats fall into arrears the zemindar can by his own agency serve them with notices stating the particulars of their arrears, and then at once distraint their crops. This is the only system possible in those parts of the country that lie on the frontier where a large portion of the tenants are not even British subjects, and therefore able to evade the jurisdiction of the British Civil Courts, and also in those vast tracts like the Cossidarah in the Purneah District, which are inhabited by a semi-nomadic class of tenants who seldom stop in the same locality for more than one harvest.

Even a day's delay in such cases is fatal. The crops, if the raiyats refuse to pay their rent, must be distrained as soon as they are ripe, and the raiyats should not have sufficient time to cut them without paying in their rents, as they leave the village for good directly they have gathered the harvest.

The Bill, however, proposes that in future the landlords must in every such case apply to the Civil Court, and that the crops should be only attached through that Court, thereby giving to the raiyat ample time to cut and carry off his crop before the Court officers can reach the spot to distraint it. Such a procedure not only throws extra and new costs on the zemindar on account of Court-fees and legal agency which must be employed, but it will result in the landlord having no power whatever to realise his rents from those semi-nomadic raiyats who leave the village directly after they have cut their crops. His only remedy will now lie in a civil suit against a raiyat of whose whereabouts even he may be ignorant, and to execute a decree against whom, if he succeeds in obtaining one, will be almost impossible.

I would specially record that it appears to me to be very strange that a Bill, one of the avowed objects of which was to give to landlords what is admittedly so necessary—viz., some increased facilities for the realisation of their rents, should leave the hands of the Select Committee in such a form that instead of doing this, it intensifies their present difficulties, and deprives them of the little relief they now enjoy.

It is the proprietors who are responsible for payment of their share of the Government revenue, which they have to collect from their raiyats, and it is not the Government revenue only that they have to realise; they have also of late been made to collect from their raiyats their share of certain Government cesses, and if by sunset of the day fixed for payment of the Government revenue they have not paid in their Government dues, they are liable to be summarily sold up, and turned out of their properties, and yet they are not to be given any means by which they can ensure their raiyats paying to them what they are bound under such a heavy penalty to pay to the Government to a day.

The practical working of the law as it now stands is this, that a proprietor may be sold up and ejected from his ancestral property owing to no fault of his own, but to his inability to recover his legal rent from his raiyats, an inability due to a defect in our existing laws, a defect which, as I above show, the proposed Bill aggravates.

I do not for a moment wish to dispute the justice or necessity of the law that makes it possible for large estates to be sold up for trifling arrears of Government revenue, but what I do wish to point out is that it seems to zemindars a want of justice on the part of Government to reserve to itself this power of summary sale while it refuses any summary power to the landlord for the collection of his rents from his raiyats.

The Government itself recognises the inutility of trusting to the Civil Courts only for the realisation of rents, by having peculiar laws of its own in its own estates or khass mehals, and, if necessary, for Government, surely such rules are equally so for us. I do most earnestly hope that this matter will be seriously looked into before any final conclusion on it is arrived at, as it is one which gravely affects the majority of the Bihar zemindars.

CHAPTER XVII.—FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

I wish to enter my strong protest against the abolition of freedom of contract between zemindars and their raiyats, and to the contemplated annulment of contract now existing, and entered into in confidence of the good faith of Government, by whom such contracts were specially legalised and thereby encouraged.

I would urge that no evidence has been shown of the alleged evils arising out of these contracts, or that zemindars have by an improper use of them, injured an unsuspecting peasantry; and that until the most conclusive proof can be given that such evils have become common, no such violent breach of existing arrangement fairly arrived at by mutual consent and sanctioned by Government should be allowed.

The proposed legislation on this point seems to start with the assumption that all contracts between a zemindar and raiyat must be prejudicial to the latter, an assumption utterly incorrect, as there are many cases in which a contract is directly to the advantage of the raiyat who benefits by complying with his landlord's wishes, to such contracts there could be no possible objection, and yet these also will now be barred.

Finally, I would desire to record, that I object strongly to the conclusions of this Select Committee, because I am of opinion that in such a momentous question, we have not had any sufficient data from which to form a fair judgment.

We should have had clear evidence given to us of the existence of those all-god causes, which not only necessitate so extreme a measure as a breach of Government guarantee and infringement of a proprietary right, but which call for a law avowedly so imperfect that the legal member of Government in introducing it has to admit that it is in itself likely to cause the extinction of the present class of cultivators for whose benefit it is specially passed; and to create in a few years a new class of cultivators unprotected by any law, and to leave the then Government of India to plunge the country once more into agitation and trouble in attempting to remedy the evils created by this Bill.

I would urge that if a Bill is now necessary to define and regulate the relations of landlord and tenant, it should be conceived in such a spirit and so framed that instead of creating future difficulties, it should set this subject at rest for ever.

I am also of opinion that it was impossible to give the proposed Bill proper consideration in Select Committee without evidence being taken on most of its points; and that this not having been done, and proper statistical information not having been given to and tested by us, our deliberations were unsatisfactory, and that the results arrived at are based on very insufficient data.

TRANSLATION OF THE FIRMAN.

[SEAL.]

Be it known to all the amils of the present and future, and to the jagirdars, karoriars officers and Nazims of Sooba Bihar, that in accordance with the order of the Emperor, who is universally obeyed, the long-standing zemindari of Pargana Dharmpur in Sirkar Monghyr and Debat Pargana of Sirkar Tirhut, belonging to the said Sooba Bihar, has been confirmed to Raja Madho Singh with appertaining rights—viz., inam rasooms, &c. It is necessary that the officers and kapardases of the Nizama should recognise the aforesaid Raja (whose zemindari having descended to him by succession is declared as such) to be the permanent zemindar (subject to loyalty), keep him in possession of the zemindari rights, cause his all demands to be paid up, act according to his advice, if the same be loyal and tending to benefit the raiyats. Further also, act in accordance with this Firman, which is high in dignity, they should strictly act up to the orders contained in the above Firman, and refrain from calling upon the production of the renewed sanad annually.

Dated the 29th Shawal of the 42nd year of accession.

D. FITZPATRICK, Secretary to the Government of India.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE following is the full text of a letter addressed to the Secretary of State for India by the members of the Viceroy's Council, forwarding a petition of the Central Committee of the zemindars and other landholders of Bengal on the Rent Bill to the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

"Calcutta, February 12, 1884.

My Lord,—We have the honour to transmit to your lordship a memorial addressed to the Secretary of State for India by the Central Committee of the zemindars and other landholders of Bengal on the subject of the Bill to amend the Rent Law, which is under the consideration of the Legislative Council.

2. On receipt of the memorial we communicated it to the Government of Bengal, in order to give that Government an opportunity of considering the allegations of the memorialists. We beg to submit the Local Government's reply, which takes the form of a memorandum prepared by its secretary in the Revenue Department, and which subjects the memorial to a minute and careful examination. We concur with the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal in considering that the memorandum successfully answers most, if not all, of the objections taken by the memorialists to the proposed measure, and we shall therefore confine ourselves to a few supplementary remarks on such points of the memorial as appear to call for special notice. In thus forwarding Mr. MacDonnell's memorandum, we do not thereby adopt each and all of his arguments, the more especially as in the historical examination of the early rights and status of the zemindars there is ground for some difference of opinion, and we have already placed your lordship in possession of our own views.

3. Passing by as scarcely demanding refutation such rhetorical denunciations of the Bill as that it is "a revolutionary measure which would make a tabula rasa of the vested rights of property in Bengal," that "precedents" (for our action) "must be sought for in the atrocious cruelties of Mahomedan usurpers," that "the measure is revolutionary in its character and subversive of all the rights of property in Bengal," we find the first allegation against our Government, which the memorialists attempt to in any way substantiate, is that we have misrepresented to your lordship the character and objects of the Permanent Settlement. Our statement was, as the memorialists correctly observe (paragraph 7), that the Permanent Settlement did not convert the zemindars into absolute proprietors as against the ryots; but that the latter possessed substantial rights, which though, not ascertained at the time, were saved in express terms, and that the Government reserved itself in Regulation 1, of 1723, the power to ascertain and settle these rights at any future time. This statement the memorialists attempt to controvert. They contend, first, that we ought not to have referred your lordship to the official correspondence of Lord Cornwallis, Sir John Shore, and the Court of Directors, but should, in conformity with the alleged practice of the law courts, have ascertained the effect of the Permanent Settlement from a consideration of the Regulations alone. Secondly, that we were wrong in supposing that Lord Cornwallis created the zemindars, whereas they had existed from time immemorial and their property had always been held sacred. Thirdly, that the rights of the ryots were finally and conclusively ascertained and settled by the Permanent Settlement Regulations, and that the Government did not reserve to itself the right to ascertain and settle them at a future time.

4. We will take these three points separately. As regards the first, we are still of opinion that it is open to us, in considering the nature of an administrative measure like the Permanent Settlement, to consult the records of the Government of the time, with the view, not of explaining away the distinct provisions of the statute book, but of tracing the origin and object of these provisions. The distinct provision in question is the reservation in Section 7 of Regulation 1 of 1793, of the right of the Government to enact such regulations as might be thought necessary for the protection and welfare of subordinate owners and ryots. The records of the Government of the time explain the origin of this provision, which might otherwise be considered more surplusage, in a clear and satisfactory way. The doubt in Sir John Shore's mind was, as is well known, whether a Permanent Settlement ought to have been made while the rights of the ryots were still imperfectly ascertained and badly protected. Lord Cornwallis met this doubt by denying that the Permanent Settlement would in any way prejudice the rights of the cultivator, and the Court of Directors, in affirming this opinion, directed that a reservation of the power of Government to protect the ryot in his rights should be expressly notified to the landholders when the Permanent Settlement was introduced. As Mr. MacDonnell in his memorandum shows, our view of this measure can be perfectly well maintained upon the text of the Regulations themselves, without gloss or commentary. But in reporting our conclusions on the tenancy question to your lordship, it did not occur to us to impose upon ourselves restrictions opposed alike to common-sense, to the practice of the law courts as exemplified in the Great Rent Case, and to the usage of numerous Parliamentary Committees which from time to time have inquired into the affairs of the East India Company in Bengal.

5. As regards the second point, we would merely remark that the memorialists are fighting a shadow. We have never asserted that the zemindars as a body were without possessory or hereditary rights before the Permanent Settlement. On the contrary, we said that while some of them were mere fathers, others were Hindu chieftains, or possessed pre-existent rights of various kinds. That in 1793 these rights had to a great extent become obliterated, and that the zemindar had sunk into the tax-collector is fully proved by the discussions as to the nature of the zemindari right to which the memorialists refer. The question raised by Mr. Grant, the Sherishtadar of Bengal, in his papers republished in the Fifth Report, to which the memorialists refer, was not whether the zemindars were the absolute owners of the soil as against the ryot, but whether they had any interest in it at all outside those conveyed in the Sanads or in their farming leases. Could the zemindari right be transferred. Could it be inherited? Could it be resumed at the pleasure of the Crown? These were the points on which Mr. Grant expressed opinions adverse to the zemindars. His opinions were extreme, and the Court of Directors felt obliged to dissent from them. The Court of Directors accepted the decision of Parliament that the zemindari right was frequently an hereditary one, and that where this was the case, the zemindar should not be dispossessed in favour of a revenue-farmer. But the discussion as regards the memorialists' case is quite irrelevant, and loses all significance when it is recollected that the rights of the ryot were not then in dispute, and that they were afterwards affirmed in the most distinct manner by the Court of Directors in the very despatch in which the proprietary right in the soil was conceded to the zemindars as against the State.

6. As to the third point, the memorialists quote a few extracts from Sir John Shore's Minute of 18th June, 1789, to show that before the Permanent Settlement was made the rights of the ryots had been fully ascertained and defined. It would have been more candid had the memorialists referred also to those parts of the Minute in which Sir John Shore opposes the immediate carrying out of the Permanent Settlement, on the ground that time was required to ascertain the rights of the ryots and to protect them from the exorbitance of the zemindars by means of written leases and covenants. The memorialists might also have referred to Lord Cornwallis's argument against further delay, which was to the effect that these measures for the protection of the ryot would take long to complete, and that the Permanent Settlement would be no obstacle to their gradual completion. To supplement the quotations given in the memorial in these particulars would considerably lengthen this despatch, and we will therefore content ourselves with referring your lordship to the accompanying volume, which contains extracts from the more important documents bearing on the Permanent Settlement. We would also invite your lordship's attention to the Tagore Law Lectures for 1874-75 on the Land Tenures of Lower Bengal, by Mr. A. Phillips, an eminent member of the Calcutta Bar and Standing Counsel to Government, in which the subject of the Permanent Settlement is examined with great moderation and ability. We have indeed had some doubts whether any remarks were required on this part of the memorial since your lordship, in your despatch of August 14, 1882, has fully accepted the position that the Permanent Settlement has not affected our right to legislate on behalf of the Bengal peasantry. But as the memorialists have chosen to appeal to antiquity, we have thought it better to furnish some answer to the charge that we had neglected to refer Her Majesty's Government to the original documents which formed the basis of the Permanent Settlement.

7. The second allegation brought by the memorialists against our Government is that certain provisions of the Bill involve a radical departure from the ancient law and custom of the country. In particular they take exception to (1) the proposed definition of settled ryot; (2) the restrictions placed on freedom of contract; (3) the imposition of maxima limits of rent; (4) the transferability of occupancy rights; (5) the distinction between khamar and ryoti land. To defend the provisions of the Bill in these points would require us to traverse the whole field of the rent question, and to repeat arguments and statements already familiar to your lordship. We do not think this to be incumbent on us, more especially as the ground has once more been exhaustively surveyed by the Government of Bengal in its letter of 27th September last, with which was submitted a very large number of opinions, official and non-official, on the Bill. Mr. MacDonnell has commented on the characteristic fact that the memorialists have abstained from all reference to that letter, in which the main provisions of the Bill are most carefully and thoroughly considered from the standpoint not only of ancient law and custom, but also of the present economic condition of Bengal. Had the memorialists impugned the arguments or conclusions of that letter on any point, we should be in a better position to appreciate their present objections, and to consider whether the Bill in any particular goes beyond the necessities of the case. If your lordship will refer to the letter in question, it will be seen that the Government of Bengal has suggested numerous alterations in the Bill, some of which touch the provisions objected to by the memorialists. These suggestions have been placed before the Select Committee to which the Bill has been referred; and as the Committee was especially constituted with a view to securing the proper representation of the zemindars, we have no doubt that every provision of the Bill, which may be thought to injuriously affect their interests, will be most carefully considered. While we thoroughly agree with the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal that the Bill, as a whole, is a constitutional and successful effort to remedy abuses which exist very widely, and which are incompatible with the peace and prosperity of the Province,* we think it quite possible that some of the provisions may be found to require modification.

8. For these reasons our remarks on the objections of the memorialists must necessarily be of a general character. In regard to their first objection, we would merely observe that the definition of settled ryot is in strict accordance with your lordship's decision that every resident ryot should have a right of occupancy in the land which he occupies and pays rent for, and that a resident ryot should be one who himself, or through his ancestor, has occupied any land in the village or estate for twelve years. The necessity for this definition has been fully established in the Bengal letter of the 26th September, to which we have already referred your lordship. The memorialists' second objection refers to the restrictions which the Bill places on the ryot's freedom to contract himself out of his occupancy right, or to agree to enhancements of rent. That some restrictions are necessary is a point that admits of no doubt, but it is for the Select Committee to consider whether the precise form they assume in the Bill is the best that can be devised. The same remark applies to the third objection of the memorialists as to the imposition of maxima limits of rent. The Select Committee will, no doubt, consider whether such limitations are economically sound and capable of practical application, and whether, if this be the case, the limits tentatively proposed in the Bill are on the whole fair to landlord and tenant. The memorialists' statements in paragraph 46 on this point deserve notice, because they are characteristic of their whole line of argument. In objecting to a maximum they urge that the zemindars will "consider that they have a right to get what the Government says they are entitled to receive." But Government has never said anything of the kind. The Bill said that on certain grounds, and by specified rules of proportion, rent might be enhanced, but that in no case should it be enhanced above the maximum. This is very different from saying that a zemindar is always "entitled to receive the maximum." Again, they assert that in some districts "there will be an enormous depreciation of property, and the landlords will simply be ruined for an idea." They keep out of sight the fact that the Bill starts with maintaining existing rents, and does not allow of reduction on the ground that "the existing rent is above the maximum." Although the memorialists strongly object to this portion of the Bill, it should not be overlooked that at one time the zemindars of Bengal were in favour of an absolute standard of rent expressed in terms of the gross produce. As bearing on this point, the extracts given in Part 2 of the Appendix to this despatch from the correspondence between Sir Richard Temple and the British Indian Association, and also paragraph 20 of the Bengal letter of Sept. 27 last, may be referred to. The fourth objection of the memorialists is as to the powers of sale and subletting which the Bill confers on the ryot. Both these proposed incidents of the occupancy right have been carefully examined by the Government of Bengal in the letter already mentioned, and important statistical evidence as to the general existence of the custom of transfer has been adduced. In the face of this evidence the absolute denial of the right of transfer to occupancy-ryots, even if, as asserted, it were desirable in their own interests, is out of the question. The extent to which the landlords should be authorised to control or to benefit from such transfers or to exercise a right of pre-emption, are points on which any reasonable suggestions on the part of the landlords will be carefully considered. The same remark applies to the last objection of the memorialists as the restrictions placed by the Bill on the landlord's power to deal with lands which have come into his possession by sale or abandonment. Doubts as to the expediency of these restrictions have been expressed by the Government of Bengal, and an alternative scheme for protecting the non-occupancy tenant against the excessive enhancement and arbitrary eviction, which would lessen the necessity for them, has been suggested. We are, therefore, unable to discuss this question until the report of the Select Committee is before us.

9. We would add a few remarks on the arguments by which the objections discussed in the preceding paragraph are maintained. In paragraph 33 the memorialists "unhesitatingly assert that there never was a time when the zemindar could not make what terms he pleased with his ryots, and that the pargana rates, or the established rates, were the rates which the zemindar himself established." And they instance the illegal cesses and other dues exacted by the landowners in the time of Lord Cornwallis as one of the proofs of this assertion. We will not repeat the evidence which has convinced us and former Indian Governments that the acts of the zemindars have not invariably been the measure of their rights, and that illegal cesses and awabs presuppose the existence of established rates of rent. We must content ourselves with referring your lordship to the extracts from the early authorities given in our appendix, and also to the opinions of the judges in the Great Rent Case which we have reprinted for facility of reference.

10. In paragraphs 40 and 41, the memorialists state that we have determined to fix a maximum rate of rent for the whole province, simply because one-fourth of the gross produce was thought to correspond with the "rebbah" or money rental of the Mogul Government. The memorialists contend that we are misinformed as to the "rebbah," that, in excluding the more valuable crops such as opium, tobacco, or sugar cane from the category of staple crops, we are depriving the zemindar of his just dues, and that by reducing all existing rents to the limit of one-fifth the gross produce we shall enormously depreciate the value of landed property (paragraph 46). As regards the "rebbah" we may refer your lordship to the extract in our appendix from the Fifth Report of the Select Parliamentary Committee, which bears out our statement that it represented one-fourth of the gross produce. But we may point out that in proposing a maximum limit of rent in terms of the produce, we relied on the analogy of the Mogul rebbah than on the fact that an easily ascertainable limit was required for the preparation of tables of rates, and that the landlords themselves were in favour of a gross produce standard. The further statement of the memorialists, that we propose to cut down all rents to this standard, is, as we have already shown, absolutely contrary to the fact. Nor need we enlarge on the reasons which would require the exclusion of the more valuable crops, from the list of staples, supposing a gross produce standard to be eventually adopted. Tobacco, opium, or sugar-cane are of the nature of garden crops, and the value of the gross produce in the case of such crops represents to a very large extent the toil and expenditure of the cultivator, which, under any reasonable system of rent, is left untaxed by the landlord.

11. In paragraph 48 the saleability of the occupancy right is objected to on the ground that it is opposed to the early Regulations, and that it will hasten the ruin of the cultivator. We have already pointed out that the agricultural custom of to-day recognises the right of sale in most districts of Bengal. Mr. MacDonnell's 12th paragraph shows that this right was admitted by the British India Association to exist generally as far back as 1851, and we would further refer your lordship to the extracts in Part 2 of our Appendix as showing that the zemindars have no objection to the sale of occupancy holdings in execution of their own demands of rent.

12. We have noticed these objections at some length as they concern particular provisions of the Bill, and will, as already said, receive full consideration from us at the proper time. The concluding portion of the memorial calls for fewer remarks, as it contains allegations of a general character which at this stage of the question appear to be out of place. Your lordship has already expressed yourself satisfied from the facts before you that legislative interposition is necessary, as the existing law has failed to ensure to the ryot security of tenure, and has been productive of discontent among both zemindars and ryots. We need not therefore refute the memorialists' assertion that there is no political necessity for the measure. The memorialists attempt to support their position by extracts from the Annual Administration Reports of the Province, but Mr. MacDonnell, whose memorandum on this point is especially valuable, has shown that these reports, if cited in evidence, are more damaging than favourable to the memorialists. In paragraph 67 of the memorial the value of the inquiry made by Mr. Finucane during 1882 in North Behar, by the orders of the Bengal Government, is impugned, and he is styled a violent supporter of the ryots. But if your lordship will refer to the Board's letter* of Feb. 19 last, submitting the report of that officer, it will be seen that Mr. Dampier, the Senior Member of the Board, expressed his opinion that the state of things there described "calls for the introduction in the Rent Bill of a provision for a reduction of the existing rents where they are found to be excessive." The memorialists are apparently ready to submit to Mr. Dampier's opinion (paragraph 70) in such matters, and yet this experienced officer has felt himself constrained by the facts of the impugned inquiry to recommend a far more drastic provision than any which the Bill contains. The memorialists further contend that the great rise in rents, which is reported by Mr. Finucane, proves nothing, as a similar inquiry made by another officer, Mr. Macpherson, shows that the rent roll of a Government estate in another district has trebled in five years. If your lordship will verify this reference, * the true value of the argument will appear. The estate in question (the Chhawalpara Estate), consists mainly of waste lands, which are temporarily brought under cultivation, and then abandoned, so that the rent-roll constantly fluctuates, while the rates of rent remain the same; whereas Mr. Finucane's inquiries went to prove that the actual rates of rent in North Behar had increased much more rapidly than the rise in prices would justify. We do not wish to lay undue stress upon this fact, but we think it desirable to draw attention to the misleading character of the memorialists' argument.

*Bengal letter No. 972 of 27th September, 1883, paragraph 38.

13. A similar mistake is made with respect to Regulation 51 of 1795, which is referred to in support of the statement that rents in Behar are lower than the rates which were paid in the last century in the Province of Benares. The Regulation prescribes a general form of lease in which certain rates of rent per bigha ("whether of 3 deraiahee or pergunnah measurement or dherawat") are entered by way of illustration. That no conclusion can be drawn from these figures is evident from the fact that they are hypothetically applied in the exemplar to three different units of measurement. The memorialists' argument is really based on an illustration appended to a section of an Act.

14.—The last allegation which we need notice is that the weight of official opinion is against the weight of the Bill. Mr. MacDonnell has shown how exaggerated are assertions that the Divisional Commissioners "are to a man opposed to it," and that "there are not five officers of any standing or position in the province who approve of it. But while we agree with Mr. MacDonnell that the memorialists have very greatly exaggerated the degree to which the Bill has been unfavourably received, we are prepared to admit that it has encountered a considerable amount of criticism. As your lordship can form your own conclusions on this point, we refrain from any remarks on the opinions of local officers which have appeared in the Gazette, and have been transmitted to your lordship. A large and complicated measure like that on which we are engaged necessarily gives rise to much difference of opinion on points both of principle and of details. We neither expected nor desired unanimity, and we are fully sensible of the impossibility of framing any rent law for the vast Province of Bengal and Behar which will successfully meet every case and be equally suitable to all localities. We are satisfied, however, that the bulk and weight of opinion taken from time to time under successive Lieutenant Governors is distinctly in favour of the main principles of the Bill. As regards the most important of these—the establishment of the occupancy right on a broad basis—the zemindars themselves admit that ninety per cent. of the ryots now have the right. The difficulty lies in the inability of the ryots to prove this under the existing law. In seeking a definition which shall be broad enough to secure the occupancy right to the individual ryot, the Bill in no sense encroaches on, much less "confiscates," the property of the landowner.

15. Finally, we desire to point out that the Bill is now under the consideration of a Select Committee consisting of the Hon. Mr. Ilbert, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the Hon. Sir S. C. Bayley, the Hon. Mr. Reynolds, the Hon. Mr. Evans, the Hon. the Maharaja of Darbhanga, the Hon. Rai Kristodas Pal, the Hon. Mr. Gibbon, the Hon. Mr. Amir Ali, the Hon. Mr. Quinton, and the Hon. Mr. Hunter, whose experience specially fits them for dealing with the subject. These gentlemen have for the last two months met twice a week for its consideration. It is estimated that they will be occupied for several weeks to come in completing their first revise of the Bill, and it will then probably be republished for consideration and further criticism by local officers, and a copy will, as usual, be forwarded to your lordship. It cannot be doubted that in the course of such an exhaustive examination many details of the Bill will undergo important modifications, and that due consideration will be given to the objections entertained by the memorialists to its provisions. In dealing with the memorial, it is important that this fact should be borne in mind.

We have the honour to be, my lord, your lordship's most obedient, humble servants,

J. GIBBS, C. P. ILBERT, S. C. BAYLEY, T. C. HOPE, A. COLVIN.

* Gazette of India for October 20th, 1833, page 1765.

Major H. B. Winter, of the Royal Fusiliers, has been granted fifteen months' leave on private affairs.

A considerable number of changes among the officers of the Bombay garrison are about to take place. Major Dundas, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, who proceeds to Mhow, will be succeeded by Major W. O'neagh, 7th Dragoon Guards. Deputy Surgeon General D. A. C. Fraser is likely to act for Surgeon General Auchinleck, who proceeds home on three months' leave. Lieutenant Colonel Blowers, second-in-command, 10th Bombay N.L., has sent in his papers for permission to retire. Colonel Dodd, of the same regiment, has applied for furlough, and it is thought Lieutenant Colonel Stock will be appointed to officiate for him.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

Contemporary Review.—"It is most interesting, as well as . . . instructive throughout."

Graphic.—"The subject is of abounding interest. . . Mr. Brayley Hodgetts deserves hearty thanks for bringing such a life so clearly before the public."

Academy.—"The account of the third battle of Plevna. . . is one of the most stirring pieces of military journalism that we have ever read."

Public Opinion.—"Such will suffice to give us an idea of the 'Reminiscences' of the man who knew no fear, who passed as by a miracle through every danger; and who, had he lived, might have become the greatest soldier of our age. . . The work is, in every respect, thoroughly well got up. . . Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. E. A. Brayley Hodgetts for the able manner in which he has translated the work into English, and who has succeeded in making it so interesting and readable."

Whitehall Review.—"The Author's peculiarly happy anecdotal style of narration accords perfectly with the eventful career of Skobelev, his brilliant exploits, and his versatile genius."

St. James's Gazette.—"The new Biography of Skobelev is . . . deeply interesting, and the translator has done well to make it known to the English public."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, May 1; Madras and Allahabad, April 30; Calcutta, April 29.

WE should like to hear the criticisms of our youthful friends of the "India Reform Association"—and the other young Indian gentlemen who have tied themselves up to the Radical party in England—on the debates in the House of Commons last Thursday on the tobacco, duties and the silver duties.

It was virtually admitted by all, that the cheap and good tobacco of India—that might easily afford the whole of our English working-classes a wholesome "smoke" at a far less cost than they now have to pay for the American tobacco patronised by our great importing firms—are practically prohibited by the monstrous duty imposed by the Government. On the other hand, the costly Havannah cigars that are smoked only by the wealthy, pay comparatively a trifling duty. And yet Mr. Wills, Liberal member for Coventry, and member of the great tobacco-manufacturing firm of W. D. and H. O. Wills, got up and declared from his place in Parliament that nothing but a "preferential duty" (!) would obtain any sale for Indian tobacco in England. We venture to say that this statement is absolutely contradicted by the experience of every Anglo-Indian smoker—who knows full well that the English preference for American tobacco is a mere matter of habit, and that a taste for good Indian tobacco, such as that of Dindigal, is readily acquired.

WE consider this question a very important one, both to India and to the English working classes. The Radicals profess to be Free-traders; and yet India is distinctly handicapped, on nearly every point of the British tariff, by their selfishness. The opening-up of the English market to Indian tobacco would mean the creation of a magnificent Indian industry that would pour millions of capital into the country. And yet the Liberal member for Coventry abets the Radical Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Courtney) in refusing justice to India in this matter. What say our talkative friends of the "India Reform Association" to this?

AND what say they to the opposition of Mr. Alderman Lawrence, Liberal member for the City of London, to the removal of the iniquitous duties on Indian silver goods? The Liberal Alderman declares that the abolition of these duties would be "an injustice" to the silver craftsmen of Clerkenwell! Are these the Free-trade principles of the Liberal party?

THE telegrams from India this week are perhaps more disquieting than any that have ever been received in England, considering that Lord Ripon's Government is still in the enjoyment of every good, such as peace and plenty, that Providence can bestow, and that cannot be taken away by Viceregal incompetence. On all sides, wherever harm and danger can possibly be created by administrative folly and mismanagement, Indian affairs look gloomy in the extreme.

THE progress of the Native agitation "to strengthen Lord Ripon's hands" against his own responsible advisers and against the Secretary of State is such as can hardly fail to cause even Lord Ripon himself to reflect seriously on the irreparable mischief he is hatching. The start of "a well-known Calcutta agitator"—supposed here to be Mr. Surendranath Banerjee—on a political stumping campaign in Upper India, taken in combination with the tone of the Native Press as reported by the Times correspondent, is a way of "strengthening Lord Ripon's hands" that we should think even Mr. Ilbert could hardly approve.

A VERY circumstantial rumour is current in London, that the "honourable English friend" who has been so much talked of of late, and who seems to have set all this mischievous agitation a-going, is no less a personage than the Hon. C. P. Ilbert himself! We cannot believe this to be true, and we sincerely hope that Mr. Ilbert will be able flatly and entirely to contradict it; but in that case it is clear, that it ought to be contradicted, authoritatively, and without delay. But for the many amazing instances we have had of Mr. Ilbert's lamentable lack of discretion and judgment, it would have been impossible for such a rumour to have obtained currency at all.

THAT seditious placards should have been seized at Amritsar, is sufficiently disquieting in itself. But the affair becomes far more serious, when the Government is forced to admit officially that "as a measure of precaution the garrison was slightly strengthened!" This astounding statement demands the fullest and clearest explanation.

Is Lord Ripon content, now that a "well-known Calcutta agitator" has been lecturing at Allahabad, and drawing "a contrast between England and Russia by no means flattering to the former?" Let His Excellency collate this pleasing fact with the disclosures of Prince Dondoukoff-Korkasoff's paper, the Kavkas, with which we deal elsewhere. Side by side, also with these studies he might profitably ponder General Hamley's lecture of last Friday. And then it might be well for him to remember that, in order to please ignorant Radicals at home and "well-known Calcutta agitators" in India, he has thrown into a state of panic, and almost of despair, the one class of our native fellow-subjects who have more than all others been distinguished for their devoted loyalty to the British Crown. Surely, Lord Ripon has now done enough to satisfy his ambition of making a name for himself in history! The man who set fire to the temple of Diana at Ephesus, with a similar end in view, will henceforth be remembered only as a very humble prototype of the "great" Viceroy of India.

WAR appears to have already broken out on the Northern frontier between Nepal and Thibet. The state of Burma is described by the Rangoon correspondent of the Times in three words—"Ruin stalks abroad." An attempt at a punitive expedition from Quetta against the Kakars has collapsed in a ridiculous fiasco calculated to bring disgrace on the British name. Copies of the Mahdi's proclamation have been "obtained" by the Indian Government, in India, Turkish Arabia, and Persia.

IN fine, the general state of affairs is so cheerful that Dr. Hunter is to come home "at the public expense" to give evidence before the Railway Committee, while Mr. Ilbert is in busy squelching the Bengal zemindars, and Lord Ripon is waiting for his hands to be "strengthened" by well-known Calcutta agitators against his own Government and the Secretary of State.

THE judgment in the great Hyderabad libel case, Mr. Seymour Keay versus the Deccan Times, will be read with interest by those who remember that Mr. Seymour Keay is one of the Vice-Presidents of the "India Reform Association," and that he was supposed to have gone to India to promote the interests of that Association. To comment upon that judgment, or upon Mr. Keay's cross-examination, would be to gild refined gold and spoil a good joke. To enjoy the joke thoroughly, however, Mr. Keay's evidence in regard to the transactions between himself and Poorunmull's firm ought to be read side-by-side with the speech which he made last year in support of the Ilbert Bill at the meeting of the East India Association in Exeter Hall.

THE St. James's Gazette of Saturday last says:—

"The Indian Government missed its opportunity. Had its loan come out a week sooner it would have gone off much more satisfactorily. Now the demand for such stocks has fallen. Still the loan has been successful. The prices tendered ranged from £93 11s. 6d. to £97, the average being £94 4s. 2d. The following is the official announcement issued yesterday evening:—Tenders for £3,000,000 India Government Three per Cent. Stock were opened to-day at the Bank of England. The applications amounted to £3,127,800, at prices varying from £97 to £93.10s. (the minimum). Tenders at £93 11s. 6d. will receive about 98½ per cent. of the amount applied for, those above that price being allotted in full. The average price obtained for the stock is £94 4s. 2d. per cent.

THE Englishman gives the following report on the Calcutta Freight Market, for the week ending April 29:—

"There has been again rather more doing during the last week in freight engagements, both by steamers and sailing vessels. Nearly all the business doing is for London, other ports are totally neglected, with the exception, perhaps, of the Mediterranean, for which there has been some little demand. Four sailing vessels have been worked off during the week for London, one for Liverpool, one for the States, and two for Mauritius, leaving our unfixed tonnage to-day at 44,000 tons. Rates of freights have hardly shown any fluctuation, they were quoted slightly better for steamers; by sailors wheat had a firmer tendency, whilst seeds are weaker."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending May 2:—

"Mr. W. H. Merk, C.S., Assistant Commissioner, Punjab; Major Anderson, Paymaster, Royal Irish Fusiliers; Rev. John Clay, late missionary S. P. G."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE reports on the State of the season and prospects of the crops for the week ending the 23rd ult. are as follow:—

"Rain has fallen in varying quantities in British Burma, Assam, and Bengal during the past week. Showers have also occurred in Madras, Mysore, and Coorg, and in parts of Bombay and Sind. In Central India, North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and Punjab there has been no rain. Standing crops continue in good condition in Madras and Mysore, and prospects are unchanged. The rabi harvest is still in progress in several districts of the Bombay Presidency. Locusts are disappearing from Kanara. Some injury has been done by worms and high winds, to the crops in parts of Hyderabad (Sind). In Berar the rabi harvest has been completed, and the land is being prepared for the kharif. In Central India and Rajputana prospects are good, and the crops have for the most part been cut. In the Punjab harvesting has commenced, but has not yet extended to all districts. Prospects are favourable in the northern districts, but in the south-east of the province the rabi on unirrigated lands has proved a failure, and the cattle are suffering in some districts from scarcity of fodder and water. In the North-West Provinces and Oudh reaping is almost over, and thrashing and winnowing are in active progress. Unirrigated crops have given a poor outturn. Markets are reported to be well stocked. Fodder is scarce in some tracts, but the condition of the cattle is generally good. In the Central Provinces ploughing for the kharif has commenced, and, except in a few districts, the rabi has been gathered. The recent rain in Bengal has facilitated agricultural operations, but more is needed everywhere for the sowing of the autumn rice crop, which has already commenced in some places. The boro or winter rice crop is now being harvested. In Assam rice sowings are in progress, but rain is still much wanted in Gauhati. In British Burma preparations for the ensuing rice crop have not yet commenced. Small-pox continues generally prevalent, but it is abating in Bengal and Burma. Cholera is reported in most provinces, but severe only at Sara, in the Pubna district, Bengal. Prices are on the whole keeping steady."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated May 18:—

"The persistent efforts to rouse native feeling on the question of the age of competitors for Civil Service appointments which certain agitators in Calcutta and Bombay have been making for some time back have been so far successful that every native newspaper in India has taken the matter up. It is curious to note that every journal discusses the subject in the same tone, and follows exactly the same lines of argument; and this fact alone would raise a suspicion that the writers all derive their inspiration from the same source."

"Flattery of Lord Ripon is the most marked feature in these articles. They one and all assert that he is personally anxious to meet their wishes, and is only prevented from doing so by the opposition of the Secretary of State. The exposure by the Indian Daily News of the confidential circular addressed to native sympathisers by two Bombay Parsees shows that the leaders of the agitation have at least one English supporter who encourages them to take this view, and urges them to strengthen Lord Ripon's hands by sending in as many memorials as possible, so as to bring the subject to the notice of Parliament, because, as he goes on to say, Lord Kimberley will pay ten times more attention to the House of Commons than to any representations which Lord Ripon may make."

"This mysterious supporter is described in the circular as 'an honoured English friend who is in the best position to advise us, and whose advice we have always gratefully acted upon.' Whoever he may be, it is certain that he has done serious mischief by encouraging the noisy demagogues of the Presidency towns to bring agitation to bear upon the House of Commons, and by representing Lord Ripon as requiring to be 'strengthened' against his own Council and against the Secretary of State. The matter, as the Indian Daily News says, is one which should be cleared up, not on the low grounds of an individual's misinterpretation of his duty or misconception of the obligations and responsibilities of a high position, but on the far higher ground of the honour of the Indian Government and the good government and well-being of the Empire."

"Already a well-known Calcutta agitator has started on a lecturing tour in Upper India. In addressing a meeting at Allahabad, he described the existing rule regarding the maximum age of competitors for the Civil Service as 'excluding the children of the soil from all posts of trust and emolument in their own country,' and then proceeded to draw a contrast between England and Russia by no means flattering to the former."

"A rumour has been circulated to the effect that some seditious placards had lately been found posted up at Umritsir, and that it had been thought advisable to strengthen the garrison there. The placards were stated by some persons to have emanated from the fanatical sect of the Kuhas, while others connected them with the introduction of local self-government. It is now officially stated that the placards were, in fact, discovered last month, and that, as a measure of precaution, the garrison was slightly strengthened, but that the temporary effervescence which was created has now quite subsided. It seems certain that some ill-feeling does prevail between the various religious sects at Umritsir."

"A scheme for the separation of the executive from the judicial branch of the service has been sanctioned for the Punjab, and will be introduced shortly. Its main provisions are intended to relieve the Commissioners and Deputy-Commissioners from judicial work, and to re-arrange the grades of the service so as to give fair and equal chances of promotion."

"Dr. Hunter will start for England this week to give evidence before the Parliamentary Committee on the Railways. He will travel at the public expense, and it is generally believed that he will be deputed to represent the Viceroy's special views on the subject."

"The Official Gazette contains a note by Mr. Branford, meteorological reporter to the Government, concerning the influence of the Himalayan snowfall on the monsoon. He says that the thickness and extent of the snows in spring may serve as a trustworthy basis for a forecast of the summer's rain. Last winter, he says, the higher ranges of the Himalayas had a large, and in some places an unusually heavy snowfall, and the snow-mantled area is more extensive than usual this year. If, during the next two months, there is no great addition to the snow fields, the monsoon will not be seriously prejudiced; otherwise the rainfall will be dangerously deficient."

"The Government of Madras, despite strong protests from all classes of the people of the Presidency town, has resolved to remove the Military Accounts office to Bangalore, a step which will cause the most serious inconvenience to all except a few superior officers."

"The Government of Ceylon has inquired of the Indian Government whether the latter will advance to it 15 lakhs of rupees temporarily, if needed. This the Indian Government promised to do, but no further application has yet been received. The Ceylon officials thought that the money might be wanted in connection with the guarantee by the Government of the Oriental Bank's notes. It is stated that the Governor of Ceylon in guaranteeing the Oriental Bank's notes, acted in opposition, to all his Council. His action, however, has met with the cordial approval of the entire population of the island, and it seems to be clear that his determined attitude alone prevented a serious panic."

"The long-threatened war between Nepal and Tibet appears to have begun. A report reached Khatmandu on the 8th inst. that the Tibetans were moving forward to seize the stores which the Nepalese had been accumulating on the frontier. On the 12th four regiments, in all 2,000 strong, were despatched by different roads to the frontier. The men were provided with warm clothing and tents. General Puddum Jung, youngson of Jung Bahadur, commands the brigade. The Nepalese troops are greatly superior to the Tibetans in equipment and discipline, but they will have to contend with serious difficulties, owing to the climate and the nature of the country.

"The 45th Sikhs have been ordered to proceed from Jhelum to Quetta, probably for employment in the intended expedition against the Kakars in the autumn. From further reports regarding the attack on the Dhuki outpost, it appears that the post was held by thirteen Sepoys of the 3rd Bombay Infantry, while the raiders numbered about one hundred. Seven of the Sepoys were killed, but the remaining six kept their assailants at bay until the arrival of a squadron of the 10th Bengal Lancers, upon seeing whom the Kakars retreated to the hills. A movable column was at once organised at Quetta, with the intention of striking a severe blow without delay; but it was discovered that there was no available transport for such a large force, and the expedition had to be postponed till September. This is a matter for great regret, as the delay will deprive the lesson of half its efficacy.

"Bahram Khan, a Ghilzai chief and a relative of the late Osmatulla Khan, has been expelled from Afghanistan by the Ameer.

"A severe earthquake has taken place in Punjdeen.

"It is alleged, but on doubtful authority, that the Ameer lately said in Durbar that the Russians, accompanied by Ayoub Khan, had occupied Merv and would presently march on Herat. He then went on to say that they must prepare themselves or obtain a British force to help them, whereupon all present protested against the latter idea, and declared that they would rather die fighting, like the Ghazis.

"The rumour that the Afridis had announced an intention of raiding into British territory has been contradicted by the Punjab Government.

"It is stated that the Indian Government has obtained copies of the proclamations of the Mahdi circulated in Turkish Arabia and Persia. Those which penetrated into India appear to have caused no excitement.

"Disturbances still continue among the Kachyens, near Mogoung.

"A Rangoon Correspondent thus describes the condition of the country:—'Ruin stalks abroad; robberies are committed with impunity, even in Mandalay. Food is scarce, and is sold at famine rates; and an epidemic is waisting the vital energies of the people.'"

THE following telegram was sent on the 15th inst., by the St. Petersburg correspondent to the Times:—

"The official newspaper from Tiflis, the Kavkas, which has so suddenly brought itself into notice, has launched forth another article on the journey of Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff, which has thrown the Foreign Office in St. Petersburg into quite a fever of alarm. The official press here, too, is altogether beside itself, and knows not how to contradict or explain away these indiscretions of Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff's organ. This article is not more insolent and threatening towards England than indiscreet as regards Russia, and however disposed the Russian Foreign Office may have been to let the first imprudent and premature announcement pass of Russia's advance of her frontier line to Old Sarakhs, it cannot well ignore this second oracular, and somewhat foolish announcement, and in some sort also challenge to the British Empire in India.

"Accordingly, orders were at once issued to suppress all telegrams referring to the matter, while the Foreign Office is arriving at a decision as to the best means of humiliating and putting down this upstart of the Caucasus, which, under the ægis of the comparatively independent rule of Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff, acts as if it were the only organ of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

"Sir Edward Thornton was at the Ministry again yesterday to see M. de Giers, and no doubt this matter was referred to. In the circumstances, an account of the article in question may possibly reach you before the arrival of this despatch, as the vagaries of the Russian Censorship on such occasions are curious and inexplicable. In any case, I subjoin a short summary of the article, which appeared in the Kavkas of the 6th instant:—

"While England is absorbed in Egypt and the Soudan, our Governor-General in Chief has gone on the eminently peaceful mission of organising the civil government of peoples who have hitherto lived only by attacks and depredations upon their neighbours. It is impossible not to approve this direction of our policy, but we have a more difficult task as regards arranging with our neighbours for the tranquillity of other nomadic peoples in the vicinity. Over against Merv, on the upper Murghab, and on Afghan territory, are the Mongolian tribes of Hasari and Djemahidi, and the Afghans, as well as ourselves, must become responsible for the good behaviour of these nomads.

"We do not require India for the economical development of our Empire. We do not want her grain, or her teas, because we have enough and to spare of the first, and will soon begin to grow the latter. If we desired, we could undoubtedly conquer India, but it would half ruin us to keep it in subjection, especially with its extent of sea-board and our small fleet.

Therefore, in our opinion, our near approach to India is important in this respect, that we can always deal England a weighty blow when necessary. In fact, rather than think of subjugating India, our policy is to liberate the Indians from the British yoke. Standing at Merv, on the frontiers of Afghanistan, we are quite close enough to India; and Afghanistan, in case of war, would just serve our purpose, as Roumania did in the last war with Turkey. Consequently, we do not want to conquer Afghanistan, for it is more exposed on our side than on that of India. In the extent of its population (about nine millions) as in other respects, Afghanistan resembles Roumania. This population can be easily turned against India, but never against us. The payments now being made by England to Afghanistan are money thrown away.

"Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff goes to Merv principally to see what we want most, and what is best for us in the tremendous task we have undertaken in the Transcaspians."

SELECTED ARTICLES.

COLONEL OSBORN AND THE INDIAN REFORM ASSOCIATION.

MR. R. D. O. (Col. Osborn), the well-known London correspondent of the Statesman, observes:—"I see from the Indian papers that Mr. Surendro Nath Bannerji and his friends are bestirring themselves in the getting up of a National Defence Fund to provide the means for systematic agitation in this country. Should this fund be a success, there is one sunken rock which I would especially caution them to avoid. Let them have nothing to do with what is called 'influential support' in London. 'Influential support' means the co-operation of a number of gentlemen who are either Members of Parliament or retired Anglo-Indians with large pensions and the prefix of 'Sir' added to their names. Support of this kind is purchased at the cost of all aggressiveness and definite purpose in the association which is encumbered with it. The would join an agency for the reform of the Government of India, not for the purpose of aiding, but of impeding, choking, suffocating, and altogether suppressing every effort in that direction. It will be seen that from this cause, the British India Committee just transformed into the India Reform Association, will degenerate into a boneless, purposeless, useless, and semi-defunct imposture like the East Indian Association. So certain do I hold this to be, that I have withdrawn my name from the Committee. If Mr. Bannerji and his friends desire to do anything for India, they must hold themselves aloof from retired Anglo-Indians. It is to Radicalism that they must make their appeal, and they may depend upon receiving a hearty and vigorous response. If they associate themselves with pensioned civilians, these gentlemen will dictate their policy for them, and emasculate it so as to make it good for nothing. There should be no flourishing of trumpets to herald the arrival of their delegation in London. It should begin its business in a silent, determined fashion, and, above all things, it should pitch its claim high. It should claim, at once, for the people of India the rights of perfect citizenship, representative government, control over the finances, and equality with Englishmen in public employ. The apparent height of such demands will attract the greater attention to them, and I speak of that which I know when I say that the nation is prepared to concede them. The future of the Empire belongs to us, and will fashion itself in conformity with our wishes and convictions. And it is of the first importance that Mr. Bannerji and his friends should bear this in mind. If they haunt the lobbies of the House of Commons, if they go in for the seductive hospitality of the National Liberal Club, they are lost men. It would be better, far better, for them to stay in India than come to this country upon errands such as these. If reforms worthy of the name are ever peacefully accomplished in India, it will be, not by the voluntary action of either Cabinets or Parliaments, but at the bidding of the nation at large. It is, therefore, to them that the National Defence Fund ought to address themselves."

THE INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL ASSOCIATION.

[FROM THE "PIONEER'S" CALCUTTA CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Indian Constitutional Association has followed up the issue of its prospectus, which formed one of the topics of an earlier letter, by holding its first meeting last Saturday. As already indicated, the leading landholders of Behar take a prominent place among the persons elected to office in this association. Bengal is represented by the Maharajah Jotendro Mohun Tagore and Prince Furrakh Shah. The acceptance by the former of these two personages of the office of Vice-President, has raised the ire of the Indian Mirror, which is yet smarting under the reverses which befell the Ilbert Bill in its passage through the Viceregal Council. The writer of the article can foresee nothing but disaster as the result of the present endeavours to associate Europeans and Natives in a common cause, and deduces from the attempt the infallible outcome of the Native becoming in time a passive instrument in the hands of his more astute associates, utilised simply for the purpose of helping to carry out the selfish projects of the ruling race. The evident animus which pervades the tone of this article may be a sufficient excuse for the utterance of these gratuitous aspersions. There is nothing to indicate at present the likelihood of the least want of harmony between the European and Native representatives who have joined this association, and so far as the future is concerned, the prospects seem equally unlikely. The topics which presumably are about to engage the attention of the newly-formed council have a purely local interest, and it would be difficult to point out adequate reasons for the supposition that the European members are ever likely to turn their backs on their Native associates. The Mirror counts too confidently perhaps on the enervating influence of climate and association; it will discover its mistake hereafter, and when the soreness of its present trouble has been healed by time, it will be among the first to recognise the wisdom involved in the first genuine attempt to mould together the common interests of Native and European alike into one harmonious whole. Probably occasions may arise, as indeed will be the case at present, when associations such as these will find themselves in fierce opposition to the policy of Government. I have not the slightest doubt, indeed it is apparent on the face of it, that this association gathers its present adherents together animated by strong and bitter feelings against the Rent Bill, and that it will pursue its policy of obstruction with the aid of all the constitutional methods it has at its disposal, but such opposition is after all but a healthy outlet for overcharged feelings. If the Government measure against which its force is directed, is founded on principles of abstract truth and justice, a factious opposition, however persistent and well-directed, will have little avail; it will serve however the negative purpose of testing the excellence of the work, pointing out with unerring fingers the weak places in the whole structure, and thus helping the Government indirectly to perfect what was before erroneous or unjust. But the main source of usefulness which will result from an association of this kind will show itself in time of comparative quiet before men's minds are excited and disfigured by the violence of party strife. As the mouthpiece of a large and important section of the public it will be in a position to speak with authority on the leading topics of the day, and the Imperial Government will exhibit less reluctance than has been the case hitherto, pay heed to the fitful expressions of public feelings, which have reached it through the columns of the Press alone, a fact which was happily illustrated by a remark in the Viceregal speech on the Ilbert Bill. Lord Ripon gave special prominence to the circumstance that the Government had been throughout this bitter controversy always ready and willing to receive a valid offer of a compromise, and hinted pretty strongly at the fact that, had the terms of the arrangement now arrived at been mooted earlier in the year, they would have received the favourable attention of the Government. Everyone present who listened with attention to that portion of the speech must have found in it the subject for sincere regret that no earlier intimation of the important truth which overshadowed it had found its way to the public months before. Lord Ripon for the moment seemed to ignore the physical difficulty involved in the endeavour to enter into any negotiation with a Government situated on a hill-top twelve hundred miles away. Public feeling was strangely embittered, and was swiftly acquiring the colour and shape of a personal struggle, and even when the position of affairs had reached so acute a climax, little difficulty was experienced in bringing matters to an amicable close. The task would have been easier and more pleasant if it could have been carried through six months before the actual event occurred. The Defence Association, if it had not sprung into existence at the time of the controversy, and been, therefore, discredited as the mere creature of agitation, would have proved itself an invaluable instrument for interpreting to the Government the true state of the feelings entertained by the public on the Ilbert Bill.

THE INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL ASSOCIATION AND THE INDIAN "MIRROR."

[FROM THE "PIONEER'S" CALCUTTA CORRESPONDENT.]

AN article in yesterday's Indian Mirror tempts me to recur once more to a subject which I alluded to in my last letter. The Mirror, it must be remembered, prides itself on being the expositor of the opinions and feelings of the educated portion of the Bengali community, and as such the article in question is worthy of perusal. The original effusion which attracted my attention was in character an angry diatribe directed against certain leading zemindars of Bengal for associating themselves with certain prominent members of the European community in the formation of what is now known as the Indian constitutional association. In uttering its last note of warning the writer has lapsed from anger into tears, which mode of expression, though forcible on occasions, is apt also to be incoherent. The participation in common interests, whether social or political by European and Indians alike, is an object fraught with such obvious advantages that it seems at first sight difficult to suggest a reason plausible enough to suffice as an excuse for the endeavour seriously to decry any well-directed attempt to bring about the result. Indeed, the Mirror, unless its memory prove conveniently imperfect, should be able to recall numerous instances, when in its own columns it was never tired of dilating on this, its favourite, thesis. In yesterday's article, the Mirror condescends to explain to its readers the reason for its sudden and complete change of policy. The whole of the mischief has been caused by the wretched controversy over the Ilbert Bill. During the heat of the contest it seems that the Indian community has been maligned and abused in no measured terms by its adversaries. The great heart of the nation, smarting under this undeserved slander, cannot forgive or forget, and so it happens that the Mirror, more in sorrow than in anger, raises its voice in tearful remonstrance against the action of certain erring, though prominent, members of the Indian community, who have failed to keep alive the flame of their just resentment. Allowing for the sake of argument that the accusation made against the European community is just, race-feelings were stirred to their very depths by this unhappy controversy, and it would have been astonishing, indeed, if the occasion did not give birth to a great number of inconsiderate and offensive epithets. Abuse, as the proverb assures us, breaks no bones, and the Mirror surely should have little difficulty in testifying to the truth of this very obvious platitude from the records of its own experience. "The responsibilities of native journalists," we are told, "are great, for a good deal of the welfare of the people depends on the fidelity with which they discharge their duties. They must not mince matters any longer, but call a spade a spade whenever there is occasion to do so for the good of the country, irrespective of all personal considerations and perfectly regardless of all consequences and of the position of the parties concerned." In the presence of such lofty sentiments as these words indicate it seems almost cruel to suggest the suspicion of a doubt as to the genuineness of the feeling which prompted their utterance. Is the Mirror absolutely certain in its own mind that other and more mundane influences have not had something to do with this hysterical outburst of indignation? Does it view with composure, utterly irrespective of the Ilbert Bill controversy, the pregnant fact that for the first time the representatives of Behar and Bengal join themselves together in a common association of interests; and further, does not spasm of regret pass across its lofty mind when it compares the success which has attended the formation of this association with its own attempts to raise subscriptions with a somewhat similar object in view? Let the Mirror place its hand upon its ample bosom and make a suitable and conscientious reply.

THE JUDGES OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT AND LORD HARTINGTON.

The following correspondence has passed between the Judges of the High Court of Calcutta and the Government of India in reference to Lord Hartington's remarks in the House of Commons last August on the memorandum of the Judges on the Ilbert Bill:—

From C. A. Wilkins, Esq., Officiating Registrar of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, in Bengal, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department.

Dated Fort William, December 15, 1883.

Sir,—I am desired to invite the attention of his Excellency the Governor General in Council to the observations which the Marquis of Hartington is reported to have made in his speech on the Indian Budget debate of August 23 last, (reported in the Times of August 24), in reference to the letter which I was directed by the Judges to address to you on May 23 last, on the subject of the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The report of that speech reached this country when the Court had broken up and the Judges had separated for the Long Vacation. On re-assembling at the close of the vacation the Judges met to consider it, and they have come to the conclusion that it is their duty to submit the following observations on the subject to the Government of India:—

His lordship is reported to have said:—"Able as that document is, I cannot admit that it is invested with any judicial authority whatever. The partisan character of that document is most strikingly exemplified in the 18th paragraph. Sir Stuart Bayley would be supposed by any one reading that paragraph to be an opponent of the measure; whereas he was responsible for its introduction and was its supporter. I think I am justified in saying that the minute of the Judges was not a judicial performance, but rather the offspring of partisanship."

The Judges cannot but regard these observations as conveying a very serious imputation on the manner in which one highly important branch of their public duties is discharged. The letter in question was, as its opening sentence explains, not volunteered by the Judges, but written in answer to one in which the Government of India requested "an expression of the Judges' opinion on the provisions of the Bill." It has been, as his Excellency in Council is aware, the consideration of the observations of the Judges now present in Calcutta. Government to consult the High Court on all important measures of legislation; and the Judges regard it as among the most important and responsible of their duties to consider such reference with attention, and to offer, either collectively or individually, such advice and assistance to the Government as it is in their power to give. In measures which affect the organisation and procedure of the Courts, the practical enforcement and operation of the law, the amendment of such portions of it as are found to work harshly or inconveniently, or the codification of such parts of it as it is deemed expedient to codify, it is to the Judges of the High Court, acting, as they ordinarily do, not only on their own experience, but on that of a large number of subordinate tribunals, that the Government must mainly look, and has usually looked, for accurate information and trustworthy guidance.

When the Bill in question, which introduced an important change in the powers of native judges and magistrates and in the legal status of Europeans in India, was referred to the Judges for opinion, they considered it with the utmost care, and after protracted and anxious deliberation eleven out of twelve Judges arrived at the conclusions which were expressed to you in my letter. They had, of course, no personal interest in the question, and they were conscious of no desire in connection with it but to offer to the Government, as they were in duty bound to do, with perfect candour and explicitness, their convictions on the subject, and the grounds on which those convictions rested. The Judges considered that, in expressing their opinions as they did, they were but acting in accordance with custom, and responding to an express invitation and the assurance, given in the debate of March 9, that the Government was anxious to consider the arguments adduced on both sides in the discussion. The Judges are not aware that the language of my letter, conveying their views, is in any way chargeable with violence, exaggeration, or other evidence of partisanship. It is unnecessary for them to point out that no indication is afforded by the omission in my letter to state the fact that Sir Stuart Bayley was a supporter of the Bill, a fact which was perfectly notorious, and which had no bearing on the argument except in so far as Sir Stuart Bayley's opinion on the point in question was of the more weight as coming from a supporter of the proposed legislation. Lord Hartington appears to have forgotten that the letter was addressed, not to the public, but to the Government of which Sir Stuart Bayley was a member, and which could not be misled by any statement in the letter as to that gentleman's opinion. The Judges cannot but consider that the imputation of partisanship, based apparently on no stronger ground than this, was wholly undeserved and unjustifiable. Their opinion on the Bill was not, from the nature of the case, "invested with judicial authority" in the ordinary sense of that expression; but in so far as it conveyed the opinions of the Judges on a subject of judicial administration, upon the probable effects of which the Judges were in a better position than any one else to arrive at a well-informed opinion—in so far as it was formed deliberately, carefully, conscientiously, after a patient and exact consideration of the facts—in so far as, in offering it, the Judges were not volunteering their advice, but replying, in the regular course, to a question which the Government had a right to ask and which it was their duty to answer, it was "judicial" in the strictest sense of the words and they emphatically repudiate the charge that, in writing as they did, they were influenced by any partisan feeling or by any other motive than that of endeavouring to discharge with fidelity one of the important and responsible duties with which they have been entrusted by Her Majesty.

It would, the Judges consider, be to the detriment of the public service either if the present practice of consulting the High Courts in matters of legislation were abandoned or if the opinions of the Judges, given on the matters so referred, were to be treated with indifference or disrespect. Yet it can hardly be expected that the Judges will be ready to undertake the duty of advising the Government on proposed changes of the law, or that their recommendations will command respect and authority, if imputations such as that to which this letter refers, made by a Minister of the Crown, who was but a short time previously Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, were allowed to pass unchallenged. On this ground the Judges feel bound to record their regret that such an imputation should have been made. The judges feel satisfied that his Excellency in Council will justly appreciate their motives in making this present communication; and they beg respectfully to request that this letter may be forwarded to Her Majesty's Secretary of State, and that, when the correspondence, of which the letter of May 23 forms a part, is laid before the Houses of Parliament, this letter may be allowed to accompany it. The judges venture to think that their respectful answer to a charge so serious, made in their absence, may not improperly be submitted, together with the letter which formed the occasion of it, to the House in which the charge was made.

Several of the Judges whose views were conveyed in my former letter are now absent on leave, and the Judges have not thought it necessary that my present letter should be delayed till their return. I am desired to state, however, that the foregoing observations are the expression of the unanimous opinion of the Judges now present in Calcutta.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,
A. C. A. WILKINS, Officiating Registrar,
From D. Fitzpatrick, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department, to the Registrar, High Court, Calcutta.

Dated Fort William, January 10, 1884.
Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 15th ultimo, relative to the observations which the Marquis of Hartington is reported to have made in his speech during the Indian Budget debate of August 23 last, in reference to your letter of May 23 last, on the subject of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill, and to inform you that a copy of your letter of the 15th ultimo was forwarded to the Secretary of State for India on the 31st idem.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,
D. FITZPATRICK, Secretary to the Government of India.

The judges present at the meeting which authorised Mr. Wilkins to write the above letter were Sir R. Garth, and Justices Mitter, Cunningham, McDonnell, Tottenham, Maclean, Field, Norris, Pigot, and O'Kinealy.

MR. SEYMOUR KEAY'S LIBEL CASE.

JUDGMENT.

Judgment was delivered on April 19, in the action for libel brought by Mr. John Seymour Keay against the editor and publisher of the Deccan Times. The following is the text of the judgment:—

The plaintiff in this case sues to recover from the first defendant as editor, and from the second defendant as printer and publisher, of the Deccan Times, the sum of H. S. Rs. 10,000, with costs, as damages for the malicious publication by them in the above paper in the issue of Nov. 27, 1883, of a letter signed, "Verbum Sap," and in that of Dec. 4, 1883, of an editorial article, both of which are set forth at length in the plaint, on the ground that the said publications contain false and defamatory statements regarding him, the plaintiff. The first defendant puts in a written statement (marked No. 1) in which he admits the publication set forth in the plaint and his responsibility therefor. He pleads, first, that the said matter is neither false nor malicious, but true in substance, or made in the honest and reasonable belief of its truth, and under circumstances that render it not actionable. Second, that the plaintiff is estopped from denying its truth, as he has on different occasions, and to different people, published the same concerning himself. Third, that in any case the plaintiff is not entitled to damages. The plaintiff then files copies of the Deccan Times of the 27th November, 1883, which contain the defamatory publications referred to in the 1st and 2nd pars. of the plaint. These are marked Exhibits B and C, respectively; the plaintiff also files, in order to show malice and aggravation on the part of the defendants, a copy of the Deccan Times of the 18th October, 1883, containing a paragraph commencing "The Avenger of Egypt has arrived," marked Exhibit A; also a copy of the Deccan Times of the 1st December, 1883, publishing a letter to the editor from the plaintiff's pleader, demanding the withdrawal of, and apology for, the defamatory letter published in the issue of the 27th November, and of the editor's reply refusing compliance therewith, marked Exhibit C. Also a copy of the Deccan Times of the 11th December 1883, containing a paragraph headed "Mr. John Seymour Keay," marked Exhibit E. The court frames the following issues:—1. Are the facts set forth in the two issues of the 27th November 1883 and the 4th December 1883 substantially true or not? 2. Are those allegations actionable? 3. Did the plaintiff of his own motion publish the facts alluded to in the said two publications, and if so, is he thereby estopped from suing? 4. To what, if any, damages is the plaintiff entitled for the sake of convenience? Issue No. 3 will be first considered. The counsel for the defendants in opening his case explained that the plea then raised was not put forward under Section 115 of the Evidence Act, since it is not alleged that the plaintiff, when publishing the same facts as those contained in the subject matter of this suit, had any intention as required by that section of causing or permitting the defendants to act, as they have in giving further publicity to the story. It was, however, maintained that as the plaintiff on several occasions published the same story himself, he could not now either legally or morally deny the truth of that story, or claim damages for its publication by the defendants. Against these arguments it has been urged that the above plea is valid neither in law nor in fact, since the story as related by the plaintiff differs materially from that contained in the libel, which it is stated, contains an imputation that the plaintiff had perpetrated a fraud and thereby committed an indictable offence, whereas from the plaintiff's statement and evidence it will be seen that he in fact defeated an attempted fraud on the bank. It is not necessary to record a decision on this last question of fact under this issue, since the point thus raised will be fully considered later on. With regard to the point of law, a ruling has been quoted in the case "Cook v. Ward," VI. Beng. 409, given at page 161 of Folkard, "On The Law of Libel." This ruling is to the effect that it is libellous to publish in a newspaper a story calculated to bring a person into public ridicule, although such person may have previously told the story about himself. The principle involved seems clearly applicable to the present case, with respect to the plea raised under this issue, and I therefore find that the previous verbal publication by the plaintiff of the defamatory matter in question does not operate as a bar to this suit. It may, however, reasonably be urged that in such a case the relief awarded would necessarily depend on the absence of malice on the part of the publisher, and on the substantial similarity between the story as published in print and that previously narrated by the plaintiff regarding himself. The second issue raised the question of privilege. It appears from the statement of the first defendant and from the arguments of counsel for the defence that privilege is claimed on the ground that the plaintiff has lately appeared in a public capacity as a vice-chairman of an association called "The British Indian Committee and Indian Reform Association," and has published a prospectus for India, by which public subscriptions are solicited in the above capacity. Further, as the author of an article in the magazine named the Nineteenth Century, entitled "The Spoliation of India," and as the writer of a letter to the Viceroy, on the subject of the Hyderabad Railway scheme, published in the Times of India, the plaintiff has posed as a public philanthropist. It is, therefore, maintained that the publication of the matter complained of being no more than fair and bona fide comments on the acts of the plaintiff, and published in the interests of the public, is not actionable. In order to establish this plea, it is incumbent on the defendants to show that the qualified privilege claimed by them has not been exceeded. The limits of this privilege have been closely defined by repeated rulings of the English courts, and it has also been ruled by the Bombay High Court in the case of "Howard v. Mull," Bo. H. C. R., Vol. I., Appendix 91, that the definition of the criminal law as contained in the Penal Code should be held to apply in civil proceedings for defamation. It has been argued, and, I think correctly, that the present case falls within the definitions of the sixth exception to sec. 499 I. P. C., which runs as follows:—"It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion respecting the merits of any performance which its author has submitted to the judgement of the public, or respecting the character of the author, so far as his character appears in such performance, and no further." The illustrations to this exception expressly allude to the case of a person publishing a book or making a speech in public. The English rulings relied on are those quoted in Chapter 11 of Folkard's work, the general deduction being that the qualified privilege of free comment and criticism claimed by the defendants is limited to the public acts and public conduct of public man, and that these alone can be criticised without liability. The imputations contained in the publications which form the basis of this suit undoubtedly attack the character of the plaintiff in regard to a perfectly private matter which is in no way connected with the publication of which he is the author or with any public or quasi-public position assumed by him. It must therefore, be held that the defendants have exceeded the qualified privilege held by them and are liable at law for the excess. The first issue will now be considered. This issue is framed on the direct plea put forward by the defendant of justification by truth of the matter published. The points on which a decision is required are—first, what is the meaning conveyed by the language of the defamatory matter complained of? 2. How far has the plea of justification been established in the manner required by law? The question raised by the first of the above disputed points is a very important one in the decision of this case. That portion of the libel to which this point refers runs as follows:—"During his (plaintiff's) residence at Hyderabad, which embraces a period considerably less than twenty years, he has not been notably disinterested, nor benevolent, probably these attributes were on a par with his integrity, and honestly kept in the background until required. He knows how to largely advance his pecuniary interests; and at least one of his transactions showed his proficiency in reducing those of others. The complete and skilful preparation and manipulation by Mr. J. S. Keay of a document substituted by him for another document taken by him from the hand of a native who could not read English, and then causing that native (in the belief that he was signing the original document) to sign the substituted document whereby the banking firm of Poorunmull suffered to the extent of many thousand rupees, are facts well known in the bazaars of Hyderabad." The plaintiff alleges that the above imputation amounts to a charge of an indictable offence since the language used distinctly implies that the plaintiff caused wrongful loss to the firm of Poorunmull. This allegation has been traversed by the counsel for the defence in his general reply, on the grounds that the words used refer to the commercial loss, proved by the records to have been suffered by the firm of Poorunmull owing to its transactions with the Bombay Bank, and convey no imputation of wrongful loss inflicted by the plaintiff. The precedent for guidance in this matter are given in Chapter 20, page 445 of Folkard's "Digest." I there find that it has been ruled that the ordinary sense of the words used (whether written or spoken) is to be taken to be the meaning of the utterer, unless they are explained to import something different to their obvious meaning by previous occurrences, conversations, or other matter having been introduced. Again, on page 446, it is stated that "it was held that the utterance of words imputing an indictable offence, is actionable or not, according to the sense in which they may fairly be understood by bystanders not acquainted with the matter to which they relate. I have no hesitation in saying that any person unacquainted with the matter, reading the portion of the libel above given, would be led to believe that the imputation was intended that the plaintiff by premeditated fraud had caused a pecuniary loss to the firm of Poorunmull. This imputation infers an indictable offence, and the passage must, therefore be held to bear the interpretation placed on it by the plaintiff. It remains to be decided how far the plea of justification by truth has been legally established. The validity of a plea of justification by truth, as a complete answer to a civil action for libel, if established, can hardly be disputed; but in order to establish that plea, the truth of the libel must be fully proved. It has been ruled, vide Folkard, page 531 (s), that in cases where a specific charge is involved, in order to support the plea of justification, the same stricture of proof is required, as would be necessary on the trial of an indictment for the same charge. And again at page 392 (s), it is stated that the suspicion, however strong, will not amount to a justification. On the other hand at page 533 (s) it is laid down that if the justification does not cover the charge to the full extent, the plaintiff will be entitled to damages for the excess not justified. And again at page 547 (z) a ruling is quoted to the effect that if the evidence falls short of proving the offence imputed, yet the circumstances proved may be taken into consideration in mitigation of damages. The law, as above explained, must now be applied to the present case. The oral evidence relied upon by the defence to substantiate the truth of the allegations contained in the subject matter of this suit has been recorded, partly by commission and partly by this court. This evidence tends to show that on four several occasions, two before and two after the commencement of these proceedings, the plaintiff in the course of conversation with the witnesses, or in their hearing, narrated how he had succeeded in outwitting by means of an English document, prepared with that object, a native agent of the firm of Poorunmull who could not read English. The majority of these witnesses state that the plaintiff justified his action in the matter, on the grounds that the native had attempted to carry out a fraud on the bank, and that his object was to defeat that fraud. The plaintiff takes objection to some of the particulars of the conversation deposed to, viz., the substitution of one document for another, or the preparation of any document by the copy of a blot. He denies intoto the conversation deposed to by Witnesses 2 and 11 for the defence, but admits in general terms the other three conversations. The plaintiff has called in support of his version of the affair as given at length in his recorded statement, the late cashier of the Bank of Bombay at Hyderabad. This witness gives evidence to prove the identity of the original documents, received by the agent of Poorunmull under the circumstances above stated (Exhibit H). This document is admitted by the defence. The plaintiff then produces certain records of the old Bank of Bombay to show, that on June 7 a large sum of money payable to the bank by Poorunmull was overdue, and that payment of this amount was actually made on the 8th June 1866. It is also shown from these records that subsequently a statement of account, showing a balance in favour of the bank, was forwarded to Poorunmull, and that afterwards repeated demands for this balance was made on him. In order to rebut the imputation of fraud and subsequent loss of character, the plaintiff has produced several native witnesses, and from the statements recorded by commission in the city, it is shown that three of the members of Poorunmull's firm declare that their firm has never been defrauded by the plaintiff. With reference to the transaction with the Bombay Bank, it is stated that through the dishonesty of their agents, Surajmull and Jumnadas, the firm incurred a heavy loss, and in consequence a misunderstanding arose between the firm and the plaintiff, which lasted for some time. It is admitted that subsequently the firm had large money transactions with the plaintiff in his capacity as agent of the Bank of Bengal at Hyderabad. As evidence in proof of character the plaintiff has filed autograph letters from several late Residents at Hyderabad and others. Evidence has also been recorded to prove the destruction of the records of the old Bank of Bombay after liquidation. The evidence recorded by the defence has been impugned by the plaintiff's counsel on the grounds of general inaccuracy of expression and presumption of concerted story proved by admissions in cross-examination. These objections apply, I consider, only to those disputed particulars regarding the substitution of one document for another, &c., which very possibly are the involuntary result of defective memory and false impressions. I see no reason whatever to doubt that these witnesses have spoken in each case to a conversation which actually took place, and that the general tenour of that conversation was stated in these depositions. As regards the bearing of that evidence on the plea of justification raised by the defendants, I find that there is no evidence whatever to show that the plaintiff, either by premeditation or in the result, caused wrongful loss to the firm of Poorunmull, and that plea must therefore be held to have failed. At the same time I find from the evidence on the record that in the course of a business transaction, in his capacity as agent of the Bank of Bombay at Hyderabad, the plaintiff knowingly prepared and caused to be given to the native agent of the firm of Poorunmull at Hyderabad, a document in the nature of an agreement which was not what it was represented to the said native agent to be, and which he was unable to verify owing to his ignorance of the English language. The alleged reason being that the said native had attempted to defraud the Bank of Bombay in the course of the transaction then in hand. This fact is held to cover to a substantial extent the libel contained in the publications which form the basis of this suit, and should therefore be taken into consideration in mitigation of damages. The fourth issue is framed to determine the extent, as expressed in money damages, of the injury to reputation suffered by the plaintiff from the publication of the libel on which this suit is brought, and also from any proof of malice or aggravation of the libel established by the subsequent conduct of the defendants. In arriving at a decision on this point it will be necessary to consider any facts or circumstances which may justly be applied in mitigation of damages. Mitigating circumstances have already been indicated in the course of this judgment. The most important of these undoubtedly is the question how far the plaintiff has impaired his claim to the relief sought by this action through his own acts. It has been shown by the plaintiff's own admissions that, acting in his capacity as agent to the Bank of Bombay, and in the course of a business transaction without any subsequent effort either by prosecution or judicial inquiry, to vindicate his character and motives in the action then taken by him, he had recourse to a discreditable stratagem which I must emphatically condemn as unbecoming, under any circumstances, the influential position then held by him as agent to the Bombay Bank. It has been proved that the plaintiff had since on various occasions published the particulars of that transaction to persons quite unconnected with him in any official capacity, and I hold that he has by so doing laid himself open to the fullest criticism of his conduct and principles as expressed in those statements. It may also reasonably be urged that owing to the prominent position assumed by the plaintiff, and the violent partisan character of his contributions to the public press, he has voluntarily exposed himself to the criticism and attacks of his political opponents, especially with regard to any generally credited rumours affecting his title to assume that position.

For the reasons above given, I consider that the plaintiff has not established his right to the very large sum claimed by him as damages in this suit. I have now to consider the liability of the defendants with regard to the plea of good faith put forward by them. The legal definition of good faith being the exercise of due care and attention that test must be applied to the acts of the defendants both before and after the publication of the libel. I find from the evidence on the record, that whatever ground may have existed for assuming the good faith of the defendants up to the first publication of the libel, the want of due care and attention subsequently shown by them goes far to destroy that presumption. It was the plain duty of the defendants before refusing the retraction and apology demanded by the plaintiff to ascertain the extent of their legal liability, and to examine the tangible proof, than obtain command and by independent enquiry to corroborate these proofs. So far from performing this duty they appear to have relied implicitly on the statement of the author of the defamatory letter signed "Verbum Sap," whose position as an anonymous libeller should of itself have suggested caution and further inquiry. The reckless statements contained in the letter of the 4th December 1883 published, as has been proved, before any documentary evidence had reached the defendants or their agent, and also the letter of the 11th December, clearly indicate a breach of good faith. The plea of justification by truth put forward by the defence and adhered to throughout the case, is a very grave aggravation of the libel on the part of the defendants. The imputation of a criminal offence contained in that plea has not been supported by a particle of evidence, and the maintenance of that plea throughout the case is under those circumstances a strong proof of malice and reckless determination to injure the plaintiff's character. Taking into consideration the whole of the facts of the case, I consider that justice will be served by the award of substantial but not vindictive damages. I decree in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of H. S. Rs. 1,000, and the costs of this suit against both the defendants.

A. P. THORNTON, Judge.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE TENANCY BILL AS AMENDED.

On reading the report of the Select Committee on the Rent Bill, the first thing that strikes one is that the principles of the original Bill remain undisturbed. Perhaps this was to have been expected. It is none the less to be regretted. The abolition of freedom of contract, the deliberate creation of new and unheard of rights, and the incentives to litigation, all stand out in as strong relief as they ever did. As a fact, we do not see that the position of the landlord is much improved from what it would have been had the Bill which was introduced last year been passed into law.

To take the objectionable sec. 56 of the original Bill for instance. By this section squatters or tenants-at-will were entitled to a compensation of ten times the amount of enhancement for the non-payment of which the landlord sought to eject them. This section has been struck out, but what do we find in its place? The parties are to go to court to have a judicial rent fixed, and the landlord is obliged to readmit the squatter for five years at the rent so fixed, unless, indeed the squatter has in the mean time acquired a right of occupancy, in which case the landlord has got to put up with him for all time. This is an encroachment upon the rights of the zemindar which is simply indefensible. Under the old Bill the landlord had the means of getting rid of an objectionable squatter. It is true, he would have had to pay for the luxury of seeing his land held by a person who was not hostile to him. He could, by paying for it, also get what he considered a good and solvent tenant. This luxury is now denied him. He must put up with the squatter for five years, so long as the squatter chooses to pay the judicial rent, or if, in the meantime, he acquires rights of occupancy, the landlord is saddled with him for all time. This can hardly be said to improve the status of the zemindar.

Again in the draft submitted with the report, a new class of tenure-holders is introduced, viz., occupancy raiyats who may have sublet half their holdings, and raiyats, the area of whose holding may exceed 100 bigahs, the whole or part of which is sublet. The first class of tenure holders will have all the rights and liabilities of a tenure holder, except the liability to enhancement of rent. The latter-named class will have every right appertaining to a tenure-holder. It is difficult to see any rhyme or reason for this. What magic is there in the possession of a holding of 100 bigahs over that of the possession of 99, and why should a raiyat, because he chooses to sublet half his holding, be free from the penalties to which the cultivator, who by his labour and toil brings the whole of his land into cultivation, is liable? It is a downright premium on subletting, and what will that subletting be? It will resolve itself into benami transactions to avoid the penalties to which the raiyat is liable. It is the old story—theory ridden to death without considering the conditions of life in the mufasal in Bengal. Again, the tenure holder is benefited at the expense of the zemindar. In the margin left, as profit to tenure holders under the old law, as exemplified by decisions, the tenure holder's profit was not to exceed 10 per cent. of the collections. The new draft declares that it shall not be less than 10 per cent. of the balance which may remain after deducting from the gross rents, not only the expenses, but also "the risks of collection."

There is a pleasing irony about this latter clause. The Rent Bill was originally introduced to diminish as far as possible by legislation, "the risks of collection" to the zemindar. "Risks of collection" admittedly exist when the tenure holder is concerned, but where an unfortunate owner of property is in question, such an idea as there being any risks attendant on the collection of rent is scouted, and the landlord is told to look after himself. The question arises, how the Select Committee can admit "risks of collection" as an item to be considered as between zemindar and tenure holder, when Government does not universally apply the principle as between itself and the zemindar, say in the matter of collection of Government cesses? It would be absurd to suppose that any government could be carried on which would for a moment admit such a consideration. It is equally absurd to suppose that any man could reckon on his income from one year to another, when such a varying and elastic factor as "risks of collection" is to form part of his basis of calculation.

The provision limiting the enhancement to double the present rent, is, like all arbitrary standards, unfair. A railway running through a district may increase the value of the tenure tenfold, and this is a matter which should be left purely to be judged by surrounding circumstances. The tendency of an arbitrary standard, such as has been fixed, will simply be to benefit those zemindars who have exacted the uttermost farthing, and to injure those who, on the principle of live and let live, have only demanded what is fair and equitable. Both will naturally make the double rent standard their goal, and will not be content until they have enhanced up to it.

There is no objection to the proposition to make the enhancement gradual and payable in five years. Nothing causes more irritation than a sudden and immediate enhancement, whereas, when it comes by degrees the tenant, as a rule, does not feel it, and, in the end, the landlord gets the benefit to which he is entitled. It is the principle adopted by most zemindars who wish to see their tenants contented, and, at the same time, wish to ensure their own rights. If enhancements be left to be regulated by circumstances, and not by an arbitrary standard, they should also be left undisturbed for ten years. There is nothing more irritating than perpetual suits for enhancement, and, once a fair enhancement is settled, the tenure holder should enjoy the benefit of security from further litigations for a period of at least ten years. No reasonable zemindar would seek to disturb the existing rent during that time, but it is as well to have a provision of law to prevent those who are not reasonable from doing so.—Englishman.

RUSSIA'S APPROACHES TO INDIA.

A MEETING of members of the United Service Institution, Whitehall, was held on Friday afternoon, under the presidency of Sir F. Goldsmid, when Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Hamley read a paper on "Russia's Approaches to India." Sir Edward Hamley narrated in detail the various aggressions made by Russia in Central Asia since 1867. Many circumstances had of late indicated that she was as restless as ever, and as unappeased in the absorption of territory. They had lately been startled by the news that Sarakhs had been occupied and though this might not be the Persian city and fortress on the one side of the river, but the old town, probably nothing more than a mark on the map, on the other, the fact remained that Russia had carried her advanced post forward 185 miles at one stride, and had close to her the resources of the Persian fortress—a place of high importance commercially and strategically. With respect to any invasion of India by Russia, he disapproved of meeting the enemy on the frontier of the Indus. They ought to hold Candahar and the Helmund. As an abstract military plan for the defence of India under present conditions, and supposing sufficient additional troops to be forthcoming, that which most strongly recommended itself to his mind was a strong British Government at Candahar, wielding an army whose advanced troops should be at Cabul and Herat, based on Kurrahee, at the mouth of the Indus, with railway communication at least thence to Candahar. He strongly urged that there ought to be a definite delimitation of the Afghan frontier, beyond which England should not allow Russia to advance.

In the discussion which afterwards took place, Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Chelmsford, Sir Henry Rawlinson, Sir Lepel Griffin, Sir William Fraser, Sir Frederick Haines, and Colonel Maleson joined. The main points of Sir Edward Hamley's paper were unanimously approved, and the feeling was generally expressed that a delimitation of frontier was imperative, and, when once settled, that England should treat any advance beyond it by Russia as a declaration of war.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette, May 2.)

The Bengal Cavalry Standing Orders are under revision, as also are the Bengal Army Regulations.

Quartermaster J. Harrison, 2nd Battalion East Surrey Regiment, Bareilly, is about to leave the regiment for England on sick leave.

Colonel F. P. Luard, Bengal Staff Corps, has been posted for duty to Barrackpore, but will not join, as he proceeds on furlough almost at once.

Colonel R. A. Wauchope, wing commander and officiating commandant 14th (Ferozepore) Sikh Infantry, is about to apply for furlough to Europe.

Captain T. E. Spencer, Wing Officer, 17th Bengal Native Infantry, has been appointed Garrison Quartermaster, Fort William, vice Colonel F. P. Luard, resigned.

The 1st Battalion, Royal Irish Fusiliers, marched from Rawalpindi on the 17th ult. for Kuldurmah in the Murree Hills, where it will be quartered for the hot season.

Major O. G. Cautley, Pay Examiner, Bombay, is at present on leave at Naini Tal. Brigade Surgeon Cates is performing Major Cautley's duties in addition to his own.

It is noticeable that all artillery command appointments of late have been "temporary," thereby showing that the issue of the order for the re-organisation of the artillery in India may be expected soon.

The services of Captain J. S. Frith, R.A., Lieutenants R. Wapshare, 3rd Regiment Light Cavalry, and M. T. Shewen, 5th Regiment N.L.I., have been placed at the disposal of the Government of India.

Captain C. M. Smith, Royal Artillery, commanding No. 2 Field Battery, Hyderabad Contingent, has been promoted major into No. 5 Battery, 1st Brigade, Royal Artillery, Ferozepore, and directed to join.

Major H. F. Woodcock, paymaster, Allahabad Circle, has been granted leave on medical certificate, and proceeded home by the last P. and O. steamer from Bombay. Captain G. B. Rennie is in charge of the Allahabad Civil Pay Office.

Furlough to Europe on private affairs has been granted to the following officers:—Major Morse, S.C., 8th N.I., for two years; and Captain L. F. Heath, S.C., 3rd N. L. I., and Lieutenant Thompson, S.C., 1st Bombay Lancers, for twelve months.

There has been re-issued the General Order with reference to military instruction and regimental appointments which will come into operation on November 1, 1885, not being, therefore, applicable to officers who may complete twenty years' service before that date. It provides that all officers who, on completion of that period of service, while in the grade of squadron or wing officer, have failed to qualify for promotion by passing the examinations laid down in the regulations, will be removed from regimental employ and be placed on general duty.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that the produce markets have been steady since the last mail, and the partial advance then quoted is supported. At the public sales of coffee a good demand has prevailed, most of the Plantation Ceylon and East India brought forward finding buyers; bold and color kinds of the former showing some further improvement. There has been a good supply of Costa Rica, which went at rather irregular prices. Other Central American kinds are firm, and Rio held for enhanced rates, which restricts business. The deliveries here continue upon the large scale already noticed. In sugar the chief alteration is a sharp rise upon beet, which has sold up to 15s. 6d. per cwt., against 13s. 9d. per cwt., the lowest point of last week. The extreme price is not however maintained, the tone generally being quiet to-day. Cane-grown closes rather dearer for the week, a few cargoes of West India and Java having sold. Crystallised Demerara is 3d. to 6d. higher. Refined has been active at advanced rates, and pieces in the Clyde have risen fully 1s. per cwt., closing with less firmness. Importers of Java sugar are not sellers at present quotations. Rice has been firm, with reduced supplies of Burmah afloat. There is some pressure to realise China tea by auction, resulting in lower prices for fair to medium grades of Congou. The moderate quantity of Indian in the catalogues has gone at firm rates. Further speculative transactions are reported in pepper, and Singapore white has risen 3/4d. per lb. In other spice no change of interest has transpired. The next sales of cinnamon will be held on the 26th inst. Ceylon cocoa is again rather easier.

TEA.—At the Indian auctions, 3,960 packages Indian, 300 Ceylon, and 420 chests Java teas sold steadily at previous prices. The China sales consisted of 6,600 packages "without reserve." Very common red leaf (1883-4) went firm at 5 1/4d. to 6 1/4d. per lb.; old season's ditto (1881-2), at 6d. to 6 1/2d. per lb.; common black leaf (1883-4) sold at 6 1/4d. to 7 1/2d. per lb.; and a crop of N. S. Ning-chow at 8 3/4d. per lb. for which on arrival 10 1/2d. was refused. The new season (1884-5) was opened at Hankow on the 10th inst., when about 20,000 packages were settled, chiefly for Russian account, at about last year's prices. Since then buying has become more general for shipment to this side, and the first steamer with the new teas may be expected here the last week in June. The quality of the new crop is reported, Onfaas excepted, to be better than last year's.

SUGAR.—The market has become flat, and there are not any sales reported in West India. Privately 500 bags grainy Siam sold at 19s. 6d. Beet is nominally 6d. lower. In the Clyde market pieces sold at easier, but a good amount of business done. M. Bertrand Silz writing from Paris on the 14th inst., made the following remarks:—"During the past eight days the situation has greatly improved in France as well as on all other European markets. Yesterday May's delivery rose to 49s. 75c.; but those interested for a fall, whose uncovered sales are enormous, could not see this rise with indifference, and repeated offers from this side brought the price back to 48s. 75c., and, finally we closed to-day at 49s. 'Bears' chiefly offer July-August delivery, thus preventing any increase of what they have already to deliver this month, while by bringing July-August down to the same value as the May delivery, they may cause owners to sell theirs prompt, being able to replace later delivery at the same price. Ready goods handed over in this way to the uncovered sellers would be an instrument in their favour, but these tactics have no success. The weather is considered favourable for the new crop, and October-January delivery shows no perceptible change in value.

COFFEE.—There has been rather a large supply at auction, of which the bulk sold, and generally at steady prices for Plantation Ceylon, and East India. Of the former 346 casks, 163 bags, and bantels sold—small, 52s. to 57s. 6d.; middle, 64s. 6d. to 68s.; good to fine middling, 70s. to 76s.; bold, 80s. 6d. to 88s. 6d.; superior, 93s. 6d. to 104s.; 145 cases 965 bags East India, mostly sold—low to good medium, 59s. 6d. to 65s. 6d.; bold 71s. 6d. to 74s.; fine, 87s. to 91s.; small in proportion, 108lb. Mocha bought in at 88s. 2,579 bags Costa Rice went slowly—mixed, 47s. 6d. to 48s.; fine ordinary to middling, 52s. to 60s. 6d.; a pile of fine white, 76s. 3,099 bags Guatemala part sold—low middling to good bold, 54s. 6d. to 62s. 126 bags Brazil bought in at 48s. 227 bags Santos peaberry sold, 50s. per cwt.

GLADSTONIAN POLICY AND RUSSIAN FRIENDSHIP.

MR. GLADSTONE'S allies among the enemies of England have an awkward habit of exposing their hands only at the time most convenient to themselves—which is not always the time most convenient to Mr. Gladstone or most agreeable to the Radical party. If Russia would only be so considerate as to show her aggressive designs against us when a Tory Government is in power, it would be much nicer for the Radicals; for Mr. Gladstone is quite equal to the task of proving positively, under such circumstances, that it is all owing to the innate depravity of English Tories; and the "friends of every country but their own" have then a delightful opportunity of weakening, perhaps even of paralysing, every patriotic effort of their own Government. The Russian Foreign Office quite understands this; but aggression is so easy and safe when a Radical Government is in power in England, that the temptation is too great even for Russian gratitude to Mr. Gladstone. The official newspaper from Tiflis, the Kavkas, has (the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times says) launched forth another article on the journey of Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff which has thrown the Foreign Office in St. Petersburg into quite a fever of alarm. After remarking that Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff's mission is of a purely peaceful character, to organise the civil government of the people, the Kavkas continues:—

"We do not require India for the economical development of our empire. If we desired, we could undoubtedly conquer India; but it would half ruin us to keep it in subjection, especially with its extent of seaboard and our small fleet. Therefore, in our opinion, our near approach to India is important in this respect, that we can always deal England a weighty blow when necessary. In fact, rather than think of subjugating India, our policy is to liberate the Indians from the British yoke. Standing at Merv, on the frontiers of Afghanistan, we are quite close enough to India; and Afghanistan, in case of war, would just serve our purpose, as Roumania did in the last war with Turkey. Consequently, we do not want to conquer Afghanistan, for it is more exposed on our side than on that of India. In the extent of its population (about nine millions) as in other respects, Afghanistan resembles Roumania. This population can be easily turned against India, but never against us. The payments now being made by England to Afghanistan are money thrown away."

The Times correspondent adds:—"This article is not more insolent and threatening towards England than indiscreet as regards Russia." And the Times correspondent is so far right, that, if these amiable confessions of the Tiflis organ do not awake the English nation to a sense of the depth of ruin and degradation, to which Radicalism is leading it neither shall we be persuaded even though one rose from the dead. It is surely incredible that the great Liberal party—the party once led by a Palmerston, and still adorned by a Forster, a Goschen a Cowen, a Dufferin—has become so deadened to all sense of patriotism by the alliance with Radicals and the slavery of the Caucus, as to be insensible to such outspoken and insolent menaces as these. Will any Radical dare to pretend, in face of the recent annexations, that these menaces are mere idle bluster, and that therefore we can afford to ignore them? That theory, a cowardly theory of traitors, has surely been played out by this time; and we refuse to believe that there are not hundreds of thousands of Liberals in England, who will, equally with Conservatives, remember that they are Englishmen first and party-men afterwards, and who will insist on the punishment of a Government whose follies and crimes have brought on us all this humiliation and disaster.

Opportunely simultaneous with this candid Russian confession of the real meaning of the annexations of Merv and Sarakhs, comes General Sir Edward Hamley's lecture at the United Service Institution, Whitehall, of which we give a brief summary elsewhere. General Hamley—by common consent one of our very foremost strategists—comes forward solemnly to warn the British Government that, under the circumstances, they are positively bound to hold Kandahar and the Helmund. And when we find, in the discussion that followed, authorities of such diverse views and acknowledged weight, as Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Chelmsford, Sir Henry Rawlinson, Sir Lepel Griffin, Sir William Fraser, Sir Frederick Haines, and Colonel Malleon, "unanimously approving" of the main points of Sir Edward Hamley's paper, the question at once becomes urgent. What is Mr. Gladstone going to do? Will the Premier's memory of his ancient jealousy of his basely-slandered rival, Lord Beaconsfield, prevent his doing that which every competent authority now says he is bound to do for the safety of the Empire? Or will nobler counsels for once prevail, and will Mr. Gladstone frankly acknowledge, by his acts, that Lord Beaconsfield was right and he himself utterly, deplorably wrong?

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

We are glad to be able to announce that at a meeting of the Council of the Liberty and Property Defence League, held at the offices of the League last Friday, the Right Hon. the Earl of Wemyss in the chair, the Bengal Tenancy Bill as amended in Select Committee was taken into consideration, and unanimously condemned. Mr. Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., on behalf of the Indian Constitutional Association, laid before the Council the official Gazettes, containing the amended Bill, together with the dissents of the Hon. Kristodas Pal Rai Bahadur, C.I.E., the Hon. the Maharajah of Darbhanga, and others, and explained in detail the history of the Bill, and the views of the Indian Constitutional Association in regard to it. On the motion of the Right Hon. the Earl Fortescue, seconded by the Right Hon. Lord Bramwell, it was unanimously agreed that the offer of federation, made by Mr. Roper Lethbridge on behalf of the Indian Constitutional Association, should be accepted by the League, and it is understood that the League will take active measures to co-operate with the Association in opposition to the Bill.

All those who are interested in the preservation of the rights of the subject, in freedom of contract, and in the rights of property, will rejoice to learn that the revolutionary and confiscatory policy, which Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert are endeavouring to force down the throats of the helpless people of India, will not be allowed to be carried out without vigorous protest.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.—THE REPLY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA TO THE ZEMINDARS' PETITION.

WHILST the report of the Select Committee and their amended draft of the Bengal Tenancy Bill are now pending further official and public criticism, the Government of India have come forward with a document on which it is desirable to offer some comments. It must be noted that the report of the Select Committee was presented on 14th March, 1884. What, then, could have been the object of the Government of India in presenting to the world a document dated 12th February, 1884? The document is a letter, signed by Mr. Ilbert and four civilian members of Lord Ripon's Council (but not by Lord Ripon himself), setting forth the views entertained by these gentlemen on the petition which was addressed by the zemindars of Bengal to the Secretary of State for India, protesting against certain provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Bill. Apparently the members of the Government of India may have hoped that the publication of this letter might have some direct or indirect influence in guiding the opinions of certain of its own official subordinates who are now under orders to submit a report on the amended draft of the Tenancy Bill. They can hardly have imagined that arguments so weak and inconclusive could have an effect upon any unprejudiced reader.

Within the limited space available to me, it is not possible to follow Mr. Ilbert and his civilian colleagues into all the details of their statements. Much of the ground which they cover is not new; and if I hesitate to say that some of their statements are not true, it is only because they contain what is ironically called a half-truth. It is therefore necessary to select some of the leading points of the letter so that the reader may judge, from the samples exhibited, what the value of the article in bulk must be.

The letter opens with a statement regarding the submission of the petition, which, though of little importance in itself, contains a suppression of fact, in order to avoid a sacrifice of official propriety. The petition of the zemindars had been sent home by them direct to the Secretary of State, by whom it was returned to India with the intimation that it should be forwarded through the regular official channel, with a report on it. It was thus that the Government of India came to call upon the Government of Bengal for a report upon the petition, with which call the Bengal Government complied in a very unusual and unprecedented manner; as will now be shown.

It is customary for the Government of Bengal to consult the Board of Revenue and the judges of the High Court on a petition such as that of the zemindars, which concerns the vital question of the Revenue and Rent of Bengal, and the bearing and construction of the law of the land as affecting those questions. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal was a confirmed invalid, and unable to deal with the petition himself. Instead of consulting his constitutional advisers, the Board of Revenue and the High Court, he allowed his secretary, Mr. A. P. Macdonnell to compile a memorandum in reply to the petition, and the memorandum was adopted by the sick Lieutenant Governor of Bengal as the expression of his own opinions. It is unfortunate for the Lieutenant Governor that his secretary is one of the most red-hot partisans of the Bill, and the most inveterate opponent of all zemindars and Indigo planters, sæpe memorem Junonis ob iram. When this gentleman's memorandum was forwarded to the Government of India, they had to accept it as the basis of their own despatch, although they have had the prudence to observe that "they do not thereby adopt each and all of Mr. Macdonnell's arguments, the more especially as in the historical examination of the early rights and status of the zemindars there is ground for some difference of opinion."

It was undoubtedly necessary for Mr. Ilbert and his colleagues to repudiate some of Mr. Macdonnell's historical theories, for he still persists that in 1793, the ryots had a better proprietary title in the land than the zemindars. But Mr. Ilbert now says that he never asserted that the zemindars, as a body, were without proprietary or hereditary rights before the Permanent Settlement; and he now has recourse to the very curious argument that because there were discussions in 1793 as to the nature of the zemindars' rights, the zemindar had then sunk into the tax-collector; and his rights had, to a great extent, become obliterated. The famous Mr. Grant, known as the Senohtadar of Bengal, in 1793, maintained that the ryots were then the owners of the soil, holding this doctrine, not because he loved the ryots more, but because he loved the zemindars much less—as they intercepted a portion of the land rent which Mr. Grant would have taken direct for Government. Mr. Grant, as is well-known, was overruled and even rebuked for his extreme opinions by the Court of Directors of 1793, and the law was then declared and settled in favour of the zemindars. But because an extreme partisan like Mr. Macdonnell is now permitted officially to revive the defunct doctrines of Mr. Senohtadar Grant, these doctrines are treated by Mr. Ilbert as if they might be accepted as evidence against the rights of the zemindar, so that he may be condemned and subjected to that undisguised and unlimited spoliation which the new Tenancy Bill proposes.

Whilst the Government of India was still intent on undermining the zemindar's title, it is a pity that they did not refer to the opinion of the great Lord Metcalfe, which is so aptly quoted by the Maharajah of Darbhanga, in his dissent from the report of the Select Committee on the Tenancy Bill. Lord Metcalfe, as the Maharajah admits, was no admirer of the Permanent Settlement; and when he wrote, apparently about 1830, the peasant proprietary school was in the ascendant. But the full spirit of justice and honour pervades the following words:—

"I need not say that I am no advocate for the regulation proprietors of our creation. I consider their creation to have been an enormous error; but having created them, and declared them to be proprietors we gave them, I conceive, after the reservation of the Government Revenue all the right of property that it was in our power to give, that is, all the rights that did not previously belong to others. We had no right to destroy the pre-existing property of others, but we could and did give them the right of Government in every field in the zemindari, and we superadded the full property in lands, not owned or occupied as a permanent tenure by others. Having done so, although we have a right and are bound to protect the ancient cultivating proprietors and occupants in all their rights, whatever they were, and ought to be ashamed of ourselves for not having done so, we have no right to step in between our proprietor and the cultivator of his own planting on lands declared to be his own property, with a view to destroy the engagements which they have mutually entered into. It could never have been intended, when we created proprietors, that they were merely entitled to a percentage on the Revenue. It was meant that they should be really proprietors, what they are and ought to be, in every case in which that would not affect the previous rights of others."

The opinion of an impartial statesman like Lord Metcalfe will surely bear more weight than the theories of a partisan like Mr. Macdonnell or the far-fetched arguments of Mr. Ilbert. It seems needless to add a word to Lord Metcalfe's evidence of the rights of the zemindars which it is now proposed to invade. Under the cover of a cloud of new definitions and fanciful assumptions of fact, the supporters of the Bill are bent on the violation of nearly all those rights of ownership which constitute the value of the zemindars' proprietorship.

It is a main point in the controversy that the proposed Bill involves a radical departure from the ancient law and custom of the country. It introduces an entire revolution of practice and principle on five particulars: (1) the definition of a settled ryot; (2) freedom of contract; (3) the transferability of occupancy rights; (4) the distinction between Khamar and ryoti land; and (5) the imposition of a maximum limit of rent. I have no space to enter into all these points, which the zemindars had handled in a masterly manner in reply to the arguments which have been set forth by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal in his secretary's letter of September 27, 1883. The zemindars' petition was dated November 17, 1883, and was a direct reply to the Lieutenant Governor's letter of September 27, although Mr. Macdonnell is now pleased to declare that it was not so. If, by way of example, we look to the discussion regarding the maximum rate of rent, we find the Government of India falling into a mistake of fact which would be ludicrous if it were not so important. The gist of the question is whether the maximum rate is or is not to be calculated on the common staple cheap crops—to the exclusion of more valuable crops. In order to prove their claim to exclude the more valuable crops, the Government of India now tells us that tobacco, opium, and sugar cane are of the nature of garden crops, and are, therefore, to be excluded. Can anything be more absurd to the mind of those who have seen sugarcane crops extend almost for miles, and broad plains covered with the tobacco plant, and whole fields glistening in the sun with the white blossoms of the poppy? It may be that the poppy is delicately raised in nursery-like beds in its infancy—but it may also be asked for whom is this poppy cultivated, and why does the Government deal so cruelly and inconsiderately with the cultivators if a bad season injures their crops and disables them from working out the money advanced to them? This inquiry may seem to be rather outside the present question, but when the Government itself is so often the actual landlord, or stands in the place of a landlord, it may be worth while to ask if it always deals righteously and justly with its own ryots and cultivators.

Space fails us to follow the details of the Government letter any further; but whilst Mr. Ilbert and his colleagues endeavour to convince the Secretary of State of the justice and legality of the position assumed by them, they point with satisfaction to the fact that when they wrote, the Bill was pending before the Select Committee where it would receive full consideration. The report of the Select Committee has since been published, and has shown that further inquiry and further information are absolutely and extensively needed. It is, however, to be regretted that no grave notice was taken by the Government of India of certain passages in Mr. Macdonnell's memorandum, in which that gentleman allowed his Irish feelings to run away with him to such an extent that he not only threatened the landlords of Bengal with the diminution of their existing rents, but he actually suggested that the day of "no rent" was at hand, if the landlords did not at once submit to the passing of the very Bill which has now been declared by the Select Committee to need further amendment and consideration.

HOME NEWS.

 In bills, on Calcutta, Rs. 97,000, average rate is. 7.75d.; and Bombay, Rs. 5,00,000, average rate is. 7.6875d. In telegraphic transfers, on Calcutta Rs. 1,00,000, average rate, is. 7.8215d. on Bombay, Rs. 7,00,000, average rate is. 7.8214d.; and Madras, Rs. 3,00,000, average rate is. 7.812d.; or a total of Rs. 16,97,000. Tenders for bills on Calcutta and Bombay at is. 7.11-16d. and above will receive about in full, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at is. 7.13-16d. and above in full. Between April 1 and May 13, the total amount of remittances sold by the India Council had reached Rs. 2,71,81,500, and realised £2,243,486.

THE EAST INDIA RAILWAYS.—On Friday the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to consider the extension of railways in India resumed its sitting under the presidency of Mr. Baxter. Major Conway Gordon, the Deputy Accountant General of the Public Works Department, was recalled, and gave evidence about a statement which had been prepared in the India Office showing the loss by exchange on railway transactions. The accounts excluded the loss by exchange, and showed therefore a profit on the working; but if they took the loss by exchange into account, it swallowed up the profit and turned it into a loss. Witness put in tables showing that on an average the loss in the past four years had been £250,000, but said that when it was considered that railways representing a capital of £10,000,000 were not yet open and were entirely unprofitable, it would be seen that the open lines almost paid their way. He believed that the financial results of Indian railways in the future would probably be better than in the past. The rate of interest to pay on the railways would be lower; the lines would be constructed much cheaper; and it was expected that the lower rates charged to customers would improve the traffic. Mr. Westland, Controller General of the Government of India, was the next witness. He stated the successive proposals of the Government of India, and the correspondence which had passed between them and the Secretary of State with regard to them.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—The adjourned general meeting of this company was held on Monday at the offices, Gresham-street. Mr. J. Farley Leith, Q.C., presided, and reminded them that at the last meeting it was suggested that a reference should be made to the Secretary of State for India with the object of laying their opinion before his lordship that he was bound to pay the expenses of the distribution of the annuity. He and gentlemen who took an active part in addressing the last meeting—Mr. Swetenham and Mr. Humphry—had consequently had an interview with Lord Kimberley, and Mr. Humphry had in a very able manner placed before his lordship the points raised at the meeting. At the end of the interview Lord Kimberley recommended them to have a case drawn up, stating the arguments adduced, in order that it might be submitted to the law officers of the Crown. A case had, therefore, been drawn up by Mr. Humphry and Mr. Swetenham, embodying all the points brought forward at the different meetings. No opinion, of course, had yet been given on the case; and when there was another meeting would be called and the matter would be submitted to the shareholders. Meantime it was proposed to pass the resolution approving the Bill, subject to such alterations as Parliament and the Board should see fit to make therein. The real object of this was to keep the Bill alive, as it embodied a most important consideration—that of allowing trustees to hold the annuities under Class B. He concluded by moving the resolution referred to. Mr. Swetenham seconded the motion, which was carried. The chairman then moved a resolution expressing the desirability of the annuities being paid to the stockholders by the Bank of England and the sinking fund being managed by the Bank if terms acceptable to the company could be arranged. He stated, in reply to questions, that terms had been suggested, but as they were still under negotiation it would not be advisable to discuss them. Mr. Humphry seconded the resolution, which was carried. On the motion of the chairman, a further resolution was afterwards passed to the effect that, in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of State for India, the directors should submit to his lordship the case which had been prepared on the part of the company.

THE SILVER MARKETS AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

TUESDAY.—Bar silver is unchanged at 50 15-16d. per ounce but there were fewer buyers towards the close owing to there having been a further slight decline in the Indian rates for telegraphic transfers to rs. 7 13-16d. in Calcutta and rs. 7 27-32d. in Bombay. No fresh arrivals of bars are looked for just yet, but a consignment of Mexican dollars is momentarily expected at St. Nazaire, and pending its receipt on this market the price of coined silver is nominally unaltered at 50d. per ounce. Exchange advices from China show no alteration. The recent rapid advance in the quotation of Rupee Paper has led to sales by those who desire to secure their profits. Prices are therefore easier at 84½ 84¾ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 81½ 82 for the Four per Cents.

WEDNESDAY.—Bar silver was dealt in to-day in small quantities at 50½d. per ounce, but the tone of the market at the close was easier, owing to the lower prices obtained by the India Council for the remittances which were offered, and the report that the telegraphic transfer rates in India had declined to rs. 7½d. in Calcutta and rs. 7 13-16d. in Bombay. The Mexican dollars announced as having reached St. Nazaire will be available in a day or two. Meanwhile the price remains at 50d. per ounce, but the market is quite nominal. China exchange rates are again unaltered. Rupee Paper is rather easier to-night at 84½ 84¾ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 81½ 81¾ for the Four per Cents.

THURSDAY.—The arrival of bar silver by the Galicia has been sold, but not before the price had receded 1-16d. At 50 13-16d. per ounce, however, the price paid for the amount which was on the market, the tendency is now steadier, as no further arrivals are looked for immediately from any source. The Mexican dollars brought by the Ville de Brest have been negotiated at 50d., showing no change. As regards the advices received from the East, money appears to be growing cheaper in some parts of India, for the directors of the Bank of Bengal have reduced their discount rate from 10 to 9 per cent. There has, however, been no movement on the part of the authorities of the Bank of Bombay, the discount rate of which is still 11 per cent. Telegraphic transfer rates are unchanged at rs. 7½d. in Calcutta and rs. 7 13-16d. in Bombay. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper is again a little weaker at 84½ 84¾, the Four per Cents. remaining at about 81¾.

FRIDAY.—The Silver Market has been very inactive to-day. Bars are still quoted at 50 13-16d., but the available stocks are very small. As for Mexican dollars, 50d. per ounce is again the quotation, but this price has not been tested at all. The Bombay rate for telegraphic transfers is reported at rs. 7 25-32d. and Calcutta at rs. 7½d., the current China exchange rates being 5s. 1¾d. in Shanghai, and 3s. 9d. in Hongkong. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper has receded to 84½ 84¾. The Four per Cents. remain at 81¾ 82.

SATURDAY.—Bar silver is wanted for India, but its price remains at 50 13-16d. per ounce, the market being bare of supplies. In some quarters the best price that could be obtained for Mexican dollars was 49½d., and at this rate a small amount changed hands. Elsewhere the quotation at the close was said to be 50d. per ounce, but the tone was admitted to be weak. All Eastern exchange rates are unaltered, and Rupee Paper has been very quiet, closing at 84 84½ for the Four-and-a-Half per Cents., and 81½ 81¾ for the Four per Cents.

MONDAY.—The Indian demand for bar silver coming on a market which was but poorly supplied has caused an advance of 1-16d. in the price of that commodity, some business having been done to-day for immediate shipment at 50½d. per ounce. The general quotation for Mexican dollars is now 49½d., but the market for coined silver has been very inactive. Indian telegraphic transfer rates are firmer at rs. 7 25-32d., but the Hongkong quotation for four months' bill is somewhat easier at 3s. 8½d. per dollar. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper continues to decline, the price to-night being ¾ lower at 83¾ 84. The Four per Cents. are unaltered at 81½ 81¾. The India Council have to-day sold 10 lakhs of telegraphic transfers at rs. 7 27-32d. per rupee, five being allotted on Calcutta, and five on Bombay.

Distress is stated to prevail among the peasant classes in Bengal.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE EX-PRINCES OF KIRWEE.

Mr. GREGORY asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the proceeds of private debts (£11,915) due to the ex-Princes of Kirwee, as well as the proceeds (£276,000) of their loan deposits, had been omitted from the return No. 213 of session 1876; and whether those proceeds of private debts, as well as an allowance for interest on about £150,000 of admitted booty retained in specie by the Indian Government from 1858 till 1862, ought not to be included in a further return so as to fulfil the order of the House dated July 22, 1874.

Mr. CROSS: In the strict letter of the order the amount of the private debts recovered at Benares might have been included in the return. But as this return was called for with the object of showing the actual amount of the Banda and Kirwee prize its inclusion must have been misleading, for the Lords of the Treasury had already decided that the sum was not prize. Full information on this point is contained in the return 264 of the 18th of July, 1871. With respect to the interest, there can be no question. The specie consisted of coin not current and quite useless as money. No interest, therefore, accrued on it, and there was nothing to include under this head in a return of the proceeds of property which passed into the hands of the authorities.

THE SALT LAWS IN INDIA.

Mr. BURT asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether the natives' complaints of the unusual stringency with which the Salt Preventive Establishment, Madras, had worked the salt laws during the past three years would be heard; whether it was true that 15,004 natives were arrested in the official year ending March 31, 1883, for eating untaxed salt, and taken to distant courts for trial; and whether at this moment the tax on salt in Madras was double what it was in the East India Company's days.

Mr. CROSS: Any complaint which may be received on the subject of the hon. member's question will be carefully considered. During the year 1882-83 15,004 persons were accused of dealing in or being in possession of illicit salt to the extent of 10,000 tons. Of these persons 48 per cent. were dismissed by the Salt Department with a warning, and 7,836, or 52 per cent., were sent for trial before the nearest magistrate, of whom 93 per cent. were convicted. To the last clause of the question my answer is, Yes.

INDIAN TROOPS FOR THE SOUDAN.

Mr. MACIVER asked the Secretary of State for War whether his attention had been called to a letter from Sir Samuel Baker of the previous day (May 14), advocating the immediate despatch of 3,000 Indian troops to Suakim; whether there were at least half-a-dozen steamers in Bombay at the present moment which could make the passage to Suakim in about a week; and whether Her Majesty's Government, in the absence of direct intelligence from General Gordon, would yield to the appeal of Sir Samuel Baker.

The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that his attention had been called to the letter referred to, in which Sir Samuel Baker made a great number of recommendations. The question however, of the despatch of 3,000 or any number of Indian troops to the Soudan involved a great many other considerations besides that of transport. (Hear, hear). He was afraid that on this subject he could not make any statement in addition to the statements made by members of Her Majesty's Government in the recent debate. (Hear, hear).

HOME BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTH.

BALDWIN—April 16, at Kil'arney, the wife of Capt. J. H. Baldwin, late Bengal Staff Corps, prematurely, twins, son and daughter.

DEATHS.

CAMPBELL—April 25, on board the P. and O. steamer Gwalior, on her homeward voyage, in the Red Sea, Archibald Campbell, eldest son of the late Archibald Campbell, Esq., Surgeon-Major, Indian Medical Service, and late Superintendent of Darjeeling, Bengal, aged 40.

PRESTON—April 11, at Kew, after intense suffering, borne with great patience, Alice, eldest surviving daughter of the late W. Preston, of St. John's-wood-park, and formerly of Calcutta, aged 42.

Captain A. B. Stopford, R.A., Assistant Quartermaster General, Poona Division, who has not been in the best of health, has been granted six months' leave to Europe on medical certificate. We hear that Lieutenant Colonel Vaughan Jones, of the East Yorkshire Regiment, will officiate during his absence.

The services of Surgeon D. G. Crawford, 15th Bengal Native Infantry, and Surgeon T. R. Macdonald, M.B., Indian Medical Service, in charge of the Wing, 33rd Bengal Native Infantry, Dorunda, has been temporarily placed at the disposal of the Home Department for employment under the Government of Bengal.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE
OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing Fortnightly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 18th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From Starr & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 39, St. Russell St., W.C.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITH OUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 4d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 39, St. Russell St., W.C.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cocker's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, May 8; Madras and Allahabad, April 7; Calcutta, April 6.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN'S letter to the Times on the Russian attack is a powerful appeal to the national sense of honour, which ought to have valuable effects. It is a call to arms in no uncertain tone, and may be accepted as a recantation in full on the part of the whole of the school that Sir Lepel represents, of the lamentable support given by that school to Mr. Gladstone's disastrous frontier policy. Unhappily, this recantation has come too late. Mr. Gladstone is supported by a Parliamentary majority that has already shown itself on at least two occasions absolutely careless of the national honour, and mindful only of the orders of the Caucus. And, moreover, Mr. Gladstone has brought our national interests into such a miserable state, what with his entanglements in Egypt and his scuttling from Kandahar, that nothing could now right matters on our Indian frontier short of vigorous measures, of which this disunited and paralytic Ministry is utterly incapable. If Sir Lepel Griffin's voice had been heard in the clear and decided tones he now adopts, at the time when the Kandahar scuttle was under discussion, the English national party, then overpowered by Mr. Gladstone and the Radicals, would have been materially strengthened. But under present circumstances, the only hope for the Empire, in India, as elsewhere, is to be looked for in the prompt awakening of the English people to the fact that they have been betrayed by the Midlothian frenzy. We trust that that awakening will be hastened by such letters as those of Sir Lepel Griffin and Mr. Marvin, and by Sir Edward Hamley's lecture; but in the meantime, our national responsibilities and our Imperial difficulties are accumulating at a rate that is absolutely appalling.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN now admits that the moment has arrived for England and Russia, when "the Power which then recedes before the other must, from that day, take the second place in Europe and Asia." And it is the Gladstone Government that has to decide this question of life or death for us!

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times is doing a great public service in prominently attracting English public attention to the growing mischief of the annual summer seclusion of the Imperial and Local Governments in India. The action of Mr. Grant Duff in this matter is in keeping with all the other incidents of his foolish and incompetent administration; but it will be productive of good, if it serves to expose the rottenness of the principle that underlies it. As Lord Ripon has now gone to Simla for the last time—for he will hardly delay the moment of his happy retirement beyond next March—perhaps he may be induced to consider this one question from the point of view of Imperial interests.

THE letters of the Punjab Government on the report of the Education Commission will be looked for in this country with keen interest. From the telegraphed summary in the Times, they seem to confirm the worst fears of those who have held that the higher education of the country is the real object of attack in the educational policy of the present Government of India.

PERHAPS it was only natural that Mr. Seymour Keay should object to the judgment recently delivered in his libel case. But we think he has been ill-advised in writing a long letter to the Bombay Gazette to prove that the judge is wrong. Mr. Keay thus "summarises" his objection to the finding of the Court:—

"The judge is wrong—first in describing the action, which I was forced to take by the fraudulent duress of an extortioner, in language which reads as if it had been adopted in the ordinary course of business dealings with an honest native; second, in omitting to notice that the dishonest native with whom I had to deal, by the very nature of his fraudulent demands, himself shut me up to the course I took, than which the judge himself, moreover, failed to suggest any other; and third, in failing to recognise the primary duty which I owed to the Bank as trustee of its funds. As for Captain Thornton's 'emphatical condemnation' of my action as 'unbecoming under any circumstances, the influential position then held by the plaintiff as agent of the Bombay Bank,' surely he cannot mean to say that, that 'influential position' ought rather to have been used by me to surrender the Bank property into the hands of thieves, instead of to rescue it therefrom?—J. SEYMOUR KEAY.

"Hyderabad, Deccan, April 25."

AFTER all the abuse with which Mr. Keay has bespattered his countrymen in India for their alleged inconsiderate treatment of their native fellow-subjects, the disclosures of this trial seem to be really of the nature of a just retribution. They illustrate and confirm the argument which this journal continually, during the course of the wretched Ilbert controversy, endeavoured to impress on our native friends—that the true friends of India and the Indian peoples were those who had been driven by Lord Ripon's "Machiavellian" policy (attributed by Lord Stanley to an eager desire to upset the Permanent Settlement and demolish the landlords) into a semblance of temporary estrangement from the native cause. With all the acuteness of the Indian intellect, cannot our Native friends even now discern the significance of the undoubted fact, that Lord Ripon's chief allies have been gentlemen of the stamp of Sir George Campbell, and Mr. "Damn-the-legality" Haggard among officials, and Mr. Seymour Keay among non-officials? These are your "friends of the Native" when they are on the Radical stump in England; but their attitude towards the Native when in India is, in each case, matter of notoriety. Can such intelligent journals as the Mirror and the Bengalee still reckon the stump-orations of these gentlemen, delivered obviously for the purposes of English party, as out-weighing, in claims on Indian regard and esteem, life-long services like those of Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, Mr. Rivers Thompson, and scores more on the same side?

THE confession, extorted from the Government in the House of Commons last Thursday, that full sanction had at last been given to the completion of Lord Lytton's railway to Quetta, was naturally received by the Opposition with loud cheers. It amounted to a confession that Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Lytton were all along right; and that Mr. Gladstone's Midlothian slanders were a tissue of misrepresentations, founded on ignorance or recklessness, and traitorously imposed on the credulity of a deluded nation. This is what the Pioneer says of the manner in which the railway to Pishin has been prepared for:—

"The Government of India has decided to let it be known that the construction of the Kandahar Railway, as far as Pishin, is to be pushed on as rapidly as possible. It is, of course, too late now to reckon how much was thrown away by stopping the work at first; but we may at least ask whether anything has been gained—if nothing has been lost—by carrying on the work during the cold weather surreptitiously. A good deal has been done; but the Chappar Rift is still a formidable obstacle."

THE Indian Daily News, commenting on an article in the Hindu that refers to the probability of a Conservative Ministry appointing the next Viceroy, says that the Hindu "singles out the Duke of Buckingham, only because 'perhaps his appointment would be more popular than that of any other Conservative Statesman.' What would the Hindu say to Richard Temple? He would at least be welcomed on the Bombay side, if the expressions which found such free utterance on his relinquishing the Governorship were sincere; and he would bring with him a wide knowledge of the country and its needs."

We believe that the nomination of Sir Richard Temple, even by a Liberal Ministry, is by no means an unlikely event. It would be exactly one of those clever appointments, like that of Lord Dufferin to Constantinople, by which Mr. Gladstone sometimes "dishes" his opponents. After the painful experience of Lord Ripon, no Ministry, Liberal or Conservative, is likely for some time to come to send out to India a mere figure-head; and Sir Richard is the man who would most certainly be able to repair the breaches caused by Lord Ripon's follies.

REFERRING to the Hyderabad Libel suit, the Statesman says:—

"We confess frankly that we should not ourselves like to have done what Mr. Keay did, but probably most men in his circumstances would have felt justified in doing it, if they felt reasonably sure of succeeding. Fewer perhaps would have been ready to recall the incident, or to speak of it with elation. We live in an age when the basis of ethics is so uncertain according to the philosophers, that it is perhaps the wisest rule never to forget the existence of moral sanctions in our own conduct, and never to apply them too rigidly to the conduct of others. Mr. Goldwin Smith very recently told us (Contemporary Review, Dec. 1883) that a distinction requires to be drawn between 'the love of speculative truth and practical veracity.' Practical veracity, he says, 'is a part of justice, and the duty of telling a man the truth is measured by his right to be told it.' This is dangerous doctrine, we think, and yet we recognise it in our dealings with children, and without a misgiving in our treatment of the insane."

THE Indian Daily News has the following on Mr. Grant Duff:—

"The universality of Mr. Grant Duff's unpopularity is truly remarkable. The natives charge him with all sorts of heinous offences, down to having post-letters addressed to other people opened to find out if they contain complaints of his administration. The Europeans are no less antagonistic. A whole string of accusations is brought up against him in a letter the Allahabad paper prints from its Madras correspondent. These we will indicate seriatim. 'His Excellency the Right Honourable,' as the Madras Gazette styles him, is charged with having 'descended to the questionable expedient of making the Royal Engineer in charge of the P.W.D. pay for a piano ordered out from England;' with having 'allowed his servants to sweep into his train the remnants of a dinner prepared for him on a railway platform;' with having 'condescend to partake of a breakfast at Chingleput, at which all the station assembled in his honour, and to put down on the table, as his legitimate share of the expenses, the conventional sum of one rupee;' and with having done nothing "to discourage the shameful land-jobbing that is openly carried on under his eyes in broad daylight at Ootacamund.' A curious list of charges to bring against a Governor. But they are indications, at least, of the general feeling, which the correspondent sums up as follows:—'In a word, Mr. Grant Duff's way has been so inimical to all that is honourable and progressive, that he has aroused among Englishmen, as among natives, an earnest determination to fight him to the death.' An amusing moral is drawn by a Madras paper from the 'weakly Wallah' episode. Our contemporary agrees that care should be exercised to exclude men of weak physique from the Civil Service, but pleads that 'what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander,' and that it is at least equally important to have robust Governors and Lieutenant-Governors as to have robust civilians. Why draw the line at Civil Servants? Why not go a step further, and protest on public grounds, against any man, no matter what his parliamentary or other services, being appointed as Governor, or chief of a large establishment of Civil Servants, who cannot, without the grossest flattery, be called robust? It is not well in such a country as this that a Governor should be a physically feeble man, incapable owing to chronic ill health, of taking a cordial interest in anything of anybody around him, and who can banquet off nothing more substantial than a seidnitz-powder. There should be a rule laid down by Parliament to regulate appointments to the Viceroyalty and Governorships of India. It should be provided that candidates shall measure six feet in their stockings, shall weigh not less than twelve stone, shall give proof of muscular development and well-established physical fitness. Parliamentary invalids should not be shunted off to India to make a purse at the expense of the people of India. A bad digestion, a generally feeble physique, and a short temper that results from habitual ill health, may command our sympathy, especially if they are partly due to too sedulous an attention to public duty elsewhere; but men who are afflicted in this manner should not be permitted to come out in high positions to India. They should go to Cannes or Nice, to Wiesbaden or the Engadin, and there try to recuperate (at their own expense); but they should not be invited to inflict themselves upon the executive of this country. Of course, this is all meant especially for the benefit of Mr. Grant Duff, the best abused of all Indian Satraps."

THE Englishman gives the following report on the Calcutta Freight Market, for the week ending May 6:—

"Discouraging news from the home markets on most of our exports, an exceptionally tight money market, and the fact of supplies being held back in the interior, have had a most depressing influence on our freight market during the past week. Relets have been freely offering at a decline, and the loading vessels had to follow suit. Rates by steamers are weak, and by sailers have declined from 18. 6d. to 28. 6d. per ton. Engagements have been made on the most limited scale for London, and no fresh vessels have berthed; one ship secured a charter for Dundee, and another engaged a cargo for Mauritius. The market closes flat."

We take the following account on the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s Market Report:—

"The weather during the past fortnight has not, we regret to say, been such as to improve the prospects of the crop generally in Behar. There have been a few dust storms, accompanied, in some instances, with a few tenths of rain, but not sufficiently heavy to do any good, or (except at one or two factories) to allow of any empty lands being sown. Of the three districts, the accounts from Chuprah are the worst. It is now so late in the season that even should there be good general rain, there is not much prospect of anything more than an ordinary outturn from this division. The reports from most of the Rajahs of Lower Bengal continue very unfavourable; there has been a little rain in parts of Bhagulpore, Midnapore, and Kishnaghur, but not sufficiently heavy to do any good, and with the exception of Jessore, which has been exceptionally fortunate in getting rain, the accounts generally are very gloomy. Our advices from the Benares Provinces are to the effect that the Khoontee crop is looking well, and spring sowings have been put in to some extent. In the Doab there seems to be much difficulty still in getting water from the canals for the purposes of irrigation. P.S.—Since writing the above, telegrams have been received from Chumparan and Tirhoot reporting rain at some factories, and we can only trust soon to hear of the same having been general."

THE same firm gives the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market:—

"Some few parcels of New Season's Tea have arrived, and some are expected very shortly, and these, together with the old teas remaining, will be offered at auction on Thursday, the 15th instant. Since our last, there has been good rain in the Assam districts generally, with the exception of Bishnauth, where it is still much wanted. From Cachar and Sylhet we hear of favourable weather for manufacture, but in the Doars wet and cold prevailed. The Darjeeling and Terai districts have had a fair rainfall, and from Chittagong a good steady fall is reported. In Chota Nagpore rain is still much required. From the Kangra Valley, we hear that manufacture is somewhat backward, owing to the cold wet weather experienced."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending May 9:—

"The Rev. A. Lockwood, incumbent of Christchurch, Madras; Mr. J. A. Campbell, Executive Engineer, Public Works Department; Mr. W. de W. Peel, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Railway Department."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated May 25:—

"The Madras Government, in defiance of the unanimous protest of the Press and the public, native as well as European, has definitely decided to remove the Military Accounts Office from the Presidency town to Bangalore. It is creditable to the Madras public that it should have been the first in India to raise a voice openly against what has long been recognised as a great evil and danger, namely, the steadily growing tendency of the Governments, Supreme and Provincial, to remove themselves and their belongings from the centres of population and trade, to remote and inaccessible hill stations. Mr. Grant Duff's latest decision will be no matter for regret if it should have the effect of directing the attention of Parliament and the British public to this matter.

"Almost every year since Sir John Lawrence first obtained leave to spend the hottest months at Simla, the stay of the Supreme Government at its summer capital has been lengthened, and the number of officials accompanying it has been increased. The Supreme Government now spends barely four months of the year in Calcutta. The Provincial Governments have not been slow to follow this example; and each of them now removes annually for six or seven months to its own little hill-capital. Each Government is accompanied by a host of clerks, to whom this annual migration is a source of serious expense and inconvenience. The travelling expenses of the officials, superior and subordinate, are of themselves no small addition to the yearly expenditure of the country; while the want of accommodation at the hill-stations has necessitated the building of costly offices at Simla and Darjeeling. The waste of public time is, in the case of the Supreme Government, certainly not less than a month yearly, as the offices are closed for general business for a fortnight at the beginning and end of the Simla season. The manner in which the Select Committee on the Rent Bill was made to hurry through its work affords a good example of the mischievous effects on public business of this periodic migration.

"But by far the greatest evil is that the Government, removed from healthy contact with independent opinion, and shut up in a narrow circle of officialism, is rapidly losing touch of the public. A Government which did not remove itself from the people would never have been guilty of blunders such as the Ilbert Bill, or the first Local Self-Government Minute, of May, 1882. The almost invariable answer to any attack on the Simla exodus is, that the objections to it are confined to the people of Calcutta, and are due to purely selfish motives on their part; and it is not uncommon to find this answer accompanied by the threat, that if Calcutta makes itself disagreeable by agitating in the matter the Government will abandon the capital altogether.

"But, as a matter of fact, objection to the isolation of the Government is by no means confined to Calcutta. The effect of the presence or absence of the Government on the trade and prosperity of this city is infinitesimal. If only the Government would fix its permanent seat among the people it governs, it would be a matter of comparative indifference whether that seat were Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, or even one of the great cities of the interior, such as Delhi, Agra, or Allahabad.

"The agitation in favour of raising the maximum limit of age in the Civil Service competition continues to occupy the largest share of the attention of the native Press. Meetings on the subject have been held at Lucknow, Lahore, and other cities of Upper India. The extraordinary similarity, not only of the arguments used by the newspapers and by the speakers at meetings, but also of the very words in which those arguments are couched, shows that both writers and speakers derive their inspiration from one source; and that source is the letter which I quoted a fortnight ago.

"The latest weather and crop reports are fairly good in most parts of the country. Rain has fallen in most of the tea districts, and its manufacture is proceeding favourably. Indigo prospects have also improved, but only an ordinary out-turn is expected.

"The Government of the Punjab has issued a series of letters dealing with the report of the Education Commission with a view of laying down an educational policy for the province. The most important points insisted upon by Sir Charles Aitchison are, that the first duty is to provide for the masses, and that all new efforts must be mainly directed to their enlightenment; that higher education should be assisted by the Government only on condition that those who desire it should pay for it, at least in part; and that the Government is prepared to assist any effort by which useful knowledge will be conveyed to the people. A number of questions of detail are also treated with great fulness.

"The Russian Governor of Merv has ordered the release of all the Persian captives. He has also taken away the artillery which the Tekkes captured from the Persians in 1860.

"The Russians are building a fort in Koshut-Khan-Kali.

"It is generally believed in India, in spite of Russian denials, that Sarakhs has been ceded to the Czar by the Persian Government. I have information that the Russian troops have been for some time past at Old Sarakhs, on the opposite bank of the Heri-Rud River, in Turcoman territory. It is also well known that Russian emissaries, euphemistically called 'explorers,' have been for some time in the neighbourhood of Panjdeh.

"Apparently the Indian Government is more anxious about the state of affairs in Central Asia than it is willing openly to admit. The report, which is again revived, that it is proposed to despatch some officers to Herat to watch the course of events and to report is growing circumstantial, the number of these officers being given as five, and General Macgregor being named as chief of them. But it is doubtful whether the Government is yet prepared to take this step, however desirable it may be.

"Major Bell, R.M., is now at Sarakhs.

"News has been received from Cabul that the headmen of the rebellious Mongols have sent some of their relations to the capital. If these are well treated by the Ameer, and if fair conditions are offered, the headmen themselves will follow, and peace will be restored. Meanwhile, the Mongols and the Ameer's troops are ready to renew hostilities.

"Mir Mirza Mahomed Zuman has been appointed Mustafi in the stead of Mahomed Hossein, who was recently dismissed on a charge of complicity with Mir Ahmed Shah in the embezzlement of public money.

"Several of Ayoob Khan's adherents have lately arrived in Herat from Meshed, and have been well received by the Ameer's Governor, in the hope that others of Ayoob's supporters may be induced to give their allegiance to the Ameer.

"The Times of India gives the following account of the present state of the question between Nepal and Thibet:—Joint Commissioners have been inquiring together on the frontier, near Kati, for some weeks, and have ascertained that the loss of the plundered merchants amounts to nine lakhs of rupees in the Nepal coinage. The Lassa Commissioners did not dispute the accuracy of this calculation, but pleaded poverty, and requested that something should be deducted from the claim, and that the balance should be made payable in eighty years. When told that this was out of the question, they suggested forty years. They finally asked time to refer the matter to Lassa. The patience of the Nepaulese is now nearly worn out and they have sent four regiments to protect certain valuable storehouses at Raswagarhi and Temuria. There is still, however, some hope of a peaceful settlement, and the Chinese Government is said to be pressing the Thibetans to give way.

"Owing to the interruption of telegraphic communication we are still without full particulars of the cyclone at Akyab. It appears, however, that the cyclone's vortex formed in the southern part of the Bay of Bengal, about the 16th inst., and struck land near Akyab at two o'clock on the afternoon of the 17th, continuing to blow with great violence till 2 o'clock on the morning of the 18th. As far as is yet known, the most serious damage occasioned is the total destruction of the lighthouse, which was erected in 1876 on the Oyster Reef, near the entrance to Akyab Harbour. There was also much destruction of property on shore; but it is not yet known whether any lives were lost other than those of the seven men in the lighthouse.

"Rangoon to the south, and Chittagong to the north, of Akyab both felt the storm; but in neither place was any great damage done. There is reason to hope, too, that there has been little, if any, loss at sea. The mail steamer Rajpootana, plying from Calcutta to Rangoon, was obliged to run 140 miles out of her course, but reached her destination in safety. The steamer Madras, from Rangoon for Calcutta, had to put back, having sprung a leak and sustained slight injuries. Several buildings were unroofed in the town of Akyab and all the small craft in the harbour were more or less seriously injured.

"The vicinity of Bagdad is inundated by floods from the River Tigris. The town itself was saved by the exertions of the troops. Fears are entertained of the outbreak of an epidemic when the water dries up."

THE Times publishes to-day the following telegram from its Calcutta correspondent, anent the Mahdi's Proclamations in India:—

"I have obtained a copy of the proclamation of the Mahdi which was found circulating in India. It purports to emanate from 'The Slave of God, Mohamed-el-Mahdi, son of Syed Abdullah,' and is addressed 'To his friends who follow him and concur in supporting the true religion.'

"The document, which, according to Mahomedan fashion, is plentifully interspersed with texts from the Koran, begins by dwelling on the merit of engaging in a Holy War, and warns the people that God has forbidden them to accept His enemies as their superiors.

"'Learn ye,' it proceeds, 'that God hath chosen me for the Khilafat-el-Kuhara' (that is, principal Viceroyalty), and 'Mahomed hath given me the joyful news that my companion are equal to his.'

"The writer then goes on to say that he sends Sheikh Othman-el-Bakree, whom he has appointed Holy Ameer of the Bedonin tribes and of the other people who follow the path of safety. He directs them to obey the Sheikh and to give him every assistance, adding, 'Whoever shall accompany him shall be considered to have accompanied me, and shall be included in the honours mentioned above for my companions.'

"Then follows a warning addressed to the people of Suakim. Those who are friendly to the Mahdi are told to leave the town, and to go to such place as Sheikh Othman may point out; while those who fail to do so are threatened with condign punishment.

"The faithful are then promised victory and the spoil of their enemies, and are exhorted not to fear the strength and numbers of their opponents, because all these are strangers to God, and small parties of men have often overcome large bodies, through God's grace.

"It would appear from the context that this proclamation was intended rather for the Arab tribes than for Indian Mussulmans. It is, however, significant that it should have penetrated to India; and it is clear that the circulation of such appeals to religious fanaticism is dangerous to the peace of the Indian Empire."

THE WATER SUPPLY OF CALCUTTA.

AT a meeting of the Town Council recently, the question of the water supply of the town was brought forward in accordance with the resolution passed at the special meeting held on the 21st instant, into the cause of the deficient water supply at the present season, and to provide the necessary relief.

The chairman stated that he had received a letter from Babu Kristo Das Pal regretting his inability to attend, and asking him to act on his behalf in the matter. There were two directions in which their inquiries might be profitably directed; firstly, whether any improvement could be made in the distribution of the existing supply in the town; and secondly, whether anything could be done to increase the supply in the way of putting pressure on the existing main.

Mr. Kimber stated that a ten feet pressure could be easily put on the main; that it would cost something like one lac, but that the work could not be completed before the next hot weather.

Mr. Hart drew attention to the fact which he had heard from the late Mr. Knight that the fastenings and joints of the present main were so weak and ill-constructed that Mr. Knight did not think the main could bear any pressure on it.

Mr. Kimber repeated that he thought the main would easily bear so small as ten feet extra pressure. Mr. Fenwick had assured him that provided certain expenditure was undergone, he would not hesitate to put an extra pressure of forty feet on it.

Baboo Omirtonath Mittra said that the practical question was whether an extra supply could be at once afforded to those parts of the town which now most needed water? That seemed the first consideration.

The chairman said that he thought that all were agreed that they should ask the engineer for a statement of his views on the question of putting a ten-feet pressure on the main, so as to add a million gallons to the existing supply, and also whether some relief could not be given to the filtered supply by an extension of the unfiltered supply at a moderate expenditure.

Mr. Kimber stated that when Mullick Ghat Station came into working order, it would not be necessary to use filtered water for street watering.

The chairman inquired how it would answer if some more hydrants of a different pattern to those in use, so as to avoid mistakes, were placed in the streets for the unfiltered supply, so as to make the public use them and save filtered water.

The engineer said that that would be a good plan. He would consider and report upon it at next meeting.

After some further conversation, the chairman said he thought it would be possible to stop the supply for some hours daily to some parts of the town which now got the best pressure, and thereby increase the pressure in the remaining portions, especially in Burra Bazar, and the engineer concurring in this view, it was resolved—(1) that the engineer be requested to furnish at as early a date as possible an estimate of the cost of putting such pressure on the existing main as would give one million gallons additional supply; (2) that he also report what steps he can take so as to make the unfiltered supply available to the public, so as to relieve the filtered supply; and (3) in the course of next week to try the experiment of isolating some parts of the town, which get a good supply for some three hours daily, and carefully watch the effect upon other portions of the town, especially Burra Bazar. The engineer was also requested to make any further suggestions as to remedying the existing deficiency. Sanction was also accorded to the entertainment of additional khalasees.—Englishman.

THE SATURDAY EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT IN CALCUTTA.

FOR several years past an agitation has been going on more or less in Calcutta to bring about an early closing movement on Saturdays, so as to afford the many assistants in the large tradesmen's houses in Calcutta an opportunity of enjoying a half holiday on that day. It is a good many years ago now since a similar movement was first commenced in England. As might be expected, when first proposed, the idea met with a good deal of opposition. But several large firms were steady in their adherence to the proposition to grant their assistants this opportunity for healthy recreation, and as other traders began to see that the business of those who allowed their assistants the half holiday in no way suffered, they soon followed the example, until now there is hardly a large trading centre in England where the assistants in the shops do not get the benefit of a Saturday half holiday. Unanimity in such a case is hardly to be expected, and this has been the cause why in Calcutta the early closing movement has not hitherto been adopted. But it is satisfactory to find that the matter has now been taken up by the Trades Association in real earnest, and from the advertisement published elsewhere it will be seen that most of the leading firms in Calcutta have given their adhesion to the proposal to close their establishments at 4 p.m. on Saturday, commencing from Saturday next, the 10th instant. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" all the world over, and perhaps there is no country in the world where a little innocent recreation is more needed than in India. The natives of old times were wise in their generation that they established so many religious festivals which were to be observed as holidays, but the European assistants in the shops of the Calcutta tradesman do not get the benefit of these native holidays, although many of the native clerks and workmen take advantage of them. At this season of the year, when business is not very brisk, it can be no loss to a tradesman to close his establishment two or three hours earlier than usual on a Saturday afternoon, but it is a great gain to the assistants. It may be also indirectly a great gain to Government, for many of the young men, with this opportunity before them, may be induced to enlist as volunteers, and thus strengthen the regiment in Calcutta. Drilling in the early morn very often tires out a man to such an extent as to make him disinclined for his daily work afterwards. But an hour or two's drill in the afternoon, when his daily work is over, would be a pleasant and at the same time an easy task. The two or three hours gained from the daily labour would also afford many of the assistants time to study and improve themselves in their general education. In fact, there is much to be said in favour of the movement, but very little against it, and now that so many of the leading firms in Calcutta have agreed to close, it is to be hoped that the movement will become general in all the shops of Europeans in Calcutta.—Englishman.

THE DEFENCE OF THE ASSAM FRONTIER.

CONSIDERING the great and increasing importance of Assam in the present day, the large amount of capital already invested in it, and year by year steadily increasing, the steady growth of immigration, and the consequent relief which is given to the already overcrowded districts of the N. W. P. and Tirhut, there is no apology needed for again reverting to the important subject of its defences. The present time, too, seems especially favourable, now that the publication of Mr. Mackenzie's book on the N.E. frontier of Bengal has put the public in possession of the Government view of the defences that are necessary, and the author and compiler being an official whose name has already been mentioned as a possible Chief Commissioner, his own views deserve careful consideration on the part of every one interested in the province. The more striking geographical feature is of course the very long line of frontier bordering on countries inhabited by tribes more or less uncivilised, and about some of whom very little is known even to the present day. A frontier of this kind is more or less always exposed to raids, and to prevent them occurring is a task beyond the power of the number of military and police at present in the province. Small bodies of men belonging to tribes like the Nagas, Lushais, Akas, &c., can at any time pass within a few hundred yards of a stockade situated in the jungle without a chance of being detected. To prevent, therefore, tribes actually raiding, is a task which would require the greater part of the Bengal army, and to stop it is perfectly hopeless, so the utmost thing that can be done is to arrange the forces which are at the disposal of the Government in such a manner as to prevent raids, if possible. But when unfortunately they do occur, the object should be to keep down the evil at a minimum, and to punish the marauders in such a way as to prevent them again transgressing, at any rate for a time. Before, however, proceeding to discuss the question of the sufficiency or the reverse of the present force of military and police in the province, it is as well to describe a little more of its geographical features. On the north there is a frontier running from a point north of Dhubri to Nizamghat, some 400 miles in extent, while from there to Jhalnacher, an outpost south-east of Silchar, is about 360 miles in a straight line, and we are therefore well within the mark at putting the frontier which has to be guarded by the military and police at not less than 900 miles. Besides this, it must be remembered that there are other tribes in the centre of the province, such as Garos and Khasias, who, although of late years they have given no serious trouble, yet apparently, from the fact that troops are still required to be kept in their hills, cannot be left alone in safety.

Bordering on these 900 odd miles of frontier are to be found a variety of more or less uncivilised tribes, beginning with Bhutias and Manipuris, probably the most favourable specimens of hill civilisation, and ending with Mijis, Abors, Nagas, and others almost unknown. According to Mr. Mackenzie, these tribes may be classified into eighteen principal heads, but again, nearly all these main heads may be subdivided into minor heads, all of whom act quite independently of one another, are bound by no similar laws, &c., &c., and are practically distinct tribes. For instance, the class called by Mr. Mackenzie the extra Bhutan Bhutias consist of four kinds of Bhutias, who have hardly anything in common one with another. They come down to the plains by different routes, confine their trading to separate tracts, receive their pasha (or pension) quite distinct, are bound by different treaties, and differ much in, at any rate, the outward veneer of civilisation. While, therefore, many of the tribes thus bordering on our territories are small in numbers, and, not being as a rule united together, there is not much chance of a serious war, yet the fact of their being so independent of one another renders us more exposed to raids, and what is wanted is not so much a strong offensive force (though a force complete in itself, and ready equipped for emergencies is what is really required) as good means of defence, and the power, not to prevent, as that is impossible, but to follow up raiders as soon as possible, and to inflict on them summary and condign punishment.—Englishman.

REGIMENTAL COMMANDS.

THAT the system limiting the duration of the tenure of regimental commands would tend to swell the ranks of officers on general duty was foreseen, but the rate at which the increase is taking place was probably not anticipated, and is even now, perhaps, not fully realised. The last army list furnishes some interesting information on the subject to which the attention of the military authorities may well be directed. Turning to the 11th Bengal Lancers, it appears that Lieutenant Colonel Boyle, the commandant, vacates his post on June 12, on which date he will have completed his tenure of command. But that officer's thirty-two years' service will not be completed till December, 1886. He has thus to face the probability of reverting to general duty in June next. In the Punjab force the commandant of the 1st Cavalry has recently been relieved of his post and placed on general duty. In the 1st N.I., the duration of the late commandant's tenure of office and of his service for pension have not coincided, and consequently, on his being relieved, it has been found necessary to place him on general duty. In the 42nd N.I., under a similar combination of circumstances, the late commandant has also been placed on general duty. A similar fate from a similar cause has overtaken the late commandants of the Corps of Guides, of the 2nd Sikhs, the 3rd Sikhs, the 1st Punjab Infantry, the 4th Punjab Infantry, and 2nd Regiment Hyderabad Contingent. This list, it will be observed, relates only to the Bengal army, to corps under the Government of India, and even as regards these is far from being exhaustive. The Madras and Bombay armies are simultaneously adding their numbers to the re-formation of the general duty list, a list which it had been supposed was destined at no distant date to be blotted out. So far from the result being within measurable distance, circumstances prove that the list is now in process of rapid repletion. The general duty officer is beginning once more to be found at every military station. The spectacle of officers, mostly in the full vigour of their health and capacities, compelled through no personal fault, but by the rules of the service, to lead lives of almost complete idleness, so far as any official duties are concerned, has been long declared to be one which is injurious to the interests and welfare of the army. The Government, however, has now devised a system whereby this state of things is not only perpetuated, but accentuated and intensified. It would be in the interests alike of the Government and of the army if, instead of attempting to enforce a system which is found to be incompatible with the conditions of Indian service, fair pecuniary inducements were offered to cause officers now compelled to serve on even at the risk of being placed on general duty, to sever their connection with the service, if they so willed, on the termination of their tenure of regimental command.—Englishman.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

IN forwarding to the Secretary of State the Memorial of the Landlords of Bengal against the Tenancy Bill, the Imperial Government makes no attempts to meet the arguments against the proposed legislation set forth in the Memorial, but shelters itself behind the letter of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, of the 27th September, on which we have, in previous issues, commented; except, indeed, with regard to the arguments based on the Permanent Settlement. We have often expressed our opinion that the zemindars, so far from strengthening their case, weaken it by relying on historical arguments such as those based on any interpretation of the Permanent Settlement. If one thing is more certain than another about that extraordinary act of philanthropic and sentimental legislation, it is that it was founded on theory and in almost complete ignorance of the conditions with which it purported to deal. Whether or not the Government of that day reserved to its successors the right of legislating for the ryots of the future, matters little; no one in his senses could deny that it is the duty of any Government to deal with the conditions it finds to exist, and to remedy grievances or provide protection for those who needed it. It serves no purpose, therefore, to hark back to the dim obscurity of the Permanent Settlement. The zemindars' case will be strongest when it shows that the proposed legislation goes far in advance of anything which the existing relations between landlord and tenant warrant. The Indian Government, in its letter forwarding the Memorial, is constrained to admit that there is a great consensus of official opinion against many of the provisions of the new Act, and to allow that they may be considerably modified by the Select Committee. We have already pointed out however, that the Select Committee whilst making a few concessions to the landlords, have retained and even intensified some of the most objectionable provisions of the Bill. It is misleading, moreover, for the Indian Government to state that the definition of "settled ryot" is in strict accordance with the Secretary of State's decision that every resident ryot should have a "right of occupancy," for the revised Bill contains no mention whatever of residence; whilst naturally, in the opinion of those who think with the landlords, even residence alone should not confer such exceptional privileges as those which attach to the right of occupancy. Similarly with regard to the fixation of maximum rents and the right of transfer, the Indian Government does not attempt to meet the arguments of the memorialists; it leaves the Secretary of State to form his own opinion on the papers sent to him. Allowing that the Bill has encountered a considerable amount of unfavourable criticism, the Indian Government "refrains from any remark on the opinions of local officers, being satisfied that the bulk and weight of opinion taken from time to time, under successive Lieutenant Governors, is distinctly in favour of the main principles of the Bill." This may be true, but if the Secretary of State contents himself with this assurance, and does not trouble himself to look into the recorded opinions of those to whom the Government of India refers in this confident manner, grievous injustice will, in ignorance, be done, to carry out the pet theory of particular class of legislators. The one-sidedness of the Bengal Tenancy Bill is sufficiently demonstrated by the fact that while no one has come forward to argue in its favour, except the officials who are responsible for it, numberless champions have taken up the cause of the landlord, with the endeavour to save him from the ruin that must inevitably result from the severe blows dealt at his position and rights by our philanthropic legislators. The latest publication in this connection is that of Mr. Dacosta, whose name is fairly well known in England as interesting himself in Indian subjects. Unfortunately, Mr. Dacosta's pamphlet is late in the time of its issue, for the Report of the Select Committee which we recently noticed deals with some of the points which Mr. Dacosta makes the object of special attack. He gives the extracts from the opinions of the executive and judicial officers of the Bengal Government with which we are now familiar, and the arguments which he founds upon these have nothing new in them, though they are valuable as showing that the weakness and injustice of the legislators' case is detected by persons of various experience and interests. Mr. Dacosta it at some pains to show that the ryot, in whose interests the original Bill was mainly framed, will himself be as great a sufferer as his landlord, by the introduction of a class of middlemen, bound by no rules against rack-renting the actual cultivator of the soil. The revised Bill, however, so far provides for this result, by placing middlemen themselves in the position of tenure-holders, under whom rights of occupancy can be acquired in a similar manner as the Bill provides for ryots holding directly under the proprietor. The great blot of the Bill has not, however, been removed; namely, the absence of any provision that residence should be essential to his acquirements of occupancy rights. There are few if any who would not willingly see the man who has actually cultivated the soil himself for years, or who has succeeded to its occupation as the representative of a long line of industrious cultivators, protected against arbitrary ejection or rack-renting; nor can such protection for the tenant injure the landlord, whose property attains thereby a value, in the security of its rents and the regularity of its returns, which it does not otherwise possess. But such a scheme in no way justifies the wholesale spoliation of long existing rights, which even the revised Bill contemplates; and we hold that the landlord party are right in resisting to the utmost any legislation which goes beyond the bare principle which we have stated above. It is fearful to contemplate the litigation, and the bitter feeling between landlord and tenant which will be aroused by the new Bill if it passes. Already, the value of landed property is depreciated, whilst the future value may be put down as almost nil. Loans already made on the security of land will be incapable of realisation; and no so-called proprietor will be able to raise funds for agricultural improvement on the much depreciated security which is all he has to offer. "The revolutionary character of the measure," says Mr. Dacosta very truly, "has spread mistrust and consternation among all who are interested in land in Bengal; and these feelings have been intensified by the marked disregard which the Government has evinced for the representations of those whose interest are assailed." This, it may be admitted, is the most remarkable feature of the controversy. Certain sentimental philanthropists have determined that "something must be done," and their want of experience prevents their seeing the limits of fair and justifiable legislation, whilst their obstinacy blinds them to the injustice and injury which will result to both landowners and cultivators, if the Bill is passed into law.—Civil and Military Gazette.

THE RAST GOFTAR ON SIR GEORGE BIRDWOOD.

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN has arrived at Simla on a visit to the Viceroy. The best evidence of his anxiety and earnestness to ameliorate the condition of our impoverished peasantry is the fact of his having been invited by the Viceroy himself to consult with him about the establishment of agricultural Banks. Sir William Wedderburn is like an ornament to the civil service, and now when the time has approached for a change among some of our rulers then from the reason of their great sympathy with our country, the claims of such noble-minded government officers in the public service to be our governors press on our attention. The term of office not only of our Viceroy, but of more than one other governor is coming to a close. There are but few months remaining to the time when our Governor will resign his post. And if we were to cast about for persons who might be selected to fill such high positions for their ability as well as experience, and more than that for their impartiality, for sympathy with the people and for their anxiety for the public welfare, we can find some veteran names from among men in the service of our country. We trust the reader will not do us the injustice to suppose that in writing thus, we, in any way, depreciate the valuable qualities of our present worthy Governor. We entertain a high opinion for Sir James Fergusson's attention and untiring energy in connection with the functions of his office. We greatly praise, too, the impartiality and independence of his administration. This noble Governor has inspired great esteem and confidence for his anxiety and earnestness for the good of the people. With one aim in view, he has continued to take part in all movements of educational, social, and other improvements. The people have seen ere now that he regards Indian and English alike in conferring public rights. And, moreover, there have been many instances to prove that Sir James is no follower merely of others' lead, but a leader of others in the path that he thinks just. After what we have said, it cannot be for a moment thought to be expressing the least disappointment with our present Governor when we speak of the claims of men in the public service of Sir W. Wedderburn's stamp to the post which Sir James will vacate. If we were speaking with reference to Sir James himself, we would even go so far as to say that he ought to have another term of five years as Governor; and that a petition ought to be made to that effect; and if one is made, we shall be glad to support it. Especially does it become more important from the consideration that his help and advice may be continued up to the completion of the coming great Exhibition in Bombay, the initiative of which is so much indebted to his valuable encouragement. So that it will be seen that in this article our main aim is to write without reference to all the noble qualities and just claims of our present Governor. Our only object in writing this is to point out that if we cast about, we shall find not a few from the service which Sir William Wedderburn graces as well as from among our other services, who are fit to adorn the post of our Governor as well as Sir James has done. Sir William Wedderburn is still a new man in the service, and has to run a term; but in this connection another veteran name from the list of our public servants instantly occurs to our minds. That veteran person has left the service here, and yet he is engrossed fully in directing the administration of the country, and who is there that would be unwilling to see him once occupying the position of our Governor?

We speak about Sir George Birdwood. Even after leaving our country, he renders glorious service to it from his own land; whereas, his anxiety for the welfare of the Indians, and to do them as much good as possible is as alive and keen as it was when he was in our midst. Ability, energy, and industry are not the only necessary qualifications of a Governor, such a noble heart as his is indispensable. And, consequently, if Sir James Fergusson is to vacate the Governorship next year, and if his term is not to be prolonged, the whole community generally will congratulate itself on finding it entrusted to Sir George Birdwood, who is well capable of filling the position as worthily as Sir James Fergusson has done.

THE AMENDED RENT BILL.—I.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "HINDOO PATRIOT."

SIR,—The Rent Bill, after having been subjected to fresh gestation in the Legislative womb for about fifteen weeks, has again been ushered into existence. It now makes its appearance, however, not as the final product of the Legislative brain, but clothed in tentative flesh and blood; if its frail limbs could stand the rude criticism of an unfeeling world, why then maternal pride would be soothed and the salvation of the country effected at one and the same time, but should, alas! adverse winds cross its path and mar its growth, we are promised that it will be again nursed and nurtured into strength, and then made to revisit the "pale glimmers" of public opinion in Bengal and Behar.

That, Sir, seems to be the official programme. Now, I make bold to say the amended Bill is a premature and forced birth, hurried into development under high pressure incubation. One of the dissentient members rightly complains that sufficient time was not allowed for deliberation. "From the 26 January," observes the Hon. Rai Kristodas Pal, the Committee "resolved to sit thrice a week from 2 to 5-30 p.m., and notices of amendment were required to be sent in to the secretary the day before the meeting. The new arrangement was proposed owing to the amount of work which remained undone, and also owing to the near approach of the Simla Season; but I cannot refrain from remarking that apart from personal inconvenience, which it involved, it left the members scant time, scarcely ten hours for the preparation of amendments, and six hours for their study even if one gave his whole time to this work. I consider it my duty to protest against the arrangement, as it was neither fair to the individual members of the Committee, particularly to one in my position, being deprived of the opportunity of consulting those whose views I was understood to represent, nor to the momentous interests involved, but my protest was of no avail."

Supposing the Select Committee met twice a week till Jan. 26, last and thenceforward thrice a week, till March 13, there might have been something like thirty-five meetings, and if they lasted three hours and a half, the Committee spent about 120 hours on the Bill. If we remember that they had carefully to revise two hundred and thirty sections besides the most substantial portion of a most important Regulation (VIII. of 1819), and that they had further to reflect upon, digest and discuss no less than forty-one memorials and special communications with numberless enclosures and appendices, we may be permitted humbly to inquire not indeed how this super-handled labour was gone through, but as to the length of time devoted to each section, perhaps the irrational sceptre may be answered in the words of a great poet slightly modified.

... "Lawgivers when they please,
Can wondrous powers assume,
... So bright and blooming are their brains divine."

Seriously speaking the advent of the Simla season seems to have most abnormally stimulated the intellectual activity of our legislators, and the country has fair reason to complain of the indecent haste with which the most important measure of the session was constructed. Of course, the functions of the Legislative Council in India are purely autocratic, but the mischief of it is, it stimulates the representative phase of more enlightened Legislatures; for instance, in the matter of this Rent Bill it professes to have reflected in its midst the opinions of the landed classes while as a matter of fact it does not care to give proper opportunities for the expression and communication of those opinions. The landholders have the gravest ground to demur to the justice of a law which is forged and fashioned professedly with the help of two gentlemen who represent their interests, but who are practically debarred all means of taking the sense of their constituents on the provisions of that law.

The truth is this custom of annual migration to the hills is one of those hydra-headed monsters which must be scotched and utterly destroyed before there can be any real reform in Indian administration. No man can understand why it should be necessary for the higher divinities of the official syud, to indulge in recurring recreations for the greatest portion of the year. The most intellectual men amongst the non-civilians, eminent avants, distinguished linguists, celebrated lawyers, journalists, and professors, all work in the plains from April to September, and no leisure takes place in their brains. But the moment a man is an irresponsible Secretary of State or a Provincial Governor, his sensibility to heat suddenly becomes most unaccountably and awfully acute, his intellectual strength suddenly collapses, his brain refuses to work, and he is a lost man unless he is perched some thousands of feet above the level of the sea.

But we are digressing; the Bill deals in its opening chapters with various classes of tenants, it divides them into four classes, (1) Tenure holders, (2) Occupancy ryots, (3) Non-occupancy ryots, (4) Under-ryots.

In attempting to define and describe the first-class it makes radical departures from old and well recognised lines of demarcation. The word tenure has now acquired a technical meaning thoroughly precise. It certainly connotes a greater permanency and higher development of rights than a holding for a term, and yet strangely enough it is enacted in class 5 of Sec. 5 that "when the area of a holding exceeds 100 bighas and the whole or part of it is sublet, the tenant shall be presumed to be a tenureholder till the contrary is shown" i.e. without regard to the condition under which a tenant holds or the term for which he holds, if the quantity of land in his occupation exceeds one hundred bighas and he sublets but one bigha, a rebuttable presumption is legislatively created that he is a tenureholder and in holdings under 100 bighas, if the proportion sublet by him is in excess of moiety the presumption becomes conclusive under Sec. 37.

The practical results of these provisions shall be that the subletting of moiety of even the smallest holding will take away from the holder the status of a ryot and convert him into a tenureholder, while in holdings from 100 bighas upwards, the subletting of the smallest fraction will have the same effect. This classification by quantity appears to be most arbitrary, and cannot be supported on any equitable consideration whatever. It shall minimise the evil of the absorption of land by the class of occupancy tenants and the non-circulation of it amongst the other sections of tenantry. As matters stand at present, a peasant takes a holding, some time afterwards he finds he is unable to cultivate, or does not need the cultivation of the whole, he accordingly sublets a portion to his neighbour, but in so doing he has not the remotest intention of changing his status or delegating his rights to his sub-tenant, as soon as increase of family or improvement of his means enables him to have the benefit of additional lands, he re-enters upon the portion sublet and resumes the cultivation of the whole. This arrangement is attended with material advantages, in the densely peopled tracts of Bengal and Behar where the incidence of population upon land is very high, and where all the available culturable area has already been absorbed, sub-letting is essential to the maintenance of a balance of force as it were in the social economy. If, as its authors anticipate, the Bill spreads a panic amongst the whole body of tenants and prevents them sub-letting, there would be a most abnormal increase in the ranks of the landless day-labourers, it is inconceivable why the Select Committee desire to stop their further development. In times of scarcity it is these day-labourers who are a standing source of danger and difficulty. Living from hand to mouth, with scanty wages, with an irrepressible tendency to marry and to increase and multiply, their enforced exclusion from the cultivation of the soil is the most fatal step that could have been taken against the interests of the community at large under the present system, sub-tenants holding under occupancy rayats get at any rate lands to cultivate and have some interest in the result of cultivation. In some districts as in Birbhum they cultivate on condition of paying two thirds of the produce to their lessors or of dividing it in equal or slightly unequal proportions in other parts of the country. Experience has uniformly shown as indeed might have been inferred on a priori grounds that the sub-tenants as a class are better fitted to stand the pressure of high prices in seasons of drought than the landless day-labourers. It requires no very elaborate argument to prove that on public grounds the maintenance of a class of the population, which though unable to obtain a direct and permanent interest in the cultivation of land, has yet been hitherto allowed to acquire that interest indirectly is a most important condition of success in the solution of the future life-problem of the country. The Legislature however, professes to put a vigorous ban on sub-letting altogether, supposing they succeed and that sub-tenants as a class nearly cease to exist, will that be a consummation most devoutly to be desired? I am afraid if the Bill becomes law, if occupancy ryots find they are unable to cultivate their holdings themselves they will try to do so by hired servants. The Bill does not anywhere avoid stipulation for wages of labour to be paid in kind, and most probably the sub-tenants of the present Bill will be the hired servants of the future.

But supposing it was expedient to repress sub-letting it may fairly be doubted whether the provisions of the Bill will not be calculated to defeat that object. According to Sec. 64 if a tenureholder succeeds in proving that he has paid the same rent for a period of twenty years, it shall be presumed that he has held his tenure at that rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement; and every tenure held at the same rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement will be free from enhancement, and therefore permanent under Sec. 11.

Moreover, the restrictions which surround the right of transfer of occupancy holdings do not apply to the alienation of permanent tenures; in fact, while the latter have been clothed with all the incidents of property in its fullest and widest sense, the former have been so only, subject to a right of pre-emption in the landlord. Now, remembering that the conversion of an occupancy holding into a tenure is made wholly optional with the tenant, and is the easiest process imaginable, the Bill may be said to offer a most tempting bait to occupancy rayats to convert themselves into tenure-holders.

It may be said that dissociation from cultivation which the conversion of a holding into a tenure will involve, will of itself operate as a deterrent, but the rent may be stipulated to be paid in kind irrespective of seasons of drought or other contingency. Thus while the tenure-holder escapes risks and shuns the disadvantage of a restrictive right of transfer, he gains rather than loses by his new position as sub-lessor.

Viewed therefore from either stand-point of view the Bill will not in any manner conduce to the prosperity of the agricultural population; if it discourages sub-letting there will be an infinite increase of the landless day labourers, a class steeped in chronic poverty and dire destitution; on the other hand, if it encourages sub-letting, almost all the occupancy holdings will develop themselves into tenures, the right of pre-emption in the landlord will be a delusion and that bele noir of the Legislature, the money-lender, will stalk on the stage of history in all his ghastly selfishness as the curtain rises on the future of rural Bengal.

It is curious to note how the Indian Government seems to be perpetually haunted with the fear lest their pet prototype of Arcadian prosperity, the occupancy tenant, should be extinct or dwarfed in his rights. They seek to encase him in an artificial coat of mail. They fondly hope to embalm him into immortality to render him proof against the influences of the present and the future, but also the course of events waits for no man, no lawgiver's hand can arrest that mighty stream, onward and onward it flows, and prince or peasant all must bow to its eddies and whirlpools.

Look at the occupancy tenant of to-day, what is his position? Is he wheedled into sub-letting by force or guile? No, never! He is compelled to sub-let by the very exigencies of his situation, he knows very well what is good for him. It is absurd to suppose that the man who attends fairs and markets, drives hard bargains for his cattle and grain, would not know how to protect himself in sub-letting his land, the parties with whom he deals are not those ugly landlords whose trail is like the serpent's.

Happily he has to deal with poor peasants evenly matched with him in intelligence and means. If then he sublets it is either because he makes more by the transaction than he would be able by direct cultivation, or because he can not manage the whole cultivation himself.

Ramdoss Mundal of Bengal or Jumoher Mohato his Confere of Behar, has a Jote of fifty bighas. He became straitened in his circumstances, perhaps a plague carries off his kine, a poor family of day-labourers saves sufficient money to enable them to purchase plough, cattle, and seed. They take a sub-lease of twelve or fifteen bighas for a term, gradually they improve their position, they save more and more till perhaps they are able to get a relinquished holding or purchase one. The day-labourer thus develops himself into a sub-tenant, and the sub-tenant into a tenant, the whole process marks a stage of social development well-known in the country, but the wisdom of our rulers can never brook the silent and slow operation of the laws of nature, they want to repress the acting forces of the moment, they want to create an artificial present for the people.

Rightly as the Honourable Rai Kristodas Pal tells us, the Select Committee felt the invidiousness of the distinction between the position of the occupancy rayat, the idle middle-man, and the drone and the sub-tenant, the bona fide cultivator, the worker and the busy bee; but if it was necessary to do away with the evil the drone might have been extinguished, another survival of the fittest effected without slaughtering the innocent landlord. The Bill, however, immortalises the drone, gives a new lease of life to the sub-tenant, and makes both feed on the ill-fated landlord. It prescribes what may be called a system of double depletion. Perhaps in the "fine phrenzy" of our socialistic law givers, there stood the plethoric zemindar wallowing in imaginary wealth, blessed with a superabundance of the comforts of life, his veins about to burst with that bright precious fluid which, if it could only be got, would make old rural Bengal young and fresh again; it was not enough then that he should be bled, it was necessary he should be well and profusely bled, and so the converted tenure holder—i.e., the original occupancy tenant carves out an estate, and the sub-tenant the occupancy rayat of the Bill carves out another, and all out of him.—Yours faithfully, C.

MR. GRANT DUFF'S EXTRAVAGANCE.

AN impertinent and inquisitive member of Parliament the other day asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether it was true that the Right Hon. Mount Stuart Elphinstone Grant Duff had spent Rs 40,000 on silk hangings for his summer residence at Ootacamund. The answer given by Mr. Cross was more ingenuous than ingenious. The member of Parliament was told that money had been spent on furnishing Government House at Ootacamund. The palaces of Assyrian kings were hung with gold and silver tapestry, and why should not the Governor of Madras enjoy silk hangings? The instinct that leads the ryot to paint his mud hut with bright colours, that prompts Bapu's wife to wear silver trinkets, drives the Right Hon. Mount Stuart Grant Duff to have silk hangings and artistic furniture. It is only right that a man who spends his days in the company of dull and prosaic secretaries should have surroundings to remind him that there is some sweetness and light in life. The people of Madras ought to be gratified that they have a Governor who is endowed with a love of beauty for he who is blind to the sense of beauty is also lacking in the perception of justice and right. The pursuit of beauty must act with a general chastening and refining influence on the spirit even of a Governor. It is impossible to imagine a Governor, who resides in chambers decorated with silk hangings, rude and boorish to those who have an interview with him. The private room of a Governor as a rule, bears a painful resemblance to the room of a dentist, and the Governor of Madras is to be commended for having started an important reform. The new artistic chairs with upright backs which torture the strongest body are well adapted for the room of a private secretary. The most hungry claimant for office seated in one of them would not prolong his visit for twenty minutes. The Queen Anne furniture is far too sober and severe in its style to be at all suitable for the room dedicated to the aides de camp. They are gay and gaudy butterflies of social life, and for them the furniture of the thirteenth century with its widespread use of gold and colour is best adapted. But in these matters of detail we are certain that the taste and judgment of the Governor of Madras can be trusted, for he has taken all culture under his special protection. We have no sympathy with vulgar Radicals who grudge him silk hangings and chairs moulded after the pattern of Chippendale and Sheraton. Some grace, or at least some propriety, some harmony of colour in the things near us and surrounding us are one and all necessities, not only for the happiness, but the respectability of humanity; how much more are they necessary for the gods who reside on the hills?

Although we do not belong to the class of narrow-minded persons who would deny the Governor of Madras his silk hangings, and the Governor of Bombay his Turkish Bath, yet we think that in this parsimonious and radical age it would be more discreet if Governors paid for luxuries out of their own pockets. There are writers who are fond of reminding the public that the Governors of Madras and Bombay cost the State far more than the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, who rules a far larger population. We, ourselves, do not consider the question to be a mere one of figures, but we think it is always an error to give the heathen an opportunity to rage and imagine vain things. Spending money on the palace at Ootacamund is liable to cause people to ask why the Governor of Madras should have a palace at his capital, another with a grand park and garden five miles away, besides a summer residence at the hills. The people of Madras bitterly complain that the Governor occupies his two places at the capital for a very limited period; and that the Commander in Chief has no local habitation. It has been left to the military authorities of the Madras Presidency to make the startling and important discovery that the best place to manage a large army is a mountain remote from troops. The people of Calcutta also complain that the stay of the Supreme Government at the capital is far too short, and that this season in decent haste was shown in the flight to Simla. The desertion of the three capitals of India by their rulers must to some extent affect their prosperity. That it also affects the efficiency of Government we have but little doubt. In his mountain retreat Lord Ripon had no idea of the force of public opinion arrayed against his pet measure. We do not grudge governors, commanders-in-chief, members of council, and secretaries their happy life which is constantly cheered by the cry "To-morrow to fresh woods and pastures new," but we think the practice ought not to be abused. Great care should be taken that the cost to the State should be a minimum. If æsthetic governors insist on having silk hangings and artistic furniture in their chalets, the day may come when public opinion at home and India will demand that the annual migration to cool mountains be stopped.—Times of India.

MR. SETON-KARR ON THE TENANCY BILL.

MR. W. SETON-KARR has published another letter in the Times on the Bengal Tenancy Bill. It is satisfactory to find that he is in reality one of the strongest opponents of many of the most objectionable clauses of the Bill. Ostensibly he appears as a prophet, come to bless Israel, and to promote the passing of the Bill; but the spirit carries him away, and he proceeds to curse both root and branch with a vehemence that will astonish some of his readers. When he comes to the chapter in the Bill on Improvements and Compensations, his indignation boils over. He writes thus:—

"The whole of this chapter of six sections with illustrations is based on a complete and miserable ignorance of the present custom of the country, and of the respective parts taken by zemindars and ryots in what we should call improvements. It is difficult to believe that it can have the support of any one person, official or unofficial, merchant, planter, zemindar, or substantial ryot, who has ever resided or worked in the interior of the country. It is the mere craze of the philosopher of the Cabinet, and the pundit of the desk."

If this language is found in the mouth of one of the avowed supporters of the Bill, it certainly provides a strong argument in favour of those opponents of the Bill, who have pleaded so urgently, but hitherto so ineffectually, for further inquiry and impartial discussion of the numerous changes which it is proposed to make in the ancient land law and customs of the country. Mr. Seton-Karr objects to those critics who have urged that the Bill is being hurried on "precipitately," and he says that the Bill, as we now have it, "is the outcome of two years of incessant agitation, of summary measures adopted as palliatives, of lengthy correspondence between the Government of India, the local government, and the district officers, of the labours of a Rent Commission, composed of English and native gentleman of marked ability and familiarity with the subject, of a portentous Blue-book, and of a separate Draft Act."

This rhetorical accumulation of grandiloquent verbiage is put forth by Mr. Seton-Karr as "affording good and sufficient reason for at once passing the Bill into law." And yet it would seem from Mr. Seton-Karr's own admission that all these legislative preparations and labours have now been marred and disfigured by the touch of "some crazy philosopher of the Cabinet, or some unknown pundit of the desk."

It is satisfactory to observe that Mr. Seton-Kerr is equally opposed to the proposed alteration of the existing law regarding ryotee and khamar land. The chapter on this subject is, he tells us, a notable specimen of the new craze for legislation as a remedy for every wrong. Ever since the Permanent Settlement, all waste or deserted lands belong to, or revert under the universal law of the country to the zemindar, who may convert them into a park or a garden, or send his servants to cultivate or establish new ryots on such plots. After all the alleged misappropriation of the ryotee lands, it is admitted that three-fourths of the lands in Behar are still in the hands of the tenantry. "I contend," says Mr. Seton-Karr, "that if zemindars like, as lands drop in, from death or famine, to cultivate by hired labour, they ought to be allowed to do so. Hitherto the zemindar has been blamed for not taking the lead in the improvement of agriculture. He has not been the ideal superior landlord whom Lord Cornwallis had in view. The Indian Government seems to have made up its mind that he shall have no chance of ever becoming one. A provision of this kind may not have a wide influence on the state of agriculture or on the condition of the peasants, but it is exquisitely irritating to the superior landlord, and is in reality a confession of the weakness of the administration."

If we turn to the question of the occupancy right, we find that Mr. Seton-Karr is by no means a friendly critic on the Bill. He says that the chapter shows more knowledge of the subject, but the Bill errs by attempting far too much. "The aim of legislation should be to define the substantial jote-dar or ryot, as clearly as possible, and to confirm him in his occupancy rights. The aim of the Bill seems to be to extend the privilege to every ryot, with very trivial exceptions, and to root to the soil the sub-tenant of a tenant who has neither intelligence nor capital, neither plough nor bullock, and who had much better be left to emigrate, or to work for wages, and to shift his residence under social and economic laws."

Regarding the power of the ryot to transfer or sell his land, Mr. Seton-Karr remarks that the provisions of the Bill are far too complicated and minute, and he concludes by saying that the law errs by its very excess, and by the idea which has taken hold of the legislative intellect that it is possible to produce by the sections and clauses of a law a complete era of prosperity, peace, and benevolence in Bengal and Behar. We have no further space for Mr. Seton-Karr's still severer strictures on other parts of the Bill, but we have quoted enough to show that he is one of the most determined opponents of the many mischievous provisions with which the Bill abounds.

THE BIRTHDAY HONOURS.

THE list of honours gazetted on Her Majesty's Birthday is more remarkable for what it does not contain than for what it does. The nominations to the Orders of the Star of India and the Indian Empire are for the most part unexceptionable; and they certainly err on the side of niggardliness rather than on that of profusion. No one will doubt that Mr. Croft, whose name heads the lists of C.I.E.'s has richly deserved that decoration, both by his services on the Education Commission, and on account of the remarkable impetus which has been given to the cause of primary education in Bengal by his exertions. The only doubt is, whether he ought not to have had the senior Order; but the same doubt will always apply to every satisfactory nomination to the Indian Empire—and as a matter of fact, there is now practically no difference in value between the two Orders. Mr. Hunter, being already a C.I.E., has well earned the additional distinction of C.S.I., by his letters to the Times—though the addition seems rather futile, except for purposes of personal adornment. We are exceedingly glad to observe the names of that worthy Calcutta magnate, Rai Bahadur Kanai Lal De, and that distinguished Orientalist, Mr. Edward Thomas—late of Bengal Civil Service, and now of the Athenæum Club—among those whose “services have merited the Royal favour.” It is difficult to understand on what principle the C.I.E., has been allotted to Captain Carew, of the Indian Navy, and to Colonel Stewart of frontier fame, while the C.S.I., goes to Colonel Murray of the Telegraphs. But in each of these cases the honours are deserved; and it has long been evident that Lord Ripon has entirely thrown over the theory on which the junior Indian Order was founded in 1877.

But the first thought that will occur to every Anglo-Indian on reading the list of honours will be one of surprise that no K.C.S.I.'s are gazetted. And we venture to say that the second thought, in the great majority of cases, will be one of pity and contempt for the miserably mean motive that has obviously dictated this omission. It was beforehand pretty clear that, if Mr. Rivers Thompson was not made a Knight Commander of the Star of India, no one else could be raised to that dignity; even the present Government, to whom most things are possible, has not attained that height of shamelessness. But the feminine spite, which seems to be the most marked characteristic of Lord Ripon's mind, has not been able to forget the part borne by Mr. Thompson in the defeat of the Ilbert Bill. That part rendered nugatory all the Garbled Telegrams and the rest of the peculiar strategy of the Viceroy and Mr. Ilbert; and it has undoubtedly made the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal the most popular and respected of living Anglo-Indians—but it has, for the present at least, lost him the honour of knighthood.

If it were not for the lamented death of Sir Edward Clive Bayley, K.C.S.I., only a very short time ago, we should probably be told that there were no vacancies in the Second Class of the Order of the Star of India. As it is, it is difficult to conceive what excuse will be offered for one of the most flagrant breaches of the convenances of Indian official life that has occurred, even under the present Administration.

A proposal by His Excellency the Commander in Chief to attach two mountain 7-pounder guns, of 150lb. weight, to the native regiments at Kohima, Shillong, and Debrugarh, has been approved by the Government of India, and orders have been issued accordingly. A native officer and a sufficient number of non-commissioned officers and men of each regiment for the working of the guns are to be taught by experienced Artillery drill instructors, who will be detached for this purpose.

HOME NEWS.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 30,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers, were received on May 21, at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were :—In bills on Calcutta, Rs. 20,000; on Bombay, Rs. 10,000; and on Madras, Rs. 2,00,000, the average rate in all three cases being 1s. 7.75d.; in telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 7,20,000, average rate 1s. 7.896d.; on Bombay, Rs. 21,60,000, average rate 1s. 7.898d.; and on Madras, Rs. 1,20,000, average rate 1s. 7.875d.—or a total of Rs. 32,30,000. Tenders for bills on all Presidencies at 1s. 7.75d. will receive in full, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 7.75d. 40 per cent., and above in full. Subsequently four lakhs of transfers were sold at 1s. 7.15-16d., two being allotted on Bombay and two on Madras. Between April 1, and on May 20, remittances for Rs. 3,08,78,500 were disposed of, realising £2,548,812.

BENGAL AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY (LIMITED).—The second ordinary general meeting of this company was held on Wednesday at the Guildhall Tavern. Lieutenant General C. H. Dickens, R.A., C.S.I., presided, and in moving the adoption of the report observed that in the balance-sheet the amount of £293,000 appeared for permanent way, materials, engines, &c., but when the further accounts were received this amount would be diminished. With regard to the open line of 71 miles, Mr. Izat, their chief engineer, had written to them intimating that if the open lines paid the working expenses to the end of the rains they would do very well, and that after the rains they would have a very good traffic. They had received a telegram that morning announcing that the number of miles laid, stated at 112 in the report, was now 126, and that 15 more miles had been laid from Mankapur towards Butee. There were now only 60 miles to be laid of the line which was in progress. The Byran Ghat branch was not commenced, and they had received information that the Government were willing to let them postpone it, and to construct a line Nepaulgunj, on the Nepaul frontier. The Benares branch was at present suspended, and they had asked the Government to permit them to postpone it altogether until the traffic of the remainder of the line had developed. They had received unofficial information that the Government were willing to acquiesce in this request. If that were so they would be in a position to have finished everything by the end of the year for £6 a share, including the next call. That, however, would not include the Nepaulgunj branch. If the traffic developed as they hoped, they would then be able to go on with any further works they decided on, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, by means of debentures, and they hoped to call up no more than £6 or £6 10s. a share. Mr. D. T. Robertson having seconded the motion, the chairman stated, in answer to remarks of Messrs. Kimber and Cazenove, that if they could see a prospect of obtaining a Government guarantee of 3½ per cent. on the debentures they might issue they would certainly avail themselves of it.—The motion was carried unanimously, and the directors and auditors were subsequently re-elected.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—The half-yearly report of this company shows a gross revenue of £240,731, against £397,419; a working expenditure of £117,092, against £126,273; and a net revenue of £123,639, as compared with £241,146. The number of passengers carried rose from 1,096,535 in the second half year of 1882 to 1,393,950, there being an increase of as many as 270,000 in the number of fourth-class travellers. The quantity of merchandise carried fell from 294,478 to 201,925 tons, the decrease in the gross revenue derived from the carriage of jute alone having amounted to £136,537. Out of the available surplus, which amounts to £17,857, the directors recommend an interim dividend of 10s. per £100 stock, or 3 per cent. for the half-year.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.—The Select Committee on Indian Railways, which has been conducting its inquiry under the presidency of Mr. Baxter, has adjourned to the 10th of June, and it is expected that the Committee will be able to present its report within a month from that date.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

TUESDAY.—No movement has occurred in the Silver Market to alter its position in any way. Bars and Mexican dollars are again quoted at 50½d. and 49½d. per ounce respectively, and business has been limited in both commodities. A firmer tendency has marked the exchange advices received from India. In Calcutta the current rate for telegraphic transfers is 1s. 7 13-16d., but some reports from Bombay, where money is still very dear, say that the rate has advanced to 1s. 7½d. Rupee paper has again been depressed, stock having been brought to market. The Four-and-a-Half per Cents. have fallen to 83 3/8, and the Four per Cents. to 81 1/4 81½. Ten lakhs of telegraphic transfers have been sold by the India Council to-day, two being allotted on Calcutta, and eight on Bombay. The price obtained was 1s. 7½d. per rupee, showing an advance of 1-32d.

WEDNESDAY.—In consequence of the firmness of Indian exchange rates a small amount of bar silver was sold this morning at 50 15-16d. There has been no business in Mexican dollars, the price of which remains at 49½d. per ounce. The telegraphic transfer rates are now quoted at 1s. 7 27-32d. in Calcutta, and 1s. 7½d. in Bombay, while the Shanghai rate for four months' bills has advanced to 5s. 2d. per tael. Rupee Paper has been steadier and closed at 83 1/4 83½ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 81 1/4 81½ for the Four per Cents.

THURSDAY.—Bar silver is still wanted for India at 50 15-16d. per ounce, but very little business can be done while the available supplies keep as small as they are at present. Mexican dollars are again quoted at 49½d., but there seems to have been hardly any transactions in them. Indian telegraphic transfer rates are firm at 1s. 7½d., the current rates for four months' bills in China centres being 3s. 8½d. in Hongkong and 5s. 2d. in Shanghai. Rupee Paper has advanced 1/4 to-day, and closed at 83 1/4 83½ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 81 1/4 81½ for the Four per Cents.

FRIDAY.—Exchange rates from India are rather easier at 1s. 7 27-32d. in Calcutta and 1s. 7½d. in Bombay, and the demand for bar silver is not quite so strong as it was, although 50 15-16d. per ounce is still the quotation, as no fresh arrivals have come to hand and none are expected for a few days. The market is, however, certainly weaker, for at the close some small amounts which had been offered were not sold. Mexican dollars are again quoted at 49½d. per ounce but this price is almost nominal. China exchange rates are unaltered. Rupee paper is firmer at 83 1/4 83½ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 81 1/4 82 for the Four per Cents.

MONDAY.—The price of bar silver, although weak, is unaltered at 50 15-16d. per ounce, owing to the smallness of the amounts which are actually on the market. Mexican dollars are again quoted at 49½d., but this price is little more than nominal. Indian rates for telegraphic transfers are dull at 1s. 7 13-16d. in Calcutta, and 1s. 7 27-32 in Bombay; China exchange rates being unaltered at 3s. 8½d., in Hongkong, and 5s. 2d. in Shanghai. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper has been in greater demand to-day, and closed at 83 1/4 84, the Four per Cents. remaining at 81 1/4 81½.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE RUSSIANS IN CENTRAL ASIA.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he could state how many miles the Russian forces had advanced from the Caspian towards India since Her Majesty's present Ministers came into office.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE said the hon. member would see that the question as it stood was of rather a vague character, but he would be glad to give all the information he could, if the hon. member would put the question in a little clearer form on Thursday.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT, although he did not admit that the question was not a perfectly plain one, gave notice that he would on Thursday ask the noble lord whether he could inform the House how many miles the Russian forces had advanced from the Caspian towards the frontier of India during the period that the present Government had been in power.

Mr. MACFARLANE gave notice that when the hon. member put his question he would ask the noble lord whether at the same time he could inform the House of the number of miles advanced by Russia during the period of office of the late Government. (Cheers and laughter.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

RUSSIAN ADVANCE IN ASIA.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he could state how many miles the Russian forces had advanced from the Caspian towards India (i.e. from Krasnovodsk by road to Sarakhs) since Her Majesty's present Ministers came into office.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE: The Russian advance from Krasnovodsk had reached Kizil Arvat, a distance of 144 miles, in December, 1870. It ceased till 1877, when it was resumed. In 1879 it had reached Dengel Tepe, a total distance of 254 miles. Since then it had been continued as far as Baba Durmaz, a distance of about 375 miles.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked whether one of the Sarakhs was not now in possession of a Russian force.

Mr. MACFARLANE said that when notice was given of the hon. member's question he had himself given notice that he would at the same time ask the noble lord whether he could state the comparative acquisitions of territory by Russia during the respective periods when the late Government and the present Government were in office. Was the noble lord now in a position to make such a statement, including the acquisition of the port of Batoum and other territory in Armenia?

Lord E. FITZMAURICE repeated the substance of the answer he had given to the hon. member for Eye. With reference to the question of the hon. member for Carlisle, he had framed his previous answer so as to cover both the periods mentioned.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT gave notice that he would call attention to the extraordinary inaccuracy of the noble lord's answer in reference to the advance of Russia.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

In reply to Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. J. K. CROSS said: From 1855 to 1859 inclusive twenty-three was the limit of age for the examination of natives for the Indian Civil Service. During these years no native of India was selected. From 1860 to 1865 inclusive twenty-two was the limit. During that period one native was selected. From 1866 to 1878 inclusive twenty-one was the limit of age. Thirteen competitive examinations were held in those years, and ten natives of India were selected. From 1878 to 1883 inclusive nineteen was the limit, and during this period one native of India was selected. The limit now (under an alteration, taking place last year for the first time) is practically nineteen and a-half; for the examination takes place in June, and what the rule requires is that the candidate should not be over nineteen on Jan. 1 preceding the examination. The hon. member asks whether Government was informed that if the age of examination was fixed sufficiently early it would practically exclude natives. The Government of India, in a letter of May 2, 1878, written some time after it had been decided to reduce the age to nineteen, expressed the opinion that "the recent reduction of the standard of age for the competitive examination will practically render the competition of natives educated in their own country a matter of exceptional difficulty." The assumption that the limitation of age to nineteen years prevents the appointment of natives is hardly borne out by the facts. Twelve natives altogether have entered the Covenanted Civil Service, One, aged twenty, was selected in 1863; four, three aged twenty and one nineteen, were selected in 1869; one, aged nineteen, was selected in 1870; one, aged twenty, was selected in 1871; one, aged twenty, was selected in 1873; two, aged eighteen and seventeen respectively were selected in 1874; one, aged nineteen, was selected in 1877; one, aged seventeen, was selected in 1882. Of this total eleven were selected when the limit was twenty-one or upwards. Of these six were twenty when they competed, three were nineteen, one was eighteen, and one was only seventeen; and the one successful candidate since 1878 was only seventeen. The establishment of the "Statutory" Civil Service, to which natives are appointed in India in the proportion of one to every six selected by competition in England, must be taken into account in estimating the effect of the present arrangements. The Government has no present intention of making any alteration in the rule as to the limit of age.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

TUESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—To-day's sale of 24,560 packages passed very flatly, nearly 20,000 packages were Congous, and prices all round went in favour of buyers. The private contract market remains without improvement. The Indian sales of 4,227 packages comprised a large proportion of December and January's imports and second hand teas, which sold slowly and at a considerable decline in prices; the few new parcels offered realised firm rates. At the China auctions 24,760 packages sold "without reserve," 19,000 packages being Congou. Prices showed great weakness all round, the drop in first and second crop black leaf being in many instances $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 1d. against last Tuesday's auction quotations.

SUGAR.—The market has been firmer since Friday. Beet advanced 6d., but the tone is again quiet. By private contract on the spot, 400 to 500 tons Native Penang, at 9s. to 10s.; 10,000 bags Cane Jagghery, at 10s. 3d. to 10s. 6d.; part at 9s. 6d.; 100 tons cane to arrive, at 11s. 3d. to 11s. 6d. Since last Friday a cargo of 221 hogsheads, 40 tierces, 96 barrels Antigua at 15s. for the United Kingdom, and one of 400 tons Java, at 18s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. for the Clyde. To-day one of 381 casks, 15 tierces, 50 barrels Trinidad, for the United Kingdom, at 13s. 9d. The business in West India on the spot is only 29 casks; refined rather better generally.

COFFEE.—East Indian by auction went at irregular prices, better kinds of Mysore very firm, ranging from 89s. to 106s. 6d. for medium, to 109s. and 118s. for bold; other grades, 67s. to 79. for medium, and 81s. to 95s. for bold; Coorg, &c., medium to bold, 61s. to 79s.—small in proportion; 114 casks, 64 barrels, and bag Plantation Ceylon, low to fine middling, 61s. to 78s.; bold, 83s. to 86s.; 767 packages Mocha, part sold, 78s. to 80s. 6d. per cwt.

COCOA.—Fair demand, rather easier rates; 1,613 bags Trinidad sold, mixed grey to fine, 75s. to 86s. 6d.; 1,107 bags Grenada, low to common, out of condition to good, 65s. to 78s. 6d.; 181 bags Ceylon sold well, bold, 80s. to 82s.; middling, 75s. to 77s. 6d.; 1,100 bags foreign withdrawn or bought in.

PEPPER.—Several sales have been made in white at 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Singapore, 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Penang.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—At the Indian sales, 2,905 packages passed the hammer, the greater portion being sold at previous values. About 300 packages Ceylon teas realised very full prices. In China tea, only about 600 packages green teas sold, without reserve, at auction, at about last Monday's quotations. The Glenogle, with the first shipment of new season's China tea, is reported to have passed Woosong on the evening of the 20th inst., which, all going well, will make her due here on the 26th or 27th of June.

SUGAR.—A dull market. The business to-day is 25 casks 100 barrels West India, and 100 tons native Penang at 9s. to 9s. 6d. Beet nominal. In the Clyde market a fair business done in the morning at yesterday's rates.

RUM.—120 puncheons Barbice sold at 1s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

COFFEE.—The public sales have gone without spirit, and in some cases at barely yesterday's rates for Plantation Ceylon and East India. Of the former, 398 casks 162 barrels and bags sold—low to good middling, 62s. to 70s.; fine middling to rather bold, 73s. to 78s.; bold, 85s. to 89s.; superior, 91s. to 96s. 14 cases 1,222 bags East Indian mostly sold, medium to bold, 62s. to 73s. 6d., small in proportion. Three tierces 437 barrels and bags Jamaica, greenish and grayish, 50s. to 58s. 6d.; coloury, 63s. to 65s. 159 half frizzles Mocha withdrawn. No change in Guatemala; 1,198 bags, chiefly sold—fine ordinary to middling, 48s. to 59s. 1,310 bags Costa Rica, part sold, mostly 54s. to 60s.; 89 bags Rio sold at 45s. to 46s. per cwt.

SPICES.—At the auctions Cochin ginger went generally 3s. dearer, 1,230 packages mostly sold—small to medium rough, 43s. to 45s.; good, 46s. to 47s. 6d.; part scraped small to medium, 54s. 6d. to 55s. 6d.; bolder, 58s. 6d. to 62s.; washed, 43s. to 45s. 16 bags African, 45s. 367 packages Jamaica, common to medium, 54s. to 67s.; fair to good, 72s. to 80s. Small nutmegs at 1s. 8d. to 1s. 9d. rather easier; other grades steady, 2s. 5d. to 3s. 4d. 103 packages Eastern, about half sold; and 43 packages West Indian brought 1s. 6d. to 2s. 2d. 14 mace sold—Eastern, 1s. 2d. to 1s. 3d.; West Indian, 1s. 4d. to 1s. 8d. Pepper quiet; 119 bags Singapore white, part sold, 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. 83 bags black Allepy, 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and 954 bags Penang, one lot at 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., remainder bought in, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Pimento fairly steady; 1,800 bags, a third sold, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. for ordinary to good fair. Cloves quiet, 200 bags Zanzibar withdrawn, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. being bid. 11 cases Penang sold, 1s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 1s. 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. 126 bales Zanzibar stems, 1d. to 1 1-16d. per lb. 500 boxes cassea lignea bought, 27s. 6d. per cwt.

SAGO.—In auction 1,860 bags small grain, two-thirds sold at 11s. 6d. to 12s. 367 bags medium and large bought in, 14s.; 177 bags Sarawak flour sold, 9s. 9d.; and of 800 bags pearl tapioca a few lots seed, 13s. 3d. for fine; medium bought in 12s. 3d. per cwt. 2,698 bags flake, about one-fourth sold. Singapore, 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb.

RICE.—There have not been any sales reported.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that the market for imported produce are again dull, with large supplies. At the public sales of coffee prices show weakness. To-day many parcels were bought in. Since the 16th inst. Plantation Ceylon has fallen 1s. to 2s., and East India about the same, excepting for fine qualities. A few lots fine Mysore realised high prices. Guatemala and other Central American descriptions are unsettled. The deliveries here continue large, without making any impression on the stock, which still exceeds those of previous years. Brazil has been quiet, and quotations nominally unchanged; but the Havre and New York markets are lower. Rice rather easier. The market for cane sugar is depressed, and beet has sold at irregular prices. Since last week sales are reported at some recovery on the rates then current; but a reaction afterwards occurred, and the improvement is not supported. Business in China tea has been chiefly restricted to the public sales, and Congous are again lower. Indian teas have sold with irregularity, common grades being rather easier, good to fine firm. A few parcels Ceylon[cocoa have brought last week's rates. There have been very large sales of cinchona, at which Ceylon realised full quotations. The public sales of cinnamon on the 26th inst. will be about 1,000 bales. Black and white pepper maintain the recent advance. Cochin ginger is 2s. to 3s. per cwt. dearer. Cloves have been dull, with sellers of Penang at lower rates.

TEA.—From Messrs. Hawes and Hertz's fortnightly China report. —Black leafs from 6d. to 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. are little changed; from 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to $\frac{3}{4}$ d. easier; and from 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., including first and second crop Ningchows, Onfaas, and Keemuns, show a fall of $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 2d. per lb. for the fortnight. Two fine parcels of Ningchow have been closed at 1s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. and 1s. 4d. per lb., showing a reduction of 1d. per lb. Red leafs have again been offered in large quantities. First crop Chingwos, Panyongs, and Soomooos are $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 1d. lower, at from 7d. to 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb., showing wonderful value. Paklings, first and second crop, in mats, passed very low at 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 10d. per lb. New makes have been mostly catalogued as they arrived, and sold slowly, with a drooping tendency, at from 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. per lb. Green teas have been more freely printed, and show easier rates, especially for the finer lines of Ping Suey Young Hysons. More business has been done for Russia; several chops have been taken of first crop Ningchows from about 10d., and one fine parcel at 1s. 4d. per lb., red leafs also in small quantities at from 6d. to 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. Old teas.—Red leafs continue to be absorbed slowly by the trade and export at 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb., and black leafs from 6d. to 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb.

SUGAR.—The market has been very flat, and no sales reported in West India or other cane sugar. In the Clyde market pieces have declined 3d. per cwt. Beet is again lower. M. Bertrand Silz has sent out the following report dated Paris, May 21:—"Like the foreign markets ours have remained firm and steady during the last few days. Forward delivery continues, however, to be much offered. For this reason its value draws still nearer to the prompt quotation. The recent heavy rains have assisted the growth of the roots, and brought forward settlers of October-January deliveries at a reduction in prices of 50 centimes per 100 kilos (about 3d. per cwt.)."

COFFEE.—Very large supplies were offered by auction to-day, but many parcels had to be withdrawn as the market showed a quiet tone. Plantation sold at 1s. decline, except for good to fine colory: part of the East India found buyers at 1s. to 2s. reduction—of the former, 462 casks, 206 barrels and bags sold—common to middling, 61s. to 66s.; good to fine middling, 66s. to 74s. 6d.; bold, 82s. to 91s. 6d.—522 cases, 4,025 bags East India chiefly sold—medium, 6s. to 65s.; bold, 76s. to 85s. 6d.; Mysore, 82s. 6d. to 92s. 6d.; 14 casks, 11 barrels Jamaica sold, 44s. 6d. to 56s. 6d.; 18 half frizzles Mocha, at 18s. 6d.; of 1,026 bags Guatemala and 3,281 bags Costa only a moderate portion sold, the former at 46s. to 50s. for foxey to fine ordinary, and 54s. to 55s. for low middling—the latter to 45s. to 51s. for mixed to fine ordinary, and 53s. to 62s. for low to good middling.

BLACK PEPPER is dull with a downward tendency.

RICE is dull and cargoes easier.

The Times of India says:—"The Hon. W. W. Hunter has, we are all aware, an encyclopaedic mind, but what on earth does he know about Indian railways? A few days ago we heard that he was going home on leave. Now our Simla correspondent tells us he is going home officially to give evidence before the Select Committee. This easy transition from Popular Education to the Ilbert Bill, from the Ilbert Bill to Church Disestablishment, from Church Disestablishment to Railway Finance, is a trifle startling. 'Still,' as in the old days, 'the wonder grew that one small head could carry all he knew.'"

The Times of India says:—"We hear that the movement for the formation of Naval Artillery Volunteer Corps has already met with a very fair amount of success. Sufficient names of intending members have been enrolled to form half a battery or four guns' crews, and many more have been promised. One gentleman has undertaken to raise twenty-five men himself, so it will be seen there is a good prospect of the scheme being carried out. It is proposed to hold a meeting shortly to make arrangements for establishing the corps at an early date. In another column we publish a letter which it is proposed to send to Government, asking for the necessary sanction. It is suggested that the Calcutta and Bombay Corps should be amalgamated."

Furlough to Europe for one year and one hundred and twenty-six days has been granted to Colonel Ball, Commandant of the 1st Belooch Regiment (27th N.I.).

COURT-MARTIAL.—The following extract from the confirmed proceedings of a District Court-Martial held at Secunderabad on April 25 has been published for information. No. 13,716; Driver John Hefford, D 1st R.A., was arraigned upon the following charge:—"Charge—Using insubordinate language to his superior officer, in that he, at Secunderabad on April 7, 1884, said to Corporal J. J. Blackwood, C 1st R.A., his superior officer, when warned by him for riding drill, 'I am not going for you; the Riding Master is here to warn me for extra riding drill. I am not going to be ——— about by him,' or words to that effect. Finding—Guilty of the charge. Sentence—Imprisonment with hard labour for eighty four days. Confirmation—I confirm the finding and sentence. (Signed) G. A. Arbuthnot, Colonel 3rd Light Cavalry, Commanding E.B. Force.—Secunderabad, April 25, 1884.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cocker's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native mede-cines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months after-

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 3, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay May 15; Madras and Allahabad, April 14; Calcutta April 13.

THE Journal of the National Indian Association for June contains a good report of a recent debate on "Child Marriage in India and its Remedy," which took place in Exeter Hall under the auspices of the Association. The lecturer was Mr. Narendra Nath Mitra; and the debate derives especial interest from the fact that—as befitted the delicate social nature of the problem discussed—it was carried on almost entirely by natives of India. We are glad to see that most of these gentlemen, including Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose, wisely deprecated any State interference with social customs. Mr. Mitra would like to see the Government step in to abolish early marriages and distinctions of caste; but what would he say if the Government were to step in to enforce distinctions of caste? He must be well aware that the vast majority of his fellow-countrymen at the present moment think that those distinctions ought to be enforced, or at any rate deserve respectful consideration; and it is surely not difficult to see that, however confident one may be of the correctness of one's own opinion, it is a little absurd to expect Government to enforce that opinion under such circumstances.

THE Pioneer says:—

"Persons tell us not to attribute motives, and it would be well to remember this when Lord Ripon or the Nizam is in the case. It is generally supposed that when the Governor General went to Hyderabad to install the Nizam, his main object was to assert, once and for all, the paramount power of the Queen. Sir Salar Jung himself once virtually resisted this claim, when he refused to send the Nizam to meet the Prince of Wales. But Lord Lytton's summons to the Delhi assemblage was obeyed, and the recent installation at the hands of the Governor General himself was thought to be the final crowning of the edifice. The young Nizam, too, was believed to have assented to the investiture, because he hoped by a show of civility and deference to bring about the appointment of a favourite companion as Prime Minister, a hope that was duly realised. It has, however, been left to the wife of the Governor of Madras to give a clue to the real reason of Lord Ripon's journey to Hyderabad. This is what Mrs. Grant Duff says in an article in Macmillan's Magazine:—'I was informed by an English lady, who had unusual opportunities of seeing and knowing Mahomedans, that much indignation had been roused amongst them by the disloyal and unpatriotic tone recently shown towards the English Government by some of the unofficial Anglo-Indians in Calcutta, and that they were peculiarly anxious all over India to evince a respectful and loyal feeling.' Reading between the lines we now see that the courtesies exchanged between the Governor General and the Nizam were mainly intended as a rebuff to the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, and we are expected to confess that the Nizam's loyalty contrasts finely with the seditious attitude of the leaders of the Opposition. What a subject for a grand historical picture! The Viceroy would be sitting, with a half-moody, half-frightened air on his throne in Government House listening to the yells, borne faintly along the gale, of the insurgent Britons in the Town Hall, while the faithful young Nizam implores him to fly for refuge and consolation to the loyal Mahomedans of the Deccan. The companion painting would of course represent Lord Ripon at Hyderabad, with face now radiant with courtly grace, buckling on the Nizam's sword the wrong way."

We learn from the Civil and Military Gazette that Mrs. Grant Duff is taking with her to England two cases containing Indian trophies in the shape of battleaxe bows and arrows, and other instruments of war used by Rumpa and other hill tribes in the Northern Circars, as also a complete dress of a Chief, consisting of head-dress with feathers, a breast plate of buffalo hide, &c.

THE Madras Mail says:—"We learn from the official shipping report that 'H.E. the Hon. Mrs. Grant Duff' left Madras on April 29, for London, by the Kaiser-i-Hind. This is really 'too too.' We shall next be told that the Honourable and Rev. Mrs. Browne has accompanied the Archdeacon to church; that the Honourable Mrs. Justice Hutchins and the Honourable Mrs. Surgeon General Cornish have reached Ootacamund in safety, and that Mrs. Municipal President Arundel intends to follow them at an early date; and that Mrs. Deputy Assistant Commissary General Clark Kennedy will shortly visit the Puleys."

We take the following items of intelligence regarding our Indian visitors in this country from the June number of the Journal of the National Indian Association:—

"Mr. Shapurji Kavasji Sanjana (Inner Temple) was called to the Bar on May 8th. In the recent Examination for the Lincoln's Inn Scholarships in Common Law, the Benchers awarded the first prize of one hundred guineas (Common Law, including Criminal Law) to Mr. Satyendra P. Sinha. Mr. S. P. Sinha had a few months before received a prize of £50 in Roman Law, Jurisprudence, Constitutional Law, and Legal History. At the last Examination held at the Inns of Court, the Council of Legal Education awarded to Mr. Narendra Natha Mitra a certificate that he had satisfactorily passed a Public Examination. The following passed a satisfactory Examination in Roman Law:—Mr. Charles Golaknath (Inner Temple) and Mr. Panruti Vallam Ramaswami Raju (Inner Temple). On the Presentation Day of the University of London, May 14, Mr. Jogodesh Chunder Bose, B.A. Cambridge, received his B.Sc. Diploma, Pass and Honours (4th in Experimental Physics). Mr. Kaikhoseo N. Bahadurji and Mr. Aaron C. Dutt have passed the Primary Examination in Anatomy and Physiology of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. Pundit Bishan Narayan Dar and Sheikh Omar Bakhsh have joined the Middle Temple. Mr. A. B. Master has been elected a Foreign Member of the Society of Telegraph Engineers. Arrivals—Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Cama, from Bombay; Mr. Shapurjee (Bombay Foundry and Iron Works) and Mr. P. B. Jejeebhoy, from Bombay, for study in the working of iron; Pundit Bishan Narayan Dar, from Oude; Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, from the North West Provinces; Mr. James Tarini Churn Mitter, from Calcutta, for the study of Medicine; Mr. Aurung Shah, from Shillong, for the study of Medicine; Dr. Charles H. F. Underwood, from Bombay; Mr. Nanda Lal Banerjee, of Allahabad, for the study of Medicine. Departure—Mr. S. K. Sanjana, for Bombay."

THE Indian Statesman—the Radical journal par excellence of India—thus frankly speaks of the way India is treated by the present Radical Government:—

"With a Ministry in power that would not tolerate even 3½ per cent. duties being levied upon English piece-goods in this country, we find it compelling the Government of India to borrow the money required for the extension of our railways, upon terms of the most ruinous wastefulness. As to the principle of free trade being permitted to guide us, we are forced by the Ministry to borrow in a market that has no capital to lend us, while all other Governments in the world are permitted to borrow in the home market as freely as they please. India is the one country of the world that our Liberal Ministry does not allow to borrow in London. We do not require it to guarantee our loans—we ask only permission to borrow—a permission which is freely given to all other lands. And it is refused. We are compelled by the pure despotism of force to borrow on terms that are absolutely ruinous. The truth ought to be spoken out upon this subject. It is purely selfish despotism that refuses to allow this country to borrow in England and compels it to borrow in India, at a waste which the Government itself allows to be of 14 per cent., but that is really 30 per cent., as we have repeatedly shown. On the one hand, we are not permitted to levy the most trifling duties upon English goods, and on the other, we are the one country in the world against which Parliament has closed the great European money market. If we want money for our railways, we are cynically told to find it for ourselves, though it cost us 30 per cent. waste to do so. The time has come for plain speaking, for the national selfishness we show towards India is simply loathsome. We refuse to guarantee her debt—a misfortune which she might survive—but we cap that by refusing to allow her to enter the European money market. It is sheer tyranny and despotism such as the world has never before seen, and it calls for very plain speaking indeed."

THE York Herald says:—

"A rumour is current at the clubs that the Governorship of Madras will shortly be vacated by the resignation of Mr. Grant Duff. So far as I can gather, the only foundation for this report is that Mr. Grant Duff has incurred the displeasure of some of his political opponents in India, who are characteristically clamouring for his removal from office."

THE Madras Chamber of Commerce is at variance with the Local Government in regard to the payment of harbour dues. The harbour is at present in an incomplete state, and it therefore seems premature to demand the full scale of dues. The Chamber protests against such an imposition, and remarks that if the harbour had been constructed as a private speculation it would probably seem to Government unreasonable to sanction the levying of full dues, when the advantages of a completed harbour are unobtainable. The Chamber hopes that early orders for the resumption of the works, which have now been in abeyance for two years and four months, will be received and promptly acted upon, but in the meantime it begs the Government to reconsider the intention of raising a revenue as though the harbour had become an accomplished fact. This view of the matter does not, however, commend itself to the Government, and the Chamber is reminded that up to the present the trade has enjoyed free of all charge the advantages secured to it by the present work, and that as it is absolutely necessary, in view of the prosecution of the work, that funds should be provided to meet the interest on the outlay, past and prospective, the proposal to postpone any longer the collection of dues cannot be entertained.

At a conversazione of the London Artistic and Literary Society in St. James's Hall, last Friday, the Rajah Rampal Sing and Mr. Ali Hamid Khan, rather took their audience by surprise, by introducing "burning questions" into their lectures. Having sketched, with great lucidity, the origin and progress of Hinduism the Rajah proceeded to argue that, as "India had conquered herself," and had only been defrauded of her independence by the British, and not conquered," under the magnanimous rule of Lord Ripon, a time might come, when India might dispense with the services of her so-called conquerors, and the latter might retire with a good grace, and every mark of honour and esteem. Ali Hamid Khan followed, in similar strain, and demanded for the natives an equal share in all the high offices of State. At the conclusion of these lectures, the chairman, Major Laurence Archer, rose and thanked the speaker, but, we are glad to say, at the same time, disavowed any sympathy in the views expressed, or in the eulogiums passed upon the Viceroy.

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending May 16:—

"Lieut. A. H. Grove, 2nd Gloucester Regiment; Babu Gya Pershad, Banker of Allahabad; Mr. Nusserwanjee Chandabhoj, Civil Engineer, Bombay.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE reports on the State of the season and prospects of the crops for the week ending the 23rd ult. are as follows:—

"Rain has fallen generally in Bengal proper, Assam, Madras and Coorg, and there have been local showers usually accompanied by thunderstorms in most of the other provinces. Harvesting continues in the Madras Presidency, and the prospects of the standing crops are good. In Bombay Presidency the rabi harvest is over, except in three districts, and khari operations have commenced in parts. Some damage has been done to the rabi crops in Hyderabad by recent rain. In Berar the kharif is being sown. In Central India and Rajputana the crops have been gathered; the weather is warm and seasonable, and there have been slight showers at Abu and Ajmere. Harvesting is in progress in the Punjab; kharif sowings have also commenced in canal irrigated land in the Hissar district. In the North Western Provinces and Oudh easterly winds have prevailed during the week, and storms accompanied by rain and hail have occurred in several districts. The rabi harvest is over, and markets are generally well supplied. A scarcity of fodder is still felt in places, but the general condition of cattle is reported to be good. No rain fell in the Central Provinces, though the sky has occasionally been cloudy. Rabi crops are being threshed and winnowed, and land is being prepared for the kharif. In Bengal ploughing is in active progress in districts where rain has fallen. Rain is urgently needed in Behar and Chota Nagpore."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated June 1:—

"It is satisfactory to learn that the Ameer of Afghanistan has appointed Azimulla Khan, son of the Jamshedi chief Khan Agha, Governor of Panjdeb. This nomination will strengthen Afghan relations with the nomad tribes; and now that the Russians are established in Merv, Panjdeb has become a possession of great importance.

"The rumour that Russia has occupied Sarakhs is generally credited in this country, and it is universally recognised that this step is a much more serious menace to the peace of India than was the annexation of Merv. The Government is being urged on all sides to prepare for a struggle which is now looked upon as inevitable. As yet the authorities at Simla have made no sign beyond ordering the completion of the Quetta Railway; and have done nothing to show that they are awake to the gravity of the situation. Now that Russia is within easy striking distance of Afghanistan, and that India has lost what may be called the insularity of her position, there are at least three steps which, in the opinion of most Anglo Indians, are urgently required in order to insure the safety of the country—namely, first, the immediate completion of the Quetta Railway to Pishin, if not to Candahar, so as to render it possible to occupy the last-named town without delay; secondly, such an increase to the fighting strength of the European and native army as would enable the Government to despatch a strong corps d'armée beyond the frontier, and to mass another corps along the communications while retaining in India a force sufficient to preserve internal order; and, thirdly, the immediate reduction, if not the total disbandment of the armies of the native States—armies which serve no useful purpose, being kept up only to gratify the vanity of the native princes, and which in the event of a great foreign war, would be source of grave anxiety and danger.

"The Government of Bengal has addressed a long letter on the subject of the Rent Bill to all the Commissioners in the province. They are directed in the first place to institute local inquiries regarding the various points on which the Supreme Government desires further information. This done, every Commissioner is to hold a conference of all the collectors subordinate to him, and of such other officers as he may desire to consult. The Bill is to be discussed at this conference; and a report embodying the general opinion of the assembled officers is to be prepared and submitted to the Government. The Lieutenant Governor anticipates not only benefit from this inter-communication of ideas, but also a great lightening of the work of the Government in reviewing the reports. The most important points to be considered, and the manner in which the remarks submitted should be arranged are indicated at some length, but the Lieutenant Governor abstains from expressing any opinion of his own. All the reports are to be sent in by August 14.

"The official statement of receipts and payment at the civil treasuries for the first month of the current financial year shows that the closing cash balance was Rs.11,44,00,000, against a closing balance in April, 1883, of Rs.13,17,00,000. The civil revenue of the month was Rs.4,57,00,000, against Rs.4,24,00,000 in April, 1883. The improvement is chiefly in the items of the land revenue, opium, salt, and others. This year's opium crop will be one of the best ever gathered, and will go far to replenish the diminished reserves. The gross expenditure in last April was Rs.3,39,00,000, against Rs.2,79,00,000 during the same month of last year.

"Last Sunday morning Lieutenant Dupis, of the North Staffordshire Regiment, left Quetta on a shooting excursion, proceeding towards Mount Zerghun, which stands at some fourteen miles distance, and has not been heard of since. He was probably waylaid, as he went unattended, contrary to the published order forbidding officers to visit the neighbourhood without escort. Parties are scouring the country, hitherto without success, and a detachment of Rattray's Sikhs started on Tuesday to continue the search.

"A squadron of the 5th Punjab Cavalry has moved from Sibi to Gumbuz, north of Thull Chotiali, and is now entrenched as an outpost towards the passes leading to the Zhol valley, whence the Kakars lately raided.

"The last fight between the Ameer's troops and the Mongols occurred on April 23 in the Ghaling Pass. The Mongols were defeated, several villages were burnt, and a number of prisoners were taken, but the chief Sirdar escaped and is said to be now in the vicinity of Tirah: Sadus, brother of the Mir Asghar, was killed. The Mongol chief sent to Cabul has been dismissed by the Ameer, who makes the surrender of the Sirdars Hassan Khan, Faiz Mohamed, and Sadu a condition precedent to the granting of peace.

"The discontent among the trading classes at Cabul is said to be increasing, and trade is falling off. In consequence of the Amer's exactions, a number of Lohani traders have resolved to avoid Cabul in future on their way to Central Asia with Indian goods.

"According to despatches received from Akyab, it is estimated that 2,000 dwelling-houses were destroyed in the district by the recent cyclone, and that 6,000 more were injured. A large quantity of paddy was destroyed or damped. The loss of twenty-five lives is also reported from the interior. Several mills and warehouses in the town were unroofed. The ships Rossini and Loeh Linne, which were driven ashore, have been got off; but the Fiji and Alexander are still stranded, and the latter is expected to become a wreck. The Bostonvale, bound from Mauritius for Moulmein, which encountered the cyclone, was dismantled and driven up the bay, and now lies anchored and helpless at Akyab. An outbreak of sickness is feared, as the rains have commenced, the houses are unroofed, and the water is in a state of stagnation.

"A serious affray has occurred on board the Irrawaddy Flo-tilla Company's steamer Yunan, at Tsagine. The Woon of the district was a passenger, and some dispute having arisen between his followers and the steamer coolies, a fight took place, in which the Woon shot a coolie dead. The matter was compromised by the Woon paying compensation to the family of the man whom he had killed.

"Owing to the recent fires, there is great distress at Mandalay, and sickness is very prevalent.

"King Thebaw, acting under the advice of his mother and Ministers, has resolved to take a second wife in the person of the sister of his present Queen. The ceremony is expected to take place shortly, unless Queen Soopyalat succeeds in frustrating the scheme, as she did on a former occasion."

CORRESPONDENCE.

SAUSAR-DHARA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In the "Imperial Gazetteer of India," this singularly romantic cave, on the face of a wooded bluff in the Himalayas, about two miles from the station of Dehra, is described as a "grotto and place of pilgrimage," in Lat. 30° 21' N., Long. 78° 6' E., sacred to Mahadeva. "A waterfall rushes from a cleft in the rock [with] a grotto behind it, in which stalactites are found." Having myself visited and sketched the cave, I do not find the above description quite accurate. As a matter of fact, a streamlet, the source of which is much farther up in the mountain, separates into several rills which partly break in a shower over the entrance to the cave or grotto, and, partly, rush down on the exterior sides. There is no altar or image in the grotto, the entrance to which is divided by a single great stalactite, and to reach it one has to clamber up the precipitous side of the hill. The vegetation is dense, and the plants that grow on the "roof" of the grotto, along the margin of the streamlet, become encrusted with a deposit of lime (?) and in the course of time, assume the form of florid gothic pinnacles, &c. of surprising beauty. I broke off several of these, some of which were two feet long to ornament my bungalow at Dehra. There encrustations in their gradual stages of formation are very interesting from the leaf which shows its colour through the earlier deposit, when held up to the light to the dense mass, which might be mistaken for an exquisitely but irregularly sculptured stone.

Another grotto, about two miles off is formed in the centre of an isolated hill in the valley, by a stream having tunnelled its way right through. Here, there is a small image of Mahadeva. It is much more accessible than Sausar-Dhara, and goes by the name of "Tope Kesur Mahadeo." [I do not vouch for the spelling being correct.] It is a place of pilgrimage which, so far as I have been able to discover, Sausar-Dhara is not—and I lived some years close to both places. I ought, however to add, that, about half a mile from Sausar-Dhara, and in the valley, there is a small deserted shrine to Mahadeva—a small ruin about 10ft. square, the four walls of which only remain.

THE WATER SUPPLY OF CALCUTTA.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Municipal Commissioners was held at the Town Hall, on April 21, when besides the chairman, the following members were present:—

Moulvie Ahmed, Mr. Abdur Rahman, Mr. H. Andrews, Baboo Bejoy Kissen Dutt, Rev. Dr. K. M. Bannerjee, Baboo Doyal Chand Dutt, Coomar Dinendro Narayan Roy, Mr. E. D. Ezra, Moulvie Fuzul-Rahman, Baboo Gopall Lall Mitter, Mr. Hart, Mr. Hallett, Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dutt, Baboo Jodoo Lall Mullick, Mr. Jones, Baboo Kumud Kissen Mitter, Hon. Kristodas Pal, Dr. Kanye Lall Dey, Moulvie Kobiruddin Ahmed, Dr. Lal Madhub Mookerjee, Baboo Lall Baharry Bysack, Mr. Lodlie, Baboo Modhoo Soodun Dutt, Baboo Nobin Chunder Bose, Maharajah Norendro Krishno, Baboo Omirtonath Mitter, Mr. Peterson, Baboo Radharomon Mitter, Mr. H. M. Rustomjee, Dr. Stuart, Baboo Sreenath Chunder, Baboo Surendronath Doss, Baboo Sitanath Doss, Baboo Surendronath Banerjee, Moulvie Seraj-ul-Islam, Baboo Sreenath Dutt, Baboo Umakanto Sen, and Mr. Zemin.

Mr. Hallett, if he were not out of order, would ask whether they had a health officer at the present time.

The Chairman said they had at present Dr. Macleod, whose services would cease on the 30th April, and the chairman believed that he went home on the 1st May. The matter had been brought before the last Town Council, and they agreed to recommend that the existing arrangements be carried on, a temporary health officer being appointed, until the services of a permanent health officer could be obtained. On the 24th would be the quarterly meeting of the Town Council, and the matter was down for that day's proceedings; so that on that day, if the Commissioners should be so disposed, they would be in a position to make arrangements.

THE QUESTION OF THE WATER SUPPLY.

The Hon. Rai Kristodas Pal called attention to the deficient water supply at the present session, and moved that the Town Council be instructed to inquire into the necessary cause of it, and to provide the necessary relief. He said that the subject of his motion was now uppermost in the thoughts of all the inhabitants of the town of Calcutta. (Applause). There was not a part of the town in which the cry for water was not heard, and, he was obliged to confess that, with that cry, imprecations were hurled at the heads of the Municipal Commissioners of the town. The ratepayers complained that they paid the full rate demanded from them, but that they did not get the quantity of water they were entitled to, and they asked why under such circumstances they should be expected to pay the full rate. The question of deficient water supply was not new; it had been pressed upon the attention of the Commissioners from the time when the water supply was first provided for the town; because if the speaker recollected rightly, it was in 1871 that Mr. Clarke was called upon to consider the question of double supply, though at that time, the want was not so imminent. For the last five years the question of double supply had presented itself, and the Commissioners had been active and zealous in discussing it. It was sometimes said that the Commissioners lost a great deal of time in considering that question, and were therefore retarding the extension, the want of which they now felt so much. The speaker did not agree with those who thought that they lost too much time in deliberating over the matter. It was a question which involved an outlay of half a million of pounds and such a question ought not to be disposed of in a hurry. It had many important bearings which required to be carefully considered, particularly as the question of water supply to the town of Calcutta was bound up with the question of water supply to the suburbs. So that he did not think that the Commissioners were not justified in taking time or in giving proper consideration to the whole subject. At any rate, the Commissioners were bound to consider whether the existing supply was sufficient or not, and whether temporary means could be devised for increasing that supply. One thing he should point out, and that was that the existing supply was miserably deficient, particularly in that part of the town which lay between Chitpore-road and the Strand. He might say that it was in the Burra Bazar section, the Jora Bagan section, and the Comartollah section that the deficiency of water supply was most lamentably felt, and it was there that cholera prevailed to a large extent. He had had a conversation with his medical friends during the last few days on the subject, and they had said that the Commissioners were responsible to a great extent for the large prevalence of cholera in that part of the town, because by depriving the inhabitants of that part of the town of filtered water for drinking, they had driven them to the necessity of taking Hooghly water fresh from the river—water which was labelled not long ago as "cholera poison." He thought that it was the real duty of the Commissioners to consider whether by their own acts they were contributing to the promotion of health, or whether they were contributing to the dissemination of one of the most fatal of diseases in one of the most populous parts of the town. If, as the doctors held, the deprivation of the inhabitants of that part of the town of filtered water had led to the enormous increase of cholera there, he thought they were responsible for it; and he was rather surprised that not one of the officials of the Corporation had taken the trouble to apprise them of that lamentable fact. He could understand that the engineer who was in charge of the waterworks would be the last person to move in the matter, but he could not understand why the health officer, the guardian of the health of the town had not made a single report to them as to the cause of the wide prevalence of cholera in that part of Calcutta; and he appealed to the Chairman to say whether he had taken any particular measures upon that subject. The speaker had determined to tell the Commissioners freely what the state of things was, and what ought to be done to prevent and remedy it. He held in his hand letters and applications describing the awful state of things in various parts of the town owing to the deficiency of the water supply. He would not take up their time by reading them all, but he could tell them that those letters and applications had come mostly from the three sections he had referred to. There was another part of the town which was in the southern division, which had also sent up to the speaker a bitter complaint. A gentleman, Baboo Shoshee Bhooosun Chatterjee, called upon him three weeks ago, complaining of the want of water in his street. The speaker then read a letter from this person, complaining of the deficiency of water supply in his own and many houses in his district, and the great inconvenience caused thereby. The speaker, continuing, said that, since the introduction of the water supply system, the old class of water carriers called dhurries had gone out of fashion, and the bheesties also had become scarce; but as water was not to be had sufficient from the pipes, people were obliged to employ dhurries and bheesties who were difficult to obtain, and there was a regular struggle going on in that part of the town to which he had referred, for water. As for getting water from the hydrants, let anybody go up to one at any time and he would find it surrounded by all sorts of people, men, women, and children—struggling for water, and perhaps many a head was broken in doing so. That state of things, he believed, needed no elaborate description from him to commend it to their sympathy and consideration. The question was what was their present supply? How far was it utilised? Could it be temporarily improved? And could the present crying grievance be redressed to any extent?

Well, with a view to understanding the subject fully, he would take the liberty to ask some questions which the chairman had been kind enough to permit the engineer to answer for the speaker's information, and, from a perusal of those answers, he had made some strange discoveries. In the first place, he wished to point out a fact, which, perhaps, most of them were not aware of, that in the distribution of the water-supply in the northern and southern divisions of the town a marked invidious distinction was made in the pressure; for whilst, higher pressure was invariably given from Wellington-square for the benefit of the southern division, a lower pressure was invariably given at Tallah for the benefit of the northern division. He had the Tallah register before him, and taking October, 1883, he found that from Tallah the highest pressure was 55, and from Wellington-square, 62; the lowest pressure at Tallah was 22, from Wellington-square, 25. Let them take again the 20th October, 1883, then the highest pressure from Tallah was 55, and 64 from Wellington-square; the lowest pressure from Tallah was 22, and from Wellington-square 25. On April 1 of the present year, at Tallah the highest pressure was 52; at Wellington-square it was 64. The lowest pressure at Tallah was 25; at Wellington-square, 40. On April 3, 1884, the highest pressure at Tallah was 50; at Wellington-square it was 60; lowest pressure at Tallah, 25; at Wellington-square, 40; and he found that the lowest pressure at Wellington-square for all the days of April had been, with the exception on two or three days, 30, and the lowest pressure at Tallah generally had been from 20 to 25. Since the chairman's last notification—that was since April 11—it had generally been equal between Tallah and Wellington-square. So that he found that since 1876—he had no record before that time—when Mr. Kimber joined the Municipal Department, there was a marked difference in the pressure at Tallah and Wellington-square stations, until ten or eleven days ago, when the chairman issued his notification after the speaker's notice of motion on the subject.

He did not say that the chairman's notification had any reference to the speaker's notice of motion; but there was that remarkable coincidence, and he ought to notice it, for he thought it was a fact well worth noting. He had asked the engineer what could be the cause of that difference; surely colour could have nothing to do with the question of the water supply; surely the ratepayers of the southern and northern divisions paid alike? The engineer said that he could not answer the question; but possibly the high pressure at Wellington-square was kept up for the benefit of the fort. Now, the fort was not a part of the town; the good people of the fort did not pay the taxes of the town. Of course, the fort was inhabited by a most useful class of persons—he meant the Queen's soldiers, and their health ought to be looked after. But when the water-supply scheme was carried out, part of the understanding between the Municipality and the Government was that filtered water should be supplied to the soldiers in the fort, and Government should pay a fixed price for it. What struck the speaker was that they might give the inhabitants of the fort filtered water to drink; but why should they take upon themselves the task of supplying it to them at high pressure? Why should not the Government make arrangements to supply water to the soldiers at any pressure it thought fit? That would obviate the necessity for diminishing the strength of the pressure for the town. In keeping up the high pressure for the Fort, they were practically doing a great wrong to the town. He thought that was a point that ought to be considered by the Town Council, when the subject was referred to them. He then came to the supply of water. They were unaware that they had got two intermediate stations for the supply of water to the town; Tallah for the native town generally, and Wellington-square for the Southern Division. Their main supply came from Pultah, and the speaker found that their supply had not always been constant or ready. He would take only the register for April. The speaker then compared the amounts of water supply on certain days in April, and they were found to vary considerably. He did not understand the cause of that variation. The same engines were at work there; the same means and appliances were at work there; and the same superintendence was exercised there. It might be that one day, or two days, or three days might be some accident which might interfere with the maximum supply, but how that constant variation went on, he could not understand. Of course, there might be explanations of it—the chairman would doubtless favour them with an explanation; but there was that variation going on. Then, the question was—How was their supply registered; was there a good and sound system of registration of supply? Would they believe it, that there was no one of their water stations that had a self-registering gauge; so that the registration was practically left to their own servants who worked there? He could not understand why the corporation, which had gone to so much expense, and had paid nearly 80 lakhs of rupees for the water-supply, and was going again to spend half a million more, should not have a self-registering gauge in the water stations for the registration of the supply. (Applause.) As it was, they were obliged to rely on the reports which the men at the stations made without sound data to go upon. Then the speaker found that register gave them the average pressure the highest feet and the least feet. Now, the question was not a question of average but a question of duration; for what time was the highest pressure kept up; for what time was the least pressure kept up? They wanted particulars under that head. It was all very well to say that the pressure given at Tallah was 55, the pressure at Wellington-square was 65; the question was for what period was that pressure kept up; for how many hours. There was nothing but the record to show that. They were, therefore, left to surmises, and sometimes to surprises. (Hear, hear.)

There was another question in connection with this subject which he wished to bring to their notice. They knew it was not enough for them to know that the highest pressure at Tallah was so much, or the highest pressure at Wellington-square was so much; but they ought to know what was the street pressure. (Hear, hear.) Was there no record kept of that? Had no means been taken to ascertain the street pressure? He was sorry to confess, none whatever. He had been informed that there were two street pressure gauges—one at Jorasanko Police-station, and another at the Municipal Office. Having got that information, the speaker asked the engineer whether he utilised those street pressure gauges. He said no; and why not? Because he said he had no establishment. So that, although they had two street pressure gauges in those places, they had no means of working them. He did not know whether this state of things had ever been brought to their notice, or whether the chairman had ever heard of it. The speaker knew that, when they sanctioned the appointment of a clerk at each of the stations for the registration of births and deaths, it was understood that that work was not usual, and that extra work would be done for the benefit of the Municipality. He also remembered that, when Mr. Beverley, their former chairman, wanted an extra grant for the increased pay of some police officers, and also for the increase of the number of police officers, with a view to assist the Municipality in its sanitary work—he believed they were called "Sanitary Police"—it was understood that those police would look after the hydrants, and sewers, and latrines, and co-operate generally with the municipal servants in the promotion of sanitary work in the town. And yet, with all his establishment at work, it was said that the street gauges in the Jorasanko Police-station could not be worked. He had told them how insufficient and unsatisfactory was their present means for registering or correctly ascertaining the daily supply to the town; nevertheless, guided as they must be by the present means and present records, which records were not signed by anybody, they must accept the supply as it was recorded to them, and that was, on the average, eight millions from Pultah. Their original supply was six millions; they had now got eight millions. The next question was—had they got any further additional supply? They might recollect that about two or three years ago, a second main was laid in Cornwallis-street from Tallah to feed the Wellington-square reservoir. The object of that main was chiefly economical. It was reported to them that nearly half a million gallons were wasted every day in the passage of the water from Tallah to Wellington-square every night, and that that loss could be prevented if a second main were added. The Commissioners agreed to it, and he thought they had a right to demand that half a million of gallons every day should have been saved to the Corporation; in other words, added to the supply for domestic consumption; so that, whereas they had got two millions additional supply from the old, they had also saved half a million more by the second main, which made it two millions and a half. There was another point in the last Administration Report. It was an increase in the unfiltered supply, which had also relieved the filtered supply. He found that in 1879, the daily average of filtered water was 7,464,000 gallons; in the second quarter of 1880, he found that the daily average of unfiltered water was 1,089,000, and in the second quarter of 1883, 2,992,000 gallons; so that, while there had been an increase from 1879 to 1883 of one million and-a-quarter gallons in the filtered supply there had been an increase of nearly two millions in the unfiltered supply; increase in the unfiltered supply meant a relief of the filtered supply for domestic consumption. So that he put it to them whether means had not been taken by the Corporation, from time to time for the increase of their filtered supply, or the augmentation of the quantity intended for domestic consumption by the adoption of additional filters at Pultah. He would here remind them that the Commissioners had, from time to time, taken measures to increase the supply of filtered water, and to save it from waste as much as they could. Now, he found that in 1873, they sanctioned a third engine at Wellington-square, so as to give full working power to the engines there. Then, he found that they had sanctioned an additional establishment to allow the engines to work day and night. Again, he found that they had sanctioned a new engine-house at Tallah, and also a new 75-horse power engine for the purpose of enabling the Tallah engines to work day and night. Then, they sanctioned again another engine at Tallah. Again, he found that they had sanctioned a lakh and a half for the construction of new filters at Tallah; and also they had ordered special pumps for giving facility to the working of the engines.

Further, as he had said, they had laid down a second main, to save half a million of water from wastage. All those measures had been taken to increase the supply of their unfiltered water. On the other hand, they had extended the filtered supply, with a view to devote the unfiltered supply to its legitimate purpose, namely, flushing of latrines and sewers, and domestic purposes, for which filtered water ought not to be wasted. In that way, he said, that, whereas when they started they had a supply of six millions of filtered water, they had now eight millions. Whereas half a million was being wasted on the Cornwallis-road in the passage of water from Tallah to Wellington-square, that had been saved; and whereas in 1879 their unfiltered supply was one million gallons; it was now nearly three millions, or two millions more, which ought to imply a saving of filtered water to that extent. Now, he asked, with all these measures, how was it that their water-supply department found itself unequal to meet the demand of the town. The only answer which he had received was that the number of house connections had increased so much that it was difficult to keep pace with them; that the greater the number of house connections, the weaker must be the pressure and the less the supply. All that he could understand, but what he could not understand was that though their supply was thus indirectly almost doubled, they were still to be unable to supply the wants of the town to any decent extent, as was the case before. If they could, five or ten years ago, with a less supply, give the town more water, he could not understand why now, when they had got more water—as he had shown them from figures taken from official reports they had—they should be unable to keep up even that supply. That was a problem which he would leave to the Town Council to consider. He would point out to them that the northern division particularly suffered from the present deficient supply, and the reasons were many. The northern division covered a much larger area than the southern division. The area of the northern division was 2,253 acres, the area of the southern division was 1,253 acres. The population of the northern division was 2,273,743; and the population of the southern division, 1,31,236. So that it would be seen that the necessity for putting on higher pressure for the Southern Division and giving it more water was undeniable. But the pressure being, as he had pointed out, less at Tallah than at Wellington-square, the water was necessarily not pushed forward to the extreme part of the northern Division,—he meant the tract between the Chitpore-road and the Strand—and he had heard bitter complaints that the people in that part of the town got no water whatever in many places from the pipes. The chairman himself admitted in his letter to the Press that the supply to that part of the town was next to nothing. The speaker thought that some steps ought to be taken by the Town Council to increase the supply for the Southern Division. While upon the subject of the water-supply for domestic consumption, he would also notice the subject of street watering. At this time of the year street watering had become an absolute necessity. Of course street watering had been stopped in streets where no unfiltered water could be obtained, but he must observe, and he believed his friends around him would support him when he said, that even in streets where no unfiltered water supply was obtainable, the dust was hardly laid by the drizzle of water now and then spread over it, and five minutes after the dust came forth again in all its glory. He could not understand that whilst they had got two millions additional of unfiltered supply for the watering of streets and flushing of drains, latrines, &c., why that supply could not also be given at full pressure. He thought he had carried them through almost all the important details of the subject, and he would not, therefore, take up their time with further details; but there was one point he wished to press upon their attention. It was this: could anything be done at present to remedy the crying evil? He confessed that the chairman's letter to the Press has come upon him like a cold blast, chilling him to the heart. The chairman had frankly and too plainly said that nothing could at present be done, till the extension of the works was completed. The speaker had thought over the subject, and in his interview with the engineer, in one of those random interrogations which he put to him he had asked him—Can you put pressure on the main? Can you put even a slight pressure upon the Pultah main? The engineer candidly confessed that some pressure could be put without damage to the main. The speaker asked him what pressure. He replied that he could put ten feet pressure, and, in reply to the speaker's question as to what it would cost to do that, he replied, speaking roughly, from Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000. The speaker then said that they were willing to give a lakh of rupees, and asked what quantity he could give them for ten feet pressure. The engineer replied one million. That was worthy of consideration. It was for the Town Council to consider whether, if by laying out 60,000, or 80,000 or a lakh of rupees, and putting ten feet pressure on the Pultah main, they could get one million gallons of additional supply, it was not worth having. The engineer said it would, perhaps, take a little time, that they would not get the full benefit in the present year. There was the rub; but, at any rate, he thought that, if it was possible, it ought to be done. He did not like to see difficulties put in their way. They ought to put their own shoulders to the wheel, and try to relieve the people of Calcutta as much as possible. When the people of Calcutta are dying by hundreds for want of good drinking water, no expense ought to be spared to give them good water, and save them from death. With these remarks, he begs to move his resolution.

Mr. Jones, in seconding the motion of the Hon.-Kristodas das Pal, said that it would have been more satisfactory if the hon.-mover suggested that a committee should be appointed, consisting of a few Commissioners only, who would devote some little time to investigate this great public grievance. However, no doubt the Town Council would be able to report and appoint a committee, and that committee should report direct to the Town Council. He thought that there could be no doubt that the very general cause of complaint throughout the town consisted in the failing of the supply of filtered water, and of which they could not at present form a correct notion. He said that the hon. mover had referred to the grievances of the native portion of the town, in which the people complained of the deficient water supply. If the account given by the hon. mover about the grievances of the native portion of the town were correct, the speaker inferred that the failing of the water supply was a very serious fact; in fact, at the present time, in some parts of the native portion, they got absolutely no water. The speaker said that several persons had called on him, complaining of the deficient water-supply. He then went on to comment upon the present pressure, both at Wellington-square and Pultah. He said that during the time Mr. Fenwick was on leave, and Mr. Price was acting for him, the pressure at Pultah was such as sufficiently met the wants of the people, but when he returned, there was a general complaint of deficient water supply. He suggested that Mr. Fenwick be transferred.

Baboo Surendro Nath supported the resolution of the Hon. Kristodas Pal, and said that the mover was entitled to the gratitude of the people for the trouble he had taken in connection with this matter. He suggested that a committee should be appointed to investigate with energy and ability into the causes of this deficient water supply.

The Chairman then replied. He said that he had heard patiently the remarks of many of the Commissioners with regard to the deficient water supply, and he fully sympathised with the grievances of the people. But he said he did not believe that the drinking of unwholesome water was the immediate cause of cholera. The present deficient water supply was, in a great measure, due to the increase of house connections. Formerly, when there were not so many house connections, a pressure of four million gallons per day was sufficient, but at the present moment, the pressure had been raised to eight million gallons per day, and this was found to be inadequate to the wants of the people. He then spoke at length about the present at Wellington-square, at Pultah, and at Tallah.

Baboo Omirtanath Mitter also supported the motion of the Hon. Kristodas Pal.

Baboo Jodoo Lal Mullick, in a few words, said that, when this matter should go to the Town Council, the Town Council, with the help of some professionals, would be able to get at the real truth, and he hoped that the duties which would be imposed upon them would be earnestly carried out by all the members.

Dr. Lal Madhub Mookarjee said that he had thoroughly considered the matter, and he must, in justice to the chairman, say that he fully endorsed every word that the chairman had stated in his letter to the papers, with regard to the deficient water supply. He had consulted some of his friends on the subject, and they were of the same opinion as himself.

The Hon. Kristodas Pal replied briefly. He said he did not pass censure undeservedly. He always praised those who were deserving of praise, and censured those who merited it. With regard to the chairman's remark that the people were found to waste water, he said it was unfounded, for how could they be accused of wasting water, when they were not supplied with water for their drinking purposes?

The Chairman then put the proposal of the hon. mover to the meeting, and it was carried.

The rest of the business in the list was postponed, it being half past seven o'clock, when the meeting separated.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE transfer of occupancy rights, or in other words, free sale, which is one of the now historical "three Fs," has been very ably defended by those who have confidence in the benefits which are to ensue from its introduction. It has been equally strongly attacked by those who see as a probable result of it a disastrous issue.

There are two aspects from which the question can be viewed, the sentimental and the practical. It undoubtedly seems hard that a zemindar should not be allowed to select his own tenants. The feeling of "dominion" over property is strongly implanted in the oriental breast, and, like all instincts peculiar to certain people, has become a part of the being of zemindars. They value the privilege which they have for so long exercised. It tends to increase their dignity, and to make each of them what they are considered to be in every rural tract, a sort of petty raja. These feelings, however cherished they may be, would not for a moment be considered by any wise Government, were it found that they militated against the true interests of the people. No one who wishes well for the country could brook for an instant that the maintenance of a sort of barbaric dignity should be suffered to stand in the way of the progress of civilisation, or of the making of the bulk of the people materially better than they are at present. It may with truth be asserted that if this were the only objection to free sale, none of those who in common with this journal, have opposed the present Rent Bill, whilst they admit the necessity of a change in the land laws, would have raised any objection to the free transfer of occupancy rights. It is, of course, well known that the extreme men on the side of the zemindars urge this, with other arguments, against free sale. It is to be regretted that they have done so, as it weakens the force of the many excellent reasons that could be brought forward to show that the free transferability of occupancy rights is not a desirable thing. Leaving, then, the purely sentimental grievance which free sale will furnish to the landed proprietors of Bengal, it is better to consider the matter from a practical point of view. What will be the result of a facility of freely transferring their holdings to the average rayat of Bengal? The answer is not a difficult one. It will result in those occupancy rights passing into the hands of the money-lender. There is no class of peasantry, save, perhaps, the peasantry of Ireland, who have such an utterly happy-go-lucky way about them as the peasantry of Bengal. If a Bengal rayat can borrow money at all, he will do so without the slightest regard to the interest which he agrees to pay for the accommodation, or of the ruinous consequences in which such loans must inevitably involve him. As a rule, he never can get out of debt once he has got into it, and without the slightest intention of being dishonest, but from pure want of taking thought for the morrow, he enters into engagements for the payment of interest on loans which would make the hair of most of our Radical philanthropists in England stand on end. For your Radical, though very generous with his neighbours' goods, knows how to take care of his own.

The money-lender is not ignorant of this failing on the part of the cultivator, and makes his arrangements accordingly. Two years' or, at the most three years' interest, repays him his capital. He then works the needy debtor as long as he can screw anything out of him, and finally if he thinks it worth his while, gets a decree from the courts against him, and congratulates himself that he has done a good business. Hitherto he regulated the loan he made by a regard to the property he would be likely to recover. Under the new Act, he will spread his net further than he ever did before, for the simple reason that his debtor will have a new and valuable right to pledge. Instead of a doubtful bullock or two, and some brass utensils, the money lender will have a right of occupancy to look forward to, and the possible and valuable power of annoying a zemindar by the introduction on his estate of an undesirable class of tenant. It is not beyond the bounds of possibility that a mahajan who took over a tenant's right of occupancy, in payment for a loan given to celebrate the shran of that tenant's great grandmother, might make a very nice thing of it by proposing to introduce a hide-seller into the midst of a Hindu village, or a keeper of swine amongst a Mohammedan community, unless it were made worth his while to abstain from so doing. In either case the zemindar would be at his mercy, for the remaining lands of the village would, by this action on the part of the money-lender, become deserted and useless. It has been argued, and with considerable force, that money-lenders are in the habit of tying up whole estates, and that, therefore, there is no evil to be anticipated from allowing them to buy up individual jotes. The answer to such an argument is, that once a money-lender buys an estate it is to his interest to keep his tenants, or at any rate those of them who are solvent, as tenants on that estate. He will not kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. Were he to introduce undesirable sub-tenants, he himself would be the sufferer. What the opponents of the Bill say, and say with truth, is that the present measure will afford facilities to money-lenders to acquire rights of occupancy all over the country, and to make their own terms with the unhappy owner of the land upon which they have secured a footing. It has never been asserted that the desire of the legislature is to let in a number of men as occupancy rayats who have about as much to do with agriculture as the captain of a man-of-war. The Bill is professedly in the interests of the cultivating community, and it will have the effect of giving that community a power to borrow money at various interests, which (for their own good, be it said) they have never had before. It will, doubtless, in its earlier results, call forth an official report that it has done much good. Instances will be cited of the increase of marriages, of the greater increase in splendour of religious ceremonies, and of a general appearance of prosperity on the part of the cultivator as exemplified by the possession of better cooking utensils. This will be an almost certain result of free sale at the outset. It will, doubtless, be laid upon as indicating an increased standard of comfort, and consequently an increase in the prosperity of the cultivating classes. It would be well, however, to wait for two years or so before pronouncing an opinion upon the reality or the hollowness of this prosperity. When the class of men has begun to show itself for whose benefit, as Mr. Ilbert informed his hearers, it will be necessary hereafter to legislate, then those who see nothing but right in the idea of allowing every man to do what he likes with his right of occupancy, may perhaps see that the condition under which the average Bengal cultivator lives, forms an item of some importance in calculating the results of a measure founded upon theories of abstract justice untempered by a practical consideration of facts as they are.—Englishman.

SIR BARTLE FRERE.

HALF a century ago, when the enterprise of genius had scarce dreamed of piercing the narrow strip of land which separates the waters of the Mediterranean from the sea which washes the Arabian shore, a young stripling might have been seen traversing on camel back across the hot and arid plains of Upper Egypt, en route to Corseir, in the Red Sea, whence he proceeded in open boats to various ports till on reaching Mocha, he travelled in company with some Arab pilgrims in a native craft, which reached Bombay towards the close of the year. The overland adventurer, dirt-stained and weary with the toils of travel, presented but a sorry appearance when he arrived at the Western Capital of India, and on revealing to the astonished magnates his name as a newly-appointed "writer" in the coveted service of the Hon. East India Company, his words fell listless on the ears of his perplexed and incredulous masters. Fifty years have rolled away since this first appearance in India of a humble civilian, and England now mourns the death of the Right Honourable Sir Henry Bartle Edward Frere, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., then an unknown and unrecognised wanderer, now an illustrious statesman and the trusted confidant of the Sovereign of our country.

Mr. Frere's career in the public service commenced at Puna, where he was posted as third supernumerary to the collector. After a few months' stay, however, at the ancient capital of the Paishwas, he was deputed to assist in an inquiry into the working of the revenue system then in force in a portion of the Bombay Presidency. But the first step in the ladder of success was his appointment a Private Secretary to the Governor, Sir George Arthur, an act of kindness which, after an interval of ten years, he repaid by marrying his patron's daughter. By a strange destiny he was now sent to Sattara to administer a territory, the annexation of which he had most vehemently resisted as a blot on the escutcheon of the nation. It was, however, as commissioner in Sind, to which he was posted in 1850, that he laid the foundation of his greatness. Succeeding the famous soldier-statesman,

Sir Charles Napier, it needed the exercise of the greatest care and prudence to follow in the wake of so well graced an actor on the stage of life; but the thriving condition to which he brought the province, the material prosperity of the people, the magnificent harbour at Karachi, and other public works, all testify to the genius of the mind which conceived, and the head which controlled. Then came the Mutiny of 1857. Mr. Frere was at the time in England, but hurrying back to the East, he realised at once the magnitude of the crisis, and trusting solely to the loyalty of the Muhammadan population by which he was surrounded, he denuded the territories under his control of the only trustworthy troops upon which he could rely, in order to assist their brethren in arms where their services were more needed. This act at once proclaimed the man. The responsibility was immense, the anxiety fearful; but his efforts were successful, and the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, a honour which was shortly followed by a flattering mark of Her Majesty's approbation in the shape of a Knight Commandership of the Bath, betokened that the nation owed a debt of gratitude to the "Saviour of Multan."

In 1862 Sir Bartle Frere—now a member of the newly-instituted Order of the Star of India—became Governor of Bombay, a sphere in which he had every opportunity of displaying that capacity to govern which is the truest characteristic of a great mind. It would be no difficult task to enumerate numerous tokens of the care and zeal with which he watched over the destinies of the people committed to his charge, but one fact alone speaks volumes; the census taken while he was at the head of affairs "established," to quote the words of a recent writer, "that in point of population Bombay was the second city in the British Empire, ranking next to London, and being equal to two Manchesters. It was thus shown that in its more populous parts the people were four times as crowded as in London. That in whole districts of the town no children were reared, owing to epidemics arising from overcrowding and want of air. It was in consequence of these discoveries that the municipality was established. Its working has been most beneficial to sanitation, and Bombay is the most healthy city next to Dublin in the British Empire."

On his return to England, Sir Bartle Frere was selected for a seat on the Council of the Secretary of State for India. During his tenure of office he headed a mission to Zanzibar for the purpose of putting an end to the system of slave trade which had existed from time immemorial in the East African waters; and on his return he was sworn in as a member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council.

In 1875, in obedience to the mandate of his Sovereign, he again repaired to the East in company with H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, a service for which he was created a Baronet, and raised to the highest rank in the Bath. The incidents of his administration of the Cape of Good Hope, with which he was subsequently entrusted, are too recent to need detailed mention. There again, as during the crisis of 1857, the glove of suasion and urbanity masked the hand of iron; though his manners were courteous and conciliatory, his measures were vigorous, and his plans unhesitating; though good report and ill report, he held his way. True, his enemies triumphed in the immediate present, and he withdrew to the comparative seclusion of his "home on the common." But in the end the logic of events triumphed, and history now proclaims the wisdom of his efforts and the foresight of his conceptions.

Such was Sir Bartle Frere. The same indomitable spirit which led him as a lad to become the pioneer of the Overland Route to the East, animated all his actions throughout his career, and of the many worthy sons of England who have built up the fabric in the East, none are more honoured, none more worthy of a country's gratitude than the illustrious statesman whom a Sovereign now aments, and a nation now mourns.

The 45th Sikhs have been ordered to Quetta from Jhelum. They were duly provided with transport when the Government first sanctioned the expedition against the Kakur Pathans.

Colonel Aylmer Vivian, Commandant, 3rd Punjab Cavalry, who, it is stated, has assumed the name of McIver Campbell, has applied for permission to retire from the service from the 19th instant.

Major J. I. Tinling, General 1st, Bombay Infantry, has been granted six months' furlough in extension of the three months' furlough, on medical certificate, which was granted him in November.

Private affairs have called for the presence of Major Marryatt, R.E., Manager, Punjab Northern State Railways, in Europe. He will be absent for twelve months, for which period furlough has been granted him.

Captain J. B. Bourdillon, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, and Captain W. C. G. Macpherson, East India Railway Volunteer Corps, are the first of the Indian Volunteer forces who have passed the prescribed examination in tactics.

Lieutenants Florton, Second Norfolk Regiment, Dillon, Suffolk Regiment, and Dodgson, Second Liverpool, have been appointed to the 12th, 26th, and 2nd Native Infantry respectively, as probationers for the Staff Corps.

The services of Surgeon W. W. Webb, Indian Medical Service, have been placed at the disposal of the Foreign Department for employment as Officiating Medical Officer, Meywar Bheel Corps, and Dr. Webb has been directed to join his appointment.

It is expected that H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught will give a cup next year for a shooting competition amongst the Native Cavalry corps. This year the cup was given by General Cureton, whose period of command of the Ondh Division will expire in October next. This cup was won by the 14th Bengal Lancers with a score of 706 points, the Central India Horse being second with 705 points.

Subject to the confirmation of the Secretary of State, the following officers are admitted to the Bombay Staff Corps:—Lieutenant Caulfield, 2nd Battalion, Suffolk Regiment, officiating wing officer 10th Regiment N.I.; Lieutenant Chas. Arnold Kemball, of the 2nd Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment, officiating wing officer, 17th Regiment N.I.; and Lieutenant Light, of the 2nd Battalion Devonshire Regiment, officiating wing officer, 17th Regiment N.I.

A correspondent writing from Jacobabad informs the Sind Gazette that a detachment of the 1st Beluch Regiment, under command of Lieut. Heyman, left Jacobabad by mail train for Sibi on the evening of the 28th ult. The Beluchis were played to the railway station by the band of their regiment. A squadron of the 2nd Sind Horse, under command of Captain Mackenzie, left Jacobabad for Sibi on the evening of the 29th ult. Lieutenant Campbell also accompanied the squadron.

Thursday's Bombay Government Gazette notifies the retirement of Colonel Jameson, of the Staff Corps. The gallant colonel entered the service thirty-two years ago. Two years afterwards he was appointed a lieutenant, and on June 12, 1864, twelve years after entering the service, he was promoted to a captaincy. In 1872 he became major; in 1878 lieutenant colonel; and in 1882 colonel. He joined the Staff Corps in 1861, and on Dec 1, 1881, he was appointed commandant of the 25th N.L.I., which has been stationed at Bhuj since November, 1881. Colonel Jameson has been on furlough since Dec. 8, 1882, the officiating commandant being Major J. Withers.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

TUESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—The China sales to-day comprised 18,485 packages—15,000 packages being Congou—including 1,664 packages first crop Ningchows and Oufas, which sold, barely maintaining last week's low quotations. New seasons' red leaf—rather broken—sold down to 5½d. per lb.; old season's red leaf—fair leaf—at 5½d. at 5½d. per lb.; first crop Pan-yongs again passed very cheaply at from 8½d. to 10d. per lb. At the Indian auctions 3,000 packages were offered, and sold at about previous values; 1,841 packages were from the Brahmapootra Estate to close the season; 314 chests Java teas also sold, prices being easier. No public sales will be held to-morrow.

SUGAR.—The demand is slow and transactions on the spot chiefly confined to the public sales, including 194 casks and 900 small packages Barbados and crystallised Demera at about unaltered prices; 4,563 packages Natal, part sold, at easier rates, syrups, 12s. to 13s. 6d.; 2,365 bags Mauritius bought at 15s. to 18s. 6d. Since last Friday three cargoes Java sold at 19s. to 19s. 6d. for London and Clyde. Beet rallied in price on Saturday, but closes lower to-day. In the Clyde market pieces have met a fairly demand at previous quotations to 3d. decline.

COFFEE.—At auction, 67 casks, 84 barrels and bags. Plantation Ceylon realised full value for coloury kinds—fine middling to good bold 70s. to 88s.; superior, 93s. to 96s.; middling to good middling, 65s. to 68s. 117 cases, 952 barrels and bags, East India, partly found buyers, and in some cases at barely last week's rates—low medium to medium, 59s. to 64s.; bold sorts, 70s. to 78s. 100 half-bales Mocha part sold, 77s. to 81s. 2,584 bags foreign, partly sold—Costa Rica, at 41s. 6d. to 53s.; Guatemala, at 43s. 6d. to 51s.; Honduras, at 44s.; washed Rio, at 56s. Porto Rico bought in at 64s. to 78s. per cwt.

SPICES.—Black pepper is active. Singapore to arrive, 6¾d. to 6-13-16.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson, state that during the past week the leading markets have continued without animation, prices being in some cases rather lower. The Epsom races and the approach of Whitsuntide have also further unsettled trade here. Common to middling qualities of plantation Ceylon and East India coffee have not quite supported their previous value, but the former, when coloury, obtains full rates. The same may be reported of Central American descriptions. To-day Guatemala went 6d. to 1s per cwt. lower. A parcel of very fine Honduras last week realised 93s. 6d. to 94s. 6d. per cwt. The foreign markets have rather a downward tendency, and in Havre Brazil is lower. The business in China tea is chiefly restricted to the public sales, and prices are without alteration. Indian steady, excepting for the lower grades. Steamer cargoes of Burmah and Siam rice have sold at low rates, and the market is inactive. The supply of sugar is in excess of present requirements, and speculative operations confined to beet, which has declined. Next season's production has sold at 15s. 9d. per cwt., October to December shipment. Cane grown on the spot is depressed but some floating cargoes of Java have found buyers at the late reduction. West India cocoa remains quiet, and the sales of Ceylon have been too small to influence quotations. Black Singapore pepper has sold to arrive at rather under the highest price lately obtained, and the market generally is dull. Zanzibar cloves firmer. At the cinnamon sales on Monday there was some competition at recent extremely low rates to 1d. per lb. recovery.

TEA.—No Indian sales have been held to-day; 6,670 packages were sold "without reserve" at the China auctions; 730 packages first crop Ning-chows passed without change at 8½d. to 9¼d. per lb. 2,294 boxes new make congou (1884-5) sold at 8d. to 11d. per lb. again in favour of buyers, and showing heavy losses to the importers. A low quotation for 1883-4 red leaf has been again established, at 5½d. per lb. but the teas were inferior to any lately selling at 5½d. per lb.

From Messrs. Hawes and Hertz's fortnightly Indian report. "She market has again been freely supplied, large catalogues coming forward 'to finish the season.' Many of the invoices offered were of last year's import, and in consequence more or less flat; for these there was but poor competition, and sales could only be effected at lower rates, Pekoes from 1s. to 1s. 3d. showing a decline of nearly 1d. per lb. Common Suchongs and broken teas have been in over-supply, and have also gone in favour of buyers. The quantity of fine tea on offer has been small, and really desirable parcels have sold steeply at higher prices. The quantity remaining unsold in importers' hands is now inconsiderable, and sales are likely to be light for the remainder of the season. The first Calcutta sale of new season's held on the 14th inst., is reported to have gone about 2d. per lb. under last year's opening price; the quality being inferior. To day further sales of about the same quantity are held. Assam samples are reported to be of good quality, other districts indifferent. Owing to the Whitsuntide holidays, the next sale here will be held on Thursday, the 5th June. Public sales for the fortnight have comprised 24,433 packages. Ceylon—1,272 packages have been offered. The quality has been irregular, with the result of fine teas being eagerly competed for, while parcels of undesirable character in cup in some cases had to be withdrawn in the absence of fair bids. Loolconda Pekoe brought 1s. 1½d. to 1s. 1¼d. per lb.; ditto, broken Pekoe, 2s. 3¼d. The demand for Ceylon teas is becoming more general, and if the quality be kept up, they will continue to command a ready sale at good prices. Java.—But little business has passed during the fortnight, sales amounting only to 383 packages, of which 176 only were of 'direct import.' These sold at about previous rates, common Suchongs going a shade in buyers' favour, while Pekoes and broken Pekoes showed steady values. A few small parcels from the recent Amsterdam sale sold at prices allowing a small margin of profit to the importers. 600 packages ex Prince Alexander are printed for June 9th, and further catalogues, comprising nearly 4,030 packages per Daeca, will shortly be issued."

COFFEE.—The public sales have been very light, chiefly Costa Rica and Guatemala, both descriptions showing easier rates. Of the former 808 bags sold, fine ordinary, 50s. to 52s. 6d.; middling, dull to bold, 57s. to 61s.; and of the latter 640 bags, at 47s. 6d. to 50s. for ordinary to fine ordinary foxey greenish; and 45s. 6d. for low. 248 bags other foreign chiefly witedrawn. Brazil Coffee dull and nominal.

RICE.—Further business has been done this week, including a steamer cargo of Siam, at 6s. 11¼d., open charter.

After a brilliant official career of thirty years Rai Kanyal Del Bahadur retired from the service on Monday last. He entered Government service immediately after passing his examination as a graduate of the Calcutta Medical College, in the year 1854. The first appointment he held was that of Assistant to the Chemical Examiner to Government and Professor of Chemistry in the Calcutta Medical College. He was selected for this post for his special aptitude in chemistry. And to the close of his official life he stuck to his speciality. In 1862 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the Presidency College of Calcutta. We have before us a summary of the services rendered by Rai Kanyal to Government and the public in both his official and professional capacities. It is a dry catalogue of facts, but it is far more eloquent than many an ornate production. We wish we could make room for this statement in extenso. It shows what a Bengali gentleman can do in the department of science by single-minded labours and industrious researches. He has written books, delivered lectures, contributed articles, made experiments and collections, and worthily represented India in not a few International Exhibitions. During the last Calcutta Exhibition he was a juror of no less than fifteen departments. Apart from his legitimate work, he was constantly referred to by the Director of Public Instruction, the Bengal Government, and the Surgeon General for opinion on a variety of publications relating to medicine and sanitation. Since his connection with the Economic Museum of Calcutta, he has analysed and reported on the uses and properties of numerous economic products, as also on drugs and various articles of food. Rai Kanyal is an ornament to his service, which ought to feel proud of him. No Indian medical officer for his high scientific culture and successful experiments is better known to and more respected by the European community than Rai Kanyal Dey Bahadur. Hard-working, but unostentatious, courteous, amiable, and affable, he is liked by all, whether European or Native, who know him. He has well-earned repose, and may he long enjoy it! It is noteworthy that during his thirty years' service he did not take a single day's sick leave. We hope the Government will not allow the distinguished services which Rai Kanyal has rendered without conferring upon him a special pension. He will now have ample leisure, but we hope he will not rest upon his laurels; he will go on with his scientific researches and thus advance the cause of science.

AGRA AND FURRUCKABAD.—The seventh volume of the "Statistical, Descriptive, and Historical Account of the North West Provinces of India" gives an exhaustive description of the two great cities and political centres of Agra and Furruckabad. These gazetteers, of which this volume is the latest to come under our notice, are compiled from official sources, and contain every fact recorded or known about the subject of which they treat. The profuseness of detail, which may be inferred from the fact that to these two places alone 800 closely-printed pages are given, will effectually deter any general perusal of the result of prodigious labour and some research; and the reviewer feels that he has done as much as the majority of people will care to hear when he has stated that this volume contains all the information, should the occasion at any time arise for some one to use or require it. At the same time, it is highly satisfactory that these elaborate records of the achievements of English rule in India should be generally known, and that members of Parliament and other persons who take it upon themselves to discuss and even to decide Indian subjects should deign to turn to these gazetteers, from which, if they cared, they might learn how many-sided is the subject. They consider so lightly and how complex are the interests involved. In the present case it happens that the value of comparisons between native and English rule is enhanced by the fact that Agra and Furruckabad were identified with the most brilliant and creditable period of Indian Government before our time—viz., the reign of the enlightened Akbar; and although the authors of this volume do not exactly institute the comparison, they supply others with the material for doing so. Nor do the compilers of these volumes confine themselves to those political and social matters which attract the first attention of Governments and political students. They give elaborate descriptions of the cities, of their principal monuments and architectural remains, such as the Taj at Agra, side by side with the bills of mortality and the latest sanitary improvements. In one paragraph the reader is told of the cracked black marble throne of Akbar, and in another of the great railway bridge over the Jumna. An instructive comparison suggests itself in almost every section, and while the greatest of the Moguls will not suffer in personal estimation, there remains an increasing balance in favour of our modern system. When the last of these gazetteers has been published, before which consummation, however, years must pass away, a magnificent and most comprehensive record will have been completed by Englishmen of their great dominion in the East.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 3, 1884.

WILL MR. GLADSTONE SURRENDER OUR ROAD TO INDIA?

THE critical moment is approaching when Mr. Gladstone will be forced by circumstances to give a practical answer to the all-important question, "Is the Liberal policy in regard to Egypt, and to the Eastern Question generally, a mere sham concocted for use on the hustings, or is it a reality which a Liberal Ministry will dare to carry out?"

For England, the Eastern Question means the question of the maintenance of our Indian Empire—and more immediately (at least until Russia is actually in Herat by Radical aid) the keeping open of our Overland Route to India). Having this great object of our Imperial policy steadily in view, our Conservative statesmen (speaking broadly and generally) have sought to attain it by peaceful means—by resolutely maintaining the influence of the Turkish power on the road to India, obtaining all the accommodation and security we want in Egypt and on the Red Sea by means of our Turkish friends, and thereby avoiding the odium that must attach to any one European Power getting itself up in Egypt over the heads of its rivals. On the other hand, the Liberal policy, beginning with "Bag-and-Baggage," and "unspeakable Turk," and so forth, has really meant the somewhat high-handed and jingo line of defying the world in Egypt—negotiating with Russia and France as much as possible, but in the last resort saying "j'y suis, j'y reste." To this has pointed the bombardment of Alexandria, the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, the appointments of Dufferin, Baring, and Gordon, and the bloody fields of Teb and Tamasi. Both these policies are intelligible; and though we infinitely prefer the old-fashioned traditional policy of England to which the Conservative party has adhered, it may be admitted that there is much to be said for the Liberal policy of Blood and Iron, in regard both to national glory, to our ultimate convenience, and to that finality which is perhaps the weak point of the Conservative policy. Once we have successfully defied the world in Egypt, it may be that we shall be let alone there to make the country a second India; and in that case, Conservative politicians will be forced to admit that the Liberal policy, if objectionable from several points of view, has at any rate been successful.

It has, however, been reserved for Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Chamberlain, and the modern Radicals, to suggest an alternative policy as far removed from the Liberal as from the Conservative line. We had a glimmering of these suggestions from Mr. Gladstone during the administration of Lord Beaconsfield, when the present Prime Minister, jealous (as usual) of the renown of the Suez Canal shares purchase, endeavoured to persuade an astonished country that the old route round the Cape was a sufficient route to India for us. And now, improving on that text, Mr. Gladstone seems to have remembered that, whenever there are two possible methods of meeting and overcoming a difficulty, there must always be also a third way of dealing with it, so long as the road to the rear is open. We know what the Liberal policy is and what the Conservative policy would have been in regard to Egypt. But there seems to be no small danger that Mr. Gladstone will avoid the risk of choosing either of these policies by simply running away. The country has looked on uncomplainingly so often, while Mr. Gladstone has got over his difficulties and responsibilities by "scuttling," that it is hardly to be wondered at if the Premier feels convinced that this easy, if somewhat humiliating, alternative, is always left to him after trying every other method of failure and disgrace. The admission of the right of France to interfere in the settlement of an undertaking from which her fleet voluntarily sailed away two years ago, is clearly the first step towards a scuttle. But unhappily, this time, the scuttle would be of such a nature that England, if she were to permit it, could never again recover the position in the councils of the world which she would lose. With the scuttle out of Egypt, Mr. Gladstone would have achieved the first part of the prophecy attached to his name; but we trust the country will intervene in time to prevent the accomplishment of the ruin of the British Empire.

MR. MARTIN WOOD'S JOURNALIST'S RETROSPECT.

Those old Bombay men who remember Mr. Martin Wood as editor of the Times of India will be glad to learn that he has collected, and is republishing in periodical instalments, some of the best of his contributions to that excellent journal, and to the Bombay Review. Nor will the interest in "Things of India made Plain, or a Journalist's Retrospect," be confined to those connected with the Western Presidency. The articles which Mr. Wood has selected for re-publication are generally of wide application; and are indeed, as he terms them, "Times of India." The author is a shrewd observer; and when he is able to keep his partisan bias out of mind—which to do him justice, he does with much success in these papers written for Indian consumption—he shows himself a capable and trustworthy friend of the Indian peoples. We hope Mr. Wood will pardon us if we frankly state our opinion that our Native friends will find they possess in the Mr. Wood of the Bombay Review a much better and safer adviser than in the Mr. Wood of the India Reform Association; and it is for this reason, with other more obvious ones, that we have special pleasure in welcoming the re-issue of many admirable comments on various Indian topics in the work, of which the first part is now before us.

In some of these comments Mr. Wood displays a keen perception of character: This was his reception of the appointment of Lord Ripon (then Earl de Grey and Ripon) as Secretary of State in 1866:—

"There is, indeed, nothing to be said against such a smoothly sailing professional politician as the young Earl de Grey and Ripon; but an estimate in matters of this kind, to be worth anything, must be comparative, and it is personally unjust to the young peer himself that Earl Russell should have placed him in an office a 'world too wide' for his present growth of statesmanship. The choice bodes no good to the brightening prospects of the cause of the Indian Army; for, if we mistake not, the Earl, as Secretary for War, was considered too pliable to the pressure of the Horse Guards—a quarter from whence the Indian officers have nothing whatever to hope."

And again when Lord Ripon was Viceroy of India, more than fourteen years later, Mr. Wood wrote:—

"This morning Her Majesty's present representative in India has landed, for the second time, on the shores of Bombay Harbour. Since his first disembarkation in June last he has seen a good deal of India from the outside. His Excellency has had, in his recent tour through the Punjab and Sind, some opportunity to free himself from the unreal and misleading impressions which pervade all the atmosphere of Simla life. He will now, in his week's stay amongst us, have fair occasion to acquire some of that vital suggestive knowledge of Western India and its people without which no Viceroy can develop into a true Governor General. Here, in this little island, where the British-Indian power has been longest established and found its firmest base, His Excellency will most readily realise the truth that centralisation is a snare, and that diversity in unity, provincial autonomy, or federal self-reliance, are essential conditions in the success of Indian Empire. It is scarcely needful to say that we fully sympathise with the encomiums that have been passed alike on the matter and manner of Lord Ripon's public utterances in the Punjab and Sind. There is also substantial ground for these eulogies in so far that, all through his Lordship's speeches, may be traced the knowledge of Indian questions that he has acquired during long years of official life at home, several of which were in connection with the India Office itself. We dare say fresh evidence of this ripe experience of the administrative side of Indian questions will come out in the remarks that His Excellency may be making to the members of the Byculla Club whilst these lines are being printed. This is an excellent thing in a new Governor-General; but regarding one side of Lord Ripon's idiosyncrasy we have our misgivings. His Lordship is too constantly in good humour. This is perfectly natural with him; and it may, at first sight, seem strange to regret the manifestations of geniality and hopefulness. But it is not this healthy, trustful cheerfulness that we view with apprehension. It is that optimism as regards India and its affairs, which is so often allied with these attractive personal qualities, that we deprecate—nay, dread. We would not have urged the Byculla Club to adopt some modern device, which might easily be hit upon, comparable to that ghostly, if not ghastly, expedient adopted by the ancient Egyptians on their festive occasions; but a word of warning will not be thrown away on his Lordship. As with many empires and households, India has its "skeleton in the closet"—whence, indeed, the bony form has emerged with dread effect more than once during the last few years—and it is good that our optimist Viceroy should be reminded of the silent witness that "hath no speculation in his eyes."—Nov. 27, 1880.

We need hardly point out to our readers what a different career in India Lord Ripon's might have been, if he had only taken warning in time, from Mr. Wood's words, to distrust "the unreal and misleading impressions which pervade all the atmosphere of Simla life." The "optimism," which Mr. Wood so strongly and so justly deprecated in 1880, subsequently led Lord Ripon to embark with a light heart on an ocean of revolutionary legislation, in which he has wrecked, not only his own reputation, but also (at least for the present) the peace and happiness of the Indian Empire.

Mr. Wood's article on Sir George Campbell as Lieutenant Governor of Bengal in 1872, contains some amusing hits. He commences thus:—

"The duty has not been laid upon us of expressing any very exact estimate of Sir George Campbell's course as Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, and as his career in that position is, in all probability, far from being closed, we need not take upon us the task of summing him up before the time. Some of his measures we have criticised, more especially those which remind one of his old foible of plunging into the midst of subjects about which he knew least, and pronouncing most positively on those to which he could have given but little consideration, and in respect of which his idiosyncrasy rendered his consideration of little value. It has been our part to look on from a distance, as amused, rather than seriously interested spectators."

And concludes:—

"There is another subject in regard to which the impetuous and essentially one-sided mind of Sir George Campbell has hopelessly committed him. We refer to his almost unctuous letter to the Bishop of Calcutta. . . . That pseudo-missionary epistle from Upper Assam is full of points inviting the keen criticism of either the cynical "heaven" or the earnest Christian who believes in the self-sustaining power of his religion; but, for our part, we have only to regard it from the politician's point of view. From this standpoint it seems very plain that the officer who could pen and defend that document, as we suppose Sir George is prepared to do, can never expect to hold any place in the Supreme Executive power either at Simla or Westminster."

In speaking of Lord Beaconsfield (then Mr. Disraeli) in connection with the great Bengal famine, Mr. Wood freely acknowledges, though from the point of view of a political opponent, the value and accuracy of his views as a friend of India. Mr. Wood thus writes:—

"Mr. Disraeli is one of those few English politicians who possess the gift of unexpectedness. True, he often exercises this faculty or privilege at the wrong time, and in such odd fashion, as in the case of the Bath letter, as raises the laugh at him all round. This, however, produces no effect on the imperturbable countenance of the Caucasian lord of Hughenden Manor, who knows that his next hit will obliterate all remembrance of his chance failures. This is the case in regard to this wholly unexpected manifesto on the Behar famine, and of which M. Reuter has given us a copious, though not very skilfully compiled, summary. It is not to be supposed that the farmers of Buckinghamshire cherish an anxiety for the salvation of the Bengal ryot, stronger than that which is felt amongst the commercial and professional classes who do know a little of India. But, of course, Mr. Disraeli was speaking to the whole public and the press; and if we accept his utterance only on the low ground of its being a party move, it is so well timed and skilfully calculated in its bearing on the contrast between his own and Mr. Gladstone's party, that it shows artistic and tactical skill of much pith and moment. No one will think that Mr. Gladstone is deficient in conscientious regard for India as compared with other portions of the British Empire; but he has been unfortunate in his Indian Secretaries. The Conservative leader, last, perhaps, he should be thought to cherish any feeling about the alleged threatened recall of Lord Mayo in 1869, goes out of his way to express confidence in Lord Northbrook's personal capacity for dealing with the present crisis. The course having thus been cleared, and the public feeling about the famine having risen to summer heat, Mr. Disraeli proceeds to show, by contrast, what a grave blunder and serious fault the Whig Under Secretary committed when at Elgin, the other day, he dismissed the Behar distress in a cursory passage of his pretentious oration. From the financial bearing of portions of the Conservative leader's speech it is also highly probable that his attention had been drawn to some of the censures, in our own and other journals passed on the political and intellectual callousness manifested by the Duke of Argyll's recent policy. We refer to his Grace continuing to draw, for months together, nearly a million and a half from India, whilst the ruling rate of exchange rendered that process unprecedentedly expensive, and when it was very uncertain what the pressure on the Indian Treasuries would be. . . . We have alluded to Mr. Disraeli's chartered freedom in the way of political suggestion and prediction. It was only to be expected that he would take some means to discount the flattering financial programme of his opponents. But in doing this, it seems to us that he has, perhaps unconsciously, displayed a sweep of financial prevision which, if it can be corroborated in his administrative policy, may result in immense service to this country. But before speechifying to what we refer, it will be convenient to quote here the following remarks made by our Calcutta contemporary, the Englishman, in noticing our recent criticisms on the financial policy of the present Secretary of State: "The Times of India seizes the Duke of Argyll's resolution to reduce the amount of his monthly drawings on this country as an occasion to descant on the cruelty of the policy which, in spite of unfavourable exchange, persists in draining India of funds for which it makes no material return, and hopes that some influential and thoughtful politician at home will be led to look into the subject. The remedy is not very easy to see. Our contemporary seems inclined to look for it in a division of the burthen. But what House of Commons would consent to this? We shall be told, perhaps, that the Conservative leader was only speaking of the temporary necessity of meeting the charges likely to be incurred in relief of the famine; and that 'the claimants of much more powerful character' for whose benefit Mr. Gladstone's proffered surplus may be reserved, are the perishing ryots. It may be so; but we give Mr. Disraeli credit for a more thorough knowledge of the financial relations between England and India than would be indicated by that superficial interpretation of his speech. If we read his utterance to imply that the surpluses on which secure and prosperous England can count should be made available for this long overdue claimant—not on her bounty and generosity, but on her justice—then two of our Calcutta contemporary's queries are already more than half answered. The remedy for the impoverishment of this country by that withdrawal of capital which is inevitable under the present one-sided financial arrangements, is 'very easy' to see and state—England must share the burden, as she has always done with the colonies until their allegiance is almost thrown off. As to the query, what House of Commons will consent to this? we should have been inclined to say the Parliament of 1880 or 1884. But now that Mr. Disraeli, with his fine audacity, has distanced every other statesman of the day by pointing to India 'as a more powerful claimant' for spare surpluses than are any of the 'comparatively miserable interests' which annually besiege the Chancellor of the Exchequer, we might even hope that the new House of Commons will live to break in upon the unmitigated selfish policy which has ever dominated the conduct of English politicians to this magnificent dependency of the Crown. Some figures which we give in another column suffice to show, in terms terribly clear for those who can read the handwriting on the wall, that it is high time a deliverer for India arose amongst English statesmen. Mr. Disraeli may be his herald, and we do not care on what side of the House he will sit."

We have quoted enough to show the interesting character of Mr. Wood's reminiscences—and also the general fairness and impartiality with which he deals with the leading Indian topics of his time. We have much pleasure in commending the book to the attention of our readers.

HOME NEWS.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY COMPANY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Monday May 26, at the offices, Gresham-street; Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., in the chair. Some discussion occurred at the outset of the proceedings with respect to the suggestion of the directors to carry over a certain sum to compensate the staff whose services might not be retained after the Government had taken over the railway. The chairman stated that the discussion was irregular, and, in order, that it might be in order, he moved the adoption of the report, which was seconded by Mr. S. Baxendale. Mr. Garratt then moved an amendment to the effect that a surplus of 15s. per cent., instead of 10s. should be declared. Mr. Kavanagh seconded the amendment, which was opposed by other gentlemen, and was finally withdrawn in deference to the general wish of the meeting. The chairman then proceeded to comment on the report, and recapitulated its main features. Instead of having to congratulate them on a large surplus, they could, he said, show only a small surplus. It was a very singular circumstance, and one which had been remarked upon, that, just as they had concluded the final arrangements with the Government to take over the undertaking, the good fortune which they had hitherto enjoyed appeared to be not likely to follow the change of proprietors. If the retrogression had occurred a year ago it would have made a vast difference to them in the amount they were to receive from the Government as the purchase price of the concern. The falling off in their position was attributable almost entirely to the failure of the jute crop, and there had also been a deficiency in grain and pulse. The passenger traffic showed favourably, and there had been considerable increase in the third and fourth classes. The line and plant were in thorough condition, and the steamers—in fact, everything belonging to the company—were perfectly ready to be handed over to the Government. The motion having been seconded, the chairman, in reply to a question, stated that the prospects of the traffic for the current half-year were very gloomy. They had not received the usual telegram, but, as stated in the report, the gross earnings for the first fifteen weeks had been £116,858, as compared with £160,862 in the same period of 1883. The report was adopted, and a surplus dividend of 10s. per cent. (in addition to the guaranteed dividend of 2½ per cent.) was afterwards declared.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 30,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on the 28th ult. at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were:—In bill on Calcutta, Rs. 37,000, average rate 1s. 7-687d.; Bombay, Rs. 60,000, average rate 1s. 7-687d.; and Madras, Rs. 14,000, average 1s. 7-687d. In telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 2,70,000, average rate 1s. 7-812d.; Bombay, Rs. 5,00,000, average rate 1s. 7-837d.; and Madras, Rs. 4,00,000, average rate 1s. 7-812d., or a total of only Rs. 12,81,000. Tenders for bills on all Presidencies at 1s. 11-16d., and for telegraph transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 13-16d., and above will receive in full. Next week the amount to be offered will be reduced to 25 lakhs. Between April 1 and May 27th the remittances sold had reached Rs. 3,45,08,500, and realised £2,849,679.

OBITUARY.—Major-General Augustus Arthur Currie, C.B., of Her Majesty's Indian Forces (retired), died on the 23rd ult., at St. Leonards-on-Sea. The deceased was the son of the late Mr. John Currie, some time M.P. for Hertford, and was born in 1831. He entered the Bengal Army in 1849, served in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-58, and was promoted to a captaincy in 1861. He was advanced to the rank of Major in 1868, in which year he took part in the Abyssinian war, being present at the action of Arogee and the capture of Magdala. He also commanded the 23rd Punjab Pioneers in the Cabul campaign of 1878-79, and he became Colonel in the latter year. He was nominated a Companion of the Bath in 1879, and was placed on the list of retired Major-Generals in 1881. The gallant officer received medals and clasps for his services in India, and also a medal, and was specially mentioned in despatches, for his services in Abyssinia. He married, in 1862, Emily Louisa, daughter of Mr. James McGregor, of Wooltonhill, Liverpool.

SELF-GOVERNMENT IN INDIA.—Under the auspices of the East India Association, a meeting of officers and gentlemen interested in the affairs of the British Empire in the East was held on Tuesday, May 27, at Westminster Town Hall—Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I., presiding—the subject for consideration being an elaborate paper by Dr. G. W. Leitner, Principal of the Government College and of the Oriental College at Lahore, on the indigenous elements of self-government in India, with special reference to the Punjab, and more particularly in matters of education, as illustrated by the history of the Punjab University movement, from 1865 to the establishment of a branch in London in 1884. In the course of the paper Dr. Leitner urged that whatever view might be held as regards the expediency of the so-called experiments of self-government in India, there could be but little doubt as to the appropriateness of its introduction as regards education—at once the best and safest concession. He was therefore constrained to hold that the recommendations of the recent Indian Education Commission, especially if carried out in the spirit of their report, would retard that consummation, by practically diverting the funds for higher and mass education to the enlargement of the official administrative machinery (unless recourse be had to an increase of taxation in a singularly distasteful form), by suppressing the motives on native liberality, of which such numerous and signal instances have been given, and finally by creating a general spirit of disaffection in their proposed dealing with indigenous schools, the evil results of which could scarcely be overrated. In drawing attention to a consideration of the circumstances which serve to prove that the constitution of native society in India is emphatically autonomous and republican, Dr. Leitner contended that any interference with that autonomy (such as, for instance, is still in a large measure preserved in the administration of castes and tribes) must inevitably lead to the destruction of the Government, however liberal and well-intentioned, that may attempt to anticipate by official measures the course of gradual social dissolution. The identification, on the contrary, of those elements in India that “have a stake in that country” with the British Government by means of their own revered associations, must alike maintain British rule, and further the cause of civilisation, which can only be real if it rests on an indigenous basis and progresses with a natural development. A discussion followed, closing with the customary votes of thanks.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

TUESDAY.—Bar silver has been dealt in to-day to a small extent at 50¾d. per ounce, but the consignment by the Chilean packet has not come to hand yet. Scarcely any business has been done in Mexican dollars, and they are still quoted at 49¾d. Another vessel, the Medway, is almost due from the West Indies, and she is very likely bringing some supplies of both bars and coins. Both the Indian telegraphic transfer rates now stand at 1s. 7 13-16d., China exchange rates remaining unaltered. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper is a little easier at 83¾d. to 83¾d., but there is no change in the Four per Cents., which are still quoted at 81½ to 81¾.

WEDNESDAY.—The market for bar silver has been weaker to-day. The remittance brought by the Medway was sold this morning at 50 13-16d. per ounce—a fall of 1-16d.; and the appearance of the market was still easier at the close, for not only were the Indian exchanges dull at 1s. 7 25-32d. in Calcutta and 1s. 7 13-16d. in Bombay, but the allotment of Council remittances was viewed in an unfavourable light. The bars brought by the Cotopaxi and the Mexican dollars ex Medway have yet to be disposed of. China exchange rates are unaltered, and so is Rupee Paper, there having been very little business.

THURSDAY.—The position of the money markets of the East is at present rather abnormal. A further reduction from 9 to 8 per cent. in the discount rate of the Bank of Bengal has been announced to-day, this being the third change which has been made this month. So far, the directors of the Bank of Bombay, whose discount rates remain at 11 per cent., have not seen the necessity for making any alteration, although it is believed that as the open shipping season in the Bombay Presidency will soon be over owing to the approach of the monsoon, the 3 per cent. difference in the value of money which exists between the two great Indian commercial centres will very shortly be diminished. In consequence of the fresh reduction in the Calcutta discount rate both the Indian rates for telegraphic transfers fell to 1s. 7¾d. In spite of these circumstances, the brokers in the silver market, however, were able to get 50 13-16d. per ounce for the £50,000 worth of bars which were received ex Cotopaxi, the amount offered having been taken on Eastern account. All the supplies available during the last day or two have now been cleared. The Mexican dollars which came to hand per royal mail steamer Medway have to-day been sold for China at 49 13-16d. per ounce, showing a decline of 1-16d. from the last business price. The Shanghai rate for four months' bills has fallen to 5s. 1¾d. in sympathy with the renewed decline in the Indian rates, but no fresh advices have been received from Hongkong. Rupee Paper has been very quiet and is again unaltered.

FRIDAY.—The amount of bar silver brought from Brazil by the Delambre has been sold at 50 13-16d. per ounce for India. Mexican dollars are again quoted at 49 13-16d., but there has been very little business in them, the available supplies having already been absorbed. Exchange rates from India and China and Rupee Paper are likewise all unaltered.

SATURDAY.—There has been no business in bar silver, Mexican dollars, or Rupee Paper, and prices are all unaltered. Eastern exchange rates, where any advices have been received, also show no alteration.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left Chakrata on the 10th ult.

WORKS BY
COLONEL G. B. MALLISON, C.S.I.
FINAL FRENCH STRUGGLES IN INDIA AND THE INDIAN SEAS. Including an account of the Capture of the Isles of France and Bourbon. By Colonel G. B. MALLISON, C.S.I.
London: By W. H. Allen and Co. 1878

"How India escaped from the government of Prefects and Sub-Prefects to fall under that of Commissioners and Deputy-Commissioners; why the Penal Code of Lord Macaulay reigns supreme instead of a Code Napoleon, why we are not looking on helplessly from Mahé, Karik, and Pondicherry, while the French are ruling all over Madras and spending millions of francs in attempting to cultivate the slopes of the Neigherries, may be learnt from this modest volume. Colonel Mallison is always painstaking and generally accurate: his style is transparent, it is never loses sight of the purpose with which he commenced to write."—Saturday Review

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE
OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing FORTNIGHTLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 270 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A LASKARI DICTIONARY,

OR,
ANGLO-INDIAN VOCABULARY OF NAUTICAL
TERMS AND PHRASES IN ENGLISH AND HINDUSTANI.

Chiefly the Corrupt Jargon in use among Laskars or Indian Sailors.

Originally compiled by Captain Thomas Roebuck, Madras Infantry, Professor of Hindustani, Examiner, &c., in the College of Fort William, Calcutta: Revised and corrected by William Carmichael Smyth, Esq., B.C.S., and now carefully re-edited and enlarged by GEORGE SMALL, M.A. MISSIONARY,

Formerly of the B.M.S. at Calcutta and Benares, now to the Laskars, &c., in London, in connection with the Asiatic Strangers' Home, Limehouse.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We have received a copy of what we venture to predict will prove one of the most useful books that ever fell into the hands of a ship's officer—a vocabulary of the sea jargon of Indian laskars. In the brief space of eighty-two pages Mr. Small has given us some 1,400 nautical terms, embracing nearly the whole vocabulary of native crews. We congratulate Mr. Small on the completion of a book which, if it is the least pretentious, is, to our thinking, the most useful and the most enduring of all the books he has yet written."—Statesman, Calcutta.

"Of the value of the present edition, for the intended purpose, it is difficult to speak too highly."—Home News, May 26, 1882.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHES.
COLDS.
ASTHMA.
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.
GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London. REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-estimated medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of infirmity of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Grampyralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878; and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, May 22; Madras and Allahabad, April 21; Calcutta, April 20.

THE letter addressed by the Government of Bengal to the Commissioners of Division on the Bengal Tenancy Bill is a document which will be looked for with keen interest in this country. The idea of conferences of collectors and other responsible officers under the presidency of the various Commissioners is a novel one, with which we deal elsewhere.

THE murder of Lieutenant Dupuis by the Afghans is an event which, under any other Government than the present one, would have created a good deal of stir. Nowadays, however, we are becoming accustomed to this sort of thing.

THE report of the annual meeting of the British Indian Association, which we give in another column, will be read with care by all who take an interest in the land question, so vital in its importance to India. The speeches will all well repay perusal; and we imagine no unbiased person will read them without becoming convinced of the terrible mischief that Lord Ripon's wild schemes of revolution are hatching. The iniquitous Bengal Tenancy Bill is naturally the chief object of attack; but one good hit was made by Dr. Rajendralala Mitra in reference to the miserable abortions which Lord Ripon is pleased to call his "local self-government" measures in the various provinces. "The Bengal Municipalities Bill," he said, "was the outcome in this province of Lord Ripon's self-government minute. He had occasion to read the Bill through carefully, and he could tell them that, owing either to advanced age or to constitutional incapacity, he had found very little of 'self' in it."

THE organ of the Brahmo Somaj suggests that the Government of India must have been in a religious mood of self-abnegation when they consented so entirely to surrender all that part of their scheme which concern "Self."

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times is once more doing a great and most important service to India by bringing very prominently before the British public the growing scandal of "government by picnic in the hills." The Times in its leading columns has unfortunately not supported its correspondent in this matter; but to anyone who knows anything of the subject, the leader which appeared in yesterday's Times in favour of the annual migration to Simla is sufficient in itself to condemn the system. The evils, though minimised, are nevertheless admitted, whilst the defence that is offered is of the flimsiest.

WE are told, for instance, by those who would excuse Lord Ripon's unseemly haste to hurry off to Simla in the middle of the Bengal Tenancy Bill discussion, that the Viceroy finds Simla a more convenient starting place for his winter tour! Obviously no reason is assigned for this belief—for no reason exists. Simla is a long and very toilsome distance from even the nearest railway-station, Umballa; and even when Umballa is reached, it is as far from Allahabad (the centre of the Indian railway system) on one side as Calcutta is on the other.

It certainly seems likely that much of the utter foolishness of Lord Ripon's policy has been due to his immurement in Simla. It may be doubted whether, with his notorious aversion to listen to any language except that of compliance or flattery, he would ever consent to learn even if more trustworthy teachers were present; still, it must be admitted that he has hardly had a fair chance, in an atmosphere heavily charged with the fumes from such censurers as those of Mr. Ilbert and Dr. Hunter.

It is now generally reported in Calcutta that Mr. Ilbert admits having written a certain letter to "Something Khote"—by which language Mr. Ilbert is understood to indicate his inability to remember the name of the worthy Sheriff of Bombay. And it must be clear to every honest mind that it is now a matter of the highest importance, not only for Mr. Ilbert's own reputation, but for the credit of the Government that is responsible for him, that Mr. Ilbert should plainly and honourably state whether the letter to "Something Khote" did or did not contain those incitements to native agitation, not to say sedition, which are known to have been made by a high authority in a letter of this sort.

WE publish elsewhere the article of the Indian Daily News on this subject that has caused so much excitement in Calcutta. We are informed that the authorship of the letter commencing "My dear friend" is very commonly assigned to Dr. Hunter. We believe that Dr. Hunter is at present, or will shortly be, in this country, on official service—to give evidence before the Select Committee on Indian Railways, presumably on the important subject of the fittings of first-class carriages between Calcutta and Simla; and we trust that we may be enabled to publish his disclaimer of this authorship, for a more disgraceful letter was probably never written by any Englishman in India.

ONE of the immediate results of "My dear Friend's" exhortations appears to have been, that Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjee has gone on a stumping expedition among the hardy races of the North West, to "strengthen Lord Ripon's hand"—which, as the subsequent telegrams inform us, he is now doing by drawing comparisons between English and Russian rule, in favour of the latter. To be quite fair, we will extract the description given by the Bengalee, Mr. Bannerjee's own paper, of the aims of this mission. The Bengalee says:—

"On Tuesday last Babu Surendranath Banerjee, special delegate of the Indian Association, left town for the Upper Provinces. He starts on a two-fold mission. In the first place, he will revive the agitation which he himself had set on foot some eight years ago in connection with the rules now in force relating to the admission of candidates to the Civil Service Examination. The effect of these regulations is, as the reader is well aware, to practically close the doors of the Service against the natives of India. The entire Press has condemned these rules. They have also been condemned by eminent authorities in England, by men like Mr. Wren whose views on matters of this description are always entitled to the greatest weight. But notwithstanding all these protests, this almost unanimous verdict of condemnation, the Secretary of State for India openly declared the other day that so far as he was at present advised, he did not consider it necessary to introduce any change in the existing order of things. It is this declaration which has rendered further agitation of the matter an absolute necessity. The agitation will this time be confined to the raising of the maximum limit of age to twenty-one years. But in every case, agitation means money. Without it, we can never hope to make it successful or effective. Indeed money forms the sinews of war. Accordingly, we have all along hailed the National Fund movement with a mixed feeling of hope and joy. Already the movement has spread far and wide, but we must own that the contributions have not yet been in proportion to the measure of sympathy which it has evoked throughout the length and breadth of the country. This is perhaps due to certain wild rumours which have been set afloat by a few interested opponents of the movement, regarding its objects and aims; and we are glad to be able to say that it will be a part of Babu Surendranath's mission, in the course of his tour through the Upper Provinces, to remove all such misimpressions from the public mind. We need not say more on the subject. We will only wish the delegate of the Indian Association every success in his efforts in this direction."

THE Liberal and New Dispensation gives a very sensible warning to those gentlemen who hold views on the Russian advance similar to those which the telegrams say that Mr. Surendra Nath Bannerjee enunciates:—

"Those who are eternally harping upon the neighbourhood of Russia as a source of unmixed good to India, should read General Socheleff's dream about the invasion of this country. 'It should be our chief duty,' he says, 'to organise masses of Asiatic cavalry, and hurling them on India, as our vanguard under the banner of blood and rapine, thus bring back the times of Tamerlane.' What a pleasant prospect for us, to be sure. The holders of the neighbourhood theory do not wish that Russia should conquer India, but that England should gain a few lessons from reverses. A comfortable position for the theorists, no doubt, who would not fight, but it bespeaks a little cowardice. Either declare for Russia or throw yourselves body and soul upon the arms of Britain. A middle course is not manly."

But any way, it is difficult to understand how praise of Russia is likely to "strengthen Lord Ripon's hand."

THE long-talked of separation between the Judicial and the Executive branches of the Civil Service in the Punjab seems about to become a fait accompli. One district (Sirsa), and four divisions are to be suppressed, and a Judicial Service created out of the savings.

HERE is a fine example of the way in which Radical misrepresentations grow till they become accepted facts. It will be remembered that, when a deputation from the Indian Reform Association waited on Lord Kimberley some time ago on the subject of the limit of age for admission to the Civil Service, a report appeared that Lord Kimberley had made, in reply to Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose, an absurdly false statement in regard to Lord Lytton's policy. Lord Lytton himself wrote to the Times to point out that the statement was an untrue one; and shortly afterwards, we were enabled to state, on unimpeachable authority, that Lord Kimberley had never said anything of the kind. Now see what the Bombay Chronicle, a Native paper of usually a moderate type, has to say about it:—

"The following is the report of the interview of the Deputation from the Indian Reform Association with Lord Kimberley as given in the English papers received by post this week. . . . The object of the deputation was to urge the Government to raise the standard of the age for candidate, presenting themselves for examination, with a view to enter the Indian Civil Service. The report as given discloses that Lord Lytton was probably the worst Governor General that the natives of India have ever had since the British ascendancy in the country. To him the natives owed any amount of discouragement in their political aspirations as British subjects. Not satisfied with openly doing his worst as regards acts of hostility to the just aspirations of the Natives—as witness his behaviour towards the leading Natives when making petitions and presenting memorials in respect of the public measures of the Government, his treatment of the Native Press, &c.—he secretly plotted against those Natives. One instance of such plotting that has just come to our knowledge is of a manner that may be considered as being outrageous beyond endurance, unless satisfactory extenuating reasons for the course pursued by His Lordship are forthcoming. It was his attempt to shut out the Natives of India from the privilege accorded to them by Acts of Parliament and Royal Charter for enabling them to share in the honours and emoluments of the higher grades of the public service of the country. The plot against the poor Natives—for such it was—of the ex-Governor General to which we refer is indicated in Lord Kimberley's reply to a member of the deputations as given at the end of the report."

And the Indian Mirror further enlarges on the same point:—

"But Lord Kimberley communicated a piece of information, which throws full light on the dark parts of Lord Salisbury's policy. In answer to a member of the deputation, we are informed:—

"Lord Kimberley said he was aware that Lord Lytton had written to Lord Cranbrook to get an Act of Parliament passed to prevent natives becoming civil servants, but if that could not be done, then the age for passing an examination should be lowered, which would practically have the same effect. The deputation then withdrew."

"After this disclosure, it would hardly be useful to prolong the discussion of this question. But we must confess we are extremely surprised that, knowing how Lord Lytton, during his miserable Viceroyalty, had thoroughly abused his powers and his opportunities to do whatever could oppress, harm, and irritate the princes and people of India, he was not ashamed to lend himself to use his authority for the perpetuation of a policy so opposed to Liberal principles and so injurious to the cause of Native advancement. That Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Salisbury, with idle and visionary dreams of an Imperialism incompatible with the genius and traditions of the British Constitution, should have found in Lord Lytton a ready and serviceable instrument to press the yoke more strongly and firmly on the neck of the Indian people, is quite worthy of men who have done more towards bringing about a disintegration of the British Empire, than the members of any British Cabinet since the United States of America threw off their allegiance to the British Crown."

THE Englishman has the following report on the Calcutta Freight Market, corrected up to May 20:—

"The week under review does not present much of interest to write about. Steamers have done their best to make the most of existing circumstances and a slight advance has been obtained in retail engagements. For sailing vessels there has been very little demand, one ship took the berth for London and another obtained a charter for Liverpool. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 37,000 tons. The long period of a depressed freight market, which we have been for some time passing through cannot be said to be over yet, and there are no visible signs of any reaction in the near future. Business generally is no doubt depressed, and the hopeless state of the wheat trade by over production is one of the causes, but on the other hand there cannot be any doubt of the consequences of the rage for steamer building a few years ago, which are now acutely felt, as there is no employment to be found for the hundreds of steamers laid up at the home ports. Those which continue to run, must do so at a loss to their owners. To reduce this as much as possible, and in order to run steamers at a minimum of cost with a maximum of earnings, the tendency is to build them of larger and still larger dimensions, one vessel carrying now double, and not unfrequently treble the quantity of cargo its predecessor could accommodate some half dozen years ago. The same tendency towards increased capacity is observable in sailing vessels, the newest ships having a net register tonnage of from 1,800 to 2,000 tons; a ship of 1,400 to 1,500 tons is now talked of as a vessel of moderate size. These facts ought not to be lost sight of in considering the future of freight prospects."

WE take the following account of the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s Report:—

"We are glad to be able to report considerable improvement in the prospects of the crop generally during the past fortnight, the long-wished-for rain having fallen more or less freely over the greater portions of the indigo growing districts. In Behar, the rainfall in Champarum and Tirhoot was, except at a few factories, sufficiently heavy to allow of the empty lands being filled in, but Chuprah was not as fortunate in this respect as the other districts, the fall having been generally light, a portion of the Zillah only getting sufficient rain to sow upon. So far as our advices go, the old crop has been greatly improved by the rain, and the new sowings have come up well. These latter, however will require favourable weather with timely rain to bring them to maturity Lower Bengal.—Prospects have improved considerably during the past week or so, but even with the improvement, we cannot look for anything more than ordinary outturns from any of districts, except Jessore, which was fortunate in getting timely rain. So far Jessore has the best, and Bhagulpore and Purneah the worst prospects. The reports from the Dooars generally are better, the fall of rain having been sufficiently heavy to help on the sowings."

THE same firm gives the following on the Calcutta Tea Market:—

"Auctions were resumed on the 15th instant. The quality offered was decidedly inferior to the first teas of last season, with the exception of a few invoices from the Dooars and Kanga Valley Districts. Prices for all descriptions, and especially for Pekoe Souchongs, were lower, to the extent of two annas per pound, than those of last year."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending May 23:—

"The Rev. T. Bliss, officiating chaplain of Negapatam; Khan Bahadur Eduljee Pestonjee, honorary magistrate at Mhow."

The Secretary of State for India has sanctioned the revision of the salary of the appointment of adjutant, Malwa Bhil Corps, which has hitherto been fixed at a consolidated sum of Rs. 500 a month. In future the adjutant of this local corps will receive the same aggregate allowances as adjutants of corps of the line—viz., staff pay Rs. 200, and office allowance Rs. 50 a month, in addition to the Staff Corps pay of the officer's rank. The appointment is at present held by Captain E. D. F. Bignell, Bengal Staff Corps.

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated June 8:—

"Although the Government has announced as final its decision to remove the military accounts office from Madras to Bangalore, public opinion seems by no means inclined to admit the necessity or propriety of the step. The Press, not only in the Southern Presidency, but also in various other parts of India, generally condemns the proposed removal, and frequently uses it as the text for an attack on the whole system of government from the hills. That system is well described by the Madras Mail as a subordination of the convenience and interests of the public to the personal comfort of a few Europeans and as a public scandal which cannot be too soon disallowed. The Calcutta Statesman, while willing that the Viceroy, who comes to India in advanced life, and such of his colleagues as are ailing, should make an annual resort to the hills, proceeds to protest against the removal of all the establishment in their train, regardless of the cost to the public and the demoralisation that attends the practice, and characterises it as government of a thoroughly unconscious order, and an abuse so gigantic that it cannot possibly last.

"The Times of India says that if Madras is to be governed from Ootacamund, the local government might as well be abolished and the affairs of the Presidency be directed from Simla. This argument would apply with equal force to Bombay; indeed, it might be carried further, and applied to India generally, for it is hardly an exaggeration to say that the Viceroy and the Council could govern India as easily and as well from London as from Simla. The news that Mr. Gorst has questioned the Under Secretary of State on the subject of migration to the hills has excited much interest in this country, and it is earnestly to be hoped that Parliament will insist on a searching inquiry into the practice which, while vexatious to the subordinate employes, is costly to the public and dangerous to the country. It has nothing to recommend it save that it ministers to the comfort of two or three score high officials, whose pay was fixed on the understanding that they were prepared to brave the perils and discomforts of a tropical climate.

"Harvest prospects in Lower Bengal have much improved of late; there has been a fairly plentiful rainfall in most parts of the province, especially in the northern and eastern districts, and any scarcity that may follow the failure of last winter's crops is now likely to be confined to portions of the districts of Monghyr, Bogra, Maldah, and Mezzufferpore. Some small relief works are being carried on in those localities. The news from most of the tea districts also is fairly good, while the indigo crops, although likely to be poor, will hardly be a total failure, as was once expected.

"The Punjab judicial system is about to be remodelled. The Commissioners and Deputy-Commissioners will be relieved of their judicial work and will be confined to executive and magisterial functions. Eleven district judges, ten assistant, and seventeen subordinate judges will be appointed. Provision will also be made for improving the system of appeals. The districts and divisions will be reduced and distributed, the former being reduced by one—namely, Sirsa, and the latter by four, and various alterations will be made in the arrangement of official grades. The scheme has received the sanction of the Secretary of State, and will be introduced when the necessary Act has passed through the Legislature.

"A hitch appears to have occurred in the arrangement for the Bombay Exhibition. It was stated at a meeting of the Exhibition Committee on Friday that the Government had declined to take over the materials to be used in the construction of the exhibition at 75 per cent. of the cost price, but offered to take them at 60 per cent. The committee considered the offer not liberal enough, and that if the Government could not increase it it would be better not to hold the exhibition at present.

"A son and heir was born to the Maharajah of Mysore on Wednesday, great rejoicings being held.

"The treaty between Nepal and Thibet has been signed. By its terms Thibet agrees to pay ten lakhs of rupees with interest within seven years, and to punish the persons who robbed Nepalese traders at Lhasa. The Nepalese troops are returning from the frontier.

"The Ameer has ordered the Cabul arms manufactory to supply 300 breech-loading rifles and 100 field guns. The Kafils of Durrai Nur, are said to have assembled, and to be threatening disturbances. The fall of Maimena, which is now fully confirmed, will materially strengthen the Ameer's position, as the Wali of Maimena was a staunch adherent of Ayoo Khan.

"The men implicated in the murder of Lieutenant Dupuis were tried at Quetta, on Tuesday. One man and two boys were convicted of the actual murder. The man was sentenced to death, and was hanged the next morning, the body being afterwards burnt. The boys were transported for life. Several others were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment for concealing the murder. They belong to the Yassingai Pathans, who occupy the villages between Khushdil Khan Kilu and Karbala.

"A report from Cabul of doubtful authenticity states that a Russian agent has been there for some months, that he is not an Asiatic, but a true Muscovite, and that he is now about to be relieved by another Russian.

"Rumours were lately current that a Russian officer was prisoner at Herat. It appears that the prisoner in question is a Daghestani of the Lesghi tribe, and holds a commission in the Russian service like Alitchanoff, who is also a Lesghi. He was captured at Kushk, where he went, he says, without the knowledge of his superiors. He came from Merv. He is well treated, and merely kept under surveillance pending the Ameer's orders.

"The Calcutta Englishman states that it has good reason to believe that an Anglo-Russian Commission will proceed early in the autumn to demarcate the northern frontier of Afghanistan, and that an agreement has been arrived at to the effect that the frontier line will be the Oxus as far as Khoja Sulch, and will thence trend with a circular contour southward and westward along the margin of cultivated land to a point south of Pul-i-Khatun, on the Heri Rud River. This line is considerably south of that generally marked on English maps.

"It is reported from Bagdad that the plague has broken out near Bedra Zarbutisk and Jassan on the Persian frontier, and that these places have been surrounded by a sanitary cordon."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

RECENT MILITARY BOOKS.*

"THE Biography of Frederick the Great," by Colonel C. B. Brackenbury, will be a necessary addition to military libraries, and of great value to all military students. In the first place, though in good, legible type, it is comparatively a small book—a very different affair from Carlyle's ten volumes—although it comprises all essential information. In the second place, it has really good maps and plans detached, and printed on indestructible material. These are mainly the same as those in Carlyle's books, which could hardly be improved on, but for advantages of portability they are reduced in scale; it is, however, easy to enlarge the scale at pleasure by use of a magnifying glass, and the detail is so well drawn that it rather gains by this. In fact, if inclined to be captious, we should say that there was too much detail and names of places unconnected with the campaigns introduced into the maps of the theatres of war. Frederick the Great's strategy was not at all brilliant; it was in tactics that he proved himself a great master of the military art, hence his battles are the chief points of interest and study; and these are very thoroughly gone into by Colonel Brackenbury, who has probably seen as much of continental war as any man in Europe; it may be on the principle that spectators see most of the game that he has had greater advantages than any man, and used them. Hence the little short critiques on the battles which he occasionally enters on are of especial value. There is a very good one on the Battle of Prague, which would particularly apply at the present time to India as well as England.

"The one great lesson—and it is of vital importance to Englishmen—which we may draw from this battle is, that an army immovably fixed in one position which has extremities not resting on impassable barriers may always be attacked and defeated on one of those extremities. Only by offensive manoeuvres is success possible. The enemy must be beaten, not merely repulsed. The idea, too prevalent in this country, that England could be successfully defended by unskilled militia and volunteers taking up a series of positions, is a vain imagination, natural to minds bent upon bricks and mortar, but rejected by all masters of strategy and tactics. And the same rule applies to the defence of other countries, such as Turkey."

It is not very easy to describe Colonel Whinyates's book.† In one sense it is a record merely of the services of the C Battery A Brigade Royal Horse Artillery, but it goes far beyond a mere record, for full details are given of the war services of the battery and a considerable addition is made to historical knowledge of Sir John Moore's expedition and the Crimean campaign. In the first campaign the diary of the battery commander is published, showing in detail the marching and counter marching that took place, and in the second campaign several disputed points in the battles are enlarged on with the additional information afforded by officers and others with the battery; notably the case of the charges of the Heavy and Light Brigades at Balaclava. There is probably no one, even a war correspondent, unless he have considerable military knowledge, who is in so good a position to give a fair and accurate account of incidents in a battle as an officer of artillery, who, from the nature of his arm, is often, as in this special case, waiting and watching for the opportunity to break into the action with all the terrible effect at his command, while in the meantime, forced to remain passive, nothing can go on in his front without catching his attention. Information from such unprejudiced eye witnesses is the most valuable and reliable, and has been brought forward in the account of Sebastopol. The opening chapter is worthy of being printed separately, for it gives the clearest idea of the value and use of horse artillery in the fewest possible words. For this purpose it would be of excellent service to civilians and officers of the other branches of the army.

There are useful maps to accompany the Corunna campaign and the battle of the Alma. It is curious to notice that in one of the best sketches of the Alma—that given in Home's "Precis of Tactics," and generally followed—there is no sign of any artillery whatever on the side of the Allies, and there is nothing in his text to lead to the supposition that any artillery were present on our side in the action. In point of fact, as is obvious from the account of Col. Whinyates's book, the artillery were almost ignored and allowed to take such independent action as they thought suitable, which was hardly the best possible arrangement for attacking an enemy posted in a strong defensive position. The map of the Balaclava ground is on a large scale, probably six inches to the mile, though this is not stated as it should have been, and seems taken from the large military sketch of the Crimea, done by the Royal Engineers. The position of the troops referred to has been clearly marked on it and their movements can be distinctly followed.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.

THE Army and Navy Magazine for this month contains an article by Colonel Malleon on Valentine Baker, whose career is certainly one of the most remarkable in the present day, and whose undeniable military talents ought not to be lost to his country. An Admiral advocates permanent crews in Her Majesty's Navy which would tend to keep that esprit de corps for ships crews which does so much for regiments. Colonel Hildyard's account of a visit to the capital of Southern Morocco will be found very valuable and interesting. The Colonel is a man who keeps his eyes open, and the country is one little known at present but likely to come into prominent notice before long. Mr. Hooper continued the excellent papers on "Pepys as an Official" which when completed will make a capital and most readable volume. There is a very amusing skit entitled "Why I resigned," by Ignotus; though we think the writer is rather hard on the volunteers. In discussing "Another Year of Naval Administration," Mr. Mark Fytton looks in vain for any sign of an intelligent or intelligible naval policy, as indeed he may, the chief policy of our present Government being merely to keep in Office anyhow and let matters of imperial interest or defence slide as of minor importance. Mr. Phillip's novel "Man Proposes" is continued and the present chapters will be found full of incident.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PROPOSED RUSSO-AFGHAN FRONTIER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—A Reuter's telegram from Simla, of yesterday's date, says:—

"It is expected that a mixed English and Russian commission will proceed in the autumn to the northern border of Afghanistan to mark out the frontier. An agreement has, it is understood, been arrived at between the British and Russian Governments providing in general terms that the frontier shall follow the course of the Oxus as far as Khojah Salah, whence it will proceed south and west, taking a circular course along the margin of cultivation to Pul-i-Khatun on the Hari Rud river."

In other words, Her Majesty's Government, having acquiesced in the Russians securing, in excess of Merv, a lodgment at Old Sarakhs, intend, if this news be true, to surrender a valuable slice of fertile Afghan territory, and allow them to approach yet fifty-two and a half miles nearer Herat, to say nothing of receding south along the bank of the Murghab.

Established at Pul-i-Khatun, the Russians will be within 150 miles of Herat, and eighty of Meshed, our garrison at Quetta being at the same time 514 miles from Herat. Distant as Quetta is 145 miles from Candahar, and separated from it by a more difficult road, the Russians will be able to occupy Herat from Pul-i-Khatun before our Quetta troops can even sight Candahar.

There is no reason whatever why Russia should be permitted to make a fresh advance from Sarakhs to Pul-i-Khatun. She could control the Turcomans and maintain order along her frontier just as easily from the former place. The effect of this new surrender of Her Majesty's Government is to admirably enlarge the Russian base at Sarakhs, to give Russia an area of several hundred miles of fertile territory where she can organise the operations against Herat.

Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff has announced that the Transcaspian Railway is to be extended to Askabad, distant 388 miles from Herat. Our Indian line is only sanctioned to Quetta, 514 miles from Herat.

The annexation of Merv was bad, the annexation of Sarakhs was worse, but in this alleged intended advance to Pul-i-Khatun, affairs seem to me to have reached a climax, calling for an indignant energetic protest on the part of the public against the proposed arrangement.

RAILWAYS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The Committee of the House of Commons on Indian Railways is to re-assemble to-morrow, and I beg you to urge that the railway from Bombay to Jubulpoor is liable to be broken at any time even in these times of peace; how then can it be kept in order during an insurrection?

On pages 5 and 6 of the report of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, dated the 13th current, signed by Colonel J. Holland, the chairman, I find that the bridges over two streams, three miles distant from each other, about twenty-two miles north of Bhosawul, and twelve south of Boorhampoor, were washed away last year, and goods traffic was for one month entirely suspended. This stoppage not only blocked all the railway stations in the Nerbudda valley, but it also blocked all traffic from the East Indian Railway, the North Western Provinces, and from the parts of Central India reached by the G. I. Peninsula Railway Company through the Rajpootana Line (see par. 8 of Colonel Holland's Report).

Will the Right Honourable W. Baxter, Priy Councilor and Member of Parliament consider our military necessities for a moment? We may lose India for want of a rail between Nagpoor and Jubulpoor, and if so great a calamity should fall on us, every member of the committee of the House of Commons will be responsible. They have received repeated warnings in Allen's Indian Mail.—Your obedient servant,
June 9.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

CEYLON AND INDIAN TEA.

At the present time a deal of attention is being directed towards Ceylon and its production of tea, which, at any rate, so far as regards quality, has during last season stood out in bold relief, and has caused our planters to gird up their loins for the struggle to come this year. The brokers at home seem all pretty well to be of one mind, and that is, that Ceylon teas have excelled Assam, Cachar and Darjeeling, growths of the past season, with one or two notable exceptions. There is no doubt that standard teas such as Budderpore, Borokai, Dooteriah, and Kalej Valley, and others, are quite able to hold their own in the competition, and with something in hand, but how few are there amongst Indian teas compared to those quoted in Ceylon as attaining high values. With the information at present available it cannot satisfactorily be explained how this comes about. Can it be put down to climatic influences, or what? If so, it would appear that much land is available for tea culture which was before considered useless. We can scarcely think that our planters have lost their cunning in preparing the article, and we are inclined to think that locality has a good deal to do with it. Many years ago planters were wading in darkness with regard to manufacture, yet their teas invariably fetched high prices. Can it be that the broker has been taken in by a new article, and that, after the newness has worn off, it will be discovered that Ceylon teas like Indian ones lose their keeping qualities in a few years? No, we cannot accept this explanation. Perhaps the one most difficult thing to explain is the reputed enormous yield per acre, combined with the fine quality. With regard to some of those companies quoted above, the only one which, as a public company, is referred to by our home contemporary, the Home and Colonial Mail, Borokai, is put down as consisting of 824 acres, which gives a yield of 199,200 lbs., or about 3 mds. per acre; this is but a poor result as far as regards outturn, but looking at the dividend declared, it seems to bear uncommonly good fruits. In 1882 the result was 11 per cent., which, considering the season, was highly satisfactory, and is best judged by its heading the list in dividends for that year as quoted on the London Exchange. Could Borokai produce at the same rate as the Ceylon gardens are said to do? We leave our readers to figure out what the result would be. Turn again to the labour question, and we find that Ceylon like Assam has to import its labour; but, although it does so, it would appear from all we can learn as if better arrangements were in vogue there than at present exist in Assam. In Ceylon the labour question is more nearly of a kin to the Docars, and what is there known as the sirdaree system; and we believe that although the Ceylon planter pays perhaps a higher daily wage, having no bonus to pay, besides many other little comforts the Assam immigrant is supplied with, the result is at the end of the year cheaper working all round, and a contented labour force untrammelled with all the red-tapeism which is considered so necessary for a coolie the moment he leaves his Mooluck for the tea districts.

There are many points with which we are unacquainted, that no doubt may tend to give a high yield in Ceylon, such as the rainfall and the close proximity to the sea. The latter no doubt is open to question as an advantage, but as a rule very heavy dews fall at night all along a coast line, so that if the rainfall is less when tea flourishes best, it may be that nature supplies the want in the excessively heavy dews. The temperature, too, is not to be lost sight of in taking everything into consideration, and being so near the equatorial line, the variation in temperature cannot be very great; which of course allows plucking to be carried on pretty nearly all the year round. Java teas have long been famed for their liquors, but somehow extension in cultivation there has not been rapid, nor would it, so far as one can learn, be attended with a large outturn per acre. Some years we saw tea in Java and the Straits Settlements flourishing fairly well, but we were by no means impressed with it as anything extraordinary in the way of outturn. The soil seemed much the same as what we understand the Sylhet gardens mostly is—namely, a light, sandy loam, very subject to wash unless carefully cultivated. The Maharajah of Johore, we believe, proposes going in for tea cultivation on a large scale, but as we have never heard of it as a success, we imagine it did not turn out the good thing it was expected. From the number of new names of estates in Ceylon that duly appear in the sale lists, it would appear as if there was now a pretty considerable area under tea in the island. At any rate, being in such an equitable climate, we must not forget in comparing the results of the sales, that the Ceylon teas that met our Indian produce in July and August are the Ceylon second or third flush meeting the first flush from India. That this is an important factor no one will deny, and we will perhaps in a year or two, when many private concerns are converted into limited companies, be better able to judge from the share lists, whether the result at the end of the year is so widely different from our Indian estates, as rumour would at present have us believe. One thing the Ceylon planter seems to beat our Indian planter in, and that is in putting his wares before the purchaser. From remote corners in New Zealand we have lately heard that Ceylon teas are to displace Indian, and that we have a formidable rival now in addition to China. Well done, Ceylon; nothing like it. The colonies are somewhat like America, and are to be done best by advertising, and the Ceylon planter seems to have found it out, and that too quickly. Able to hold their own in outturn and prices, what more is left? We advise our Indian friends to be on the qui vive.

THE CAPTURE OF MERV BY THE RUSSIANS.

THE following account of a Turkoman eye-witness to the occupation of Merv has reached us:—

I arrived at Merv on the 7th Jamadi-ul-Awal—6th March, 1884, and stayed with the Bakshis. (a) I found that some weeks before, two Russian officers with Maksud Alikhanoff, Leaghi, and fifty Akhal horsemen, had come to Merv and persuaded a number of the elders to accompany them to Askabad. Among those who went were Sari Batur, Aman Sa'at, Takan Bai, Mir Attar Beg, Ba'ileh Khan, some of the Bakshis, the brother of Makdum Kuli Khan, Murad Bai, Aman Shah, Barguleb Khan, 'Oon Begi and Jomut Teli, from the Amanshahs, Kunkurs and Vakils. (b) News had been received in Merv that the elders just mentioned had come to terms with the Russians, and tendered their submission to the Czar. It was expected that they would return in a few days, and would bring some Russian troops with them. Some of the elders, who had not gone to Askabad, were opposing the movement, and declared that they would not submit to the Russians without fighting. I stayed in order to see how events would turn out.

On the 9th Jamadi-ul-Awal—8th March, 1884, the elders came back to Merv with the intelligence that the Russian troops were following them. They invited their tribesmen to take out water to the troops on camels, and some of the Turcomans were ready to comply with this request. But Baba Khan and Kajjar Khan, (c) who were the chiefs of the anti-Russian party, prevented them from doing so by threatening to kill their camels if they gave away any assistance to the Russians. Kajjar Khan proceeded to exhort his men to resist the proposed submission to the Russians by force of arms if necessary.

On the 11th, Maksud Alikhanoff, with a hundred Russian and Akhal horsemen, arrived at Akiab. Kajjar Khan and Hakim Khan called their followers to arms. Maksud Alikhanoff sent a messenger to inform them that Yanur Sahib (d) was at Ata twelve miles from Akiab with a brigade, and to warn them that any resistance would be offered in vain. Kajjar Khan would not listen to this advice, but proceeded to call out his men. Abdul Bai, the elder of Akiab, with whom Maksud Alikhanoff was staying, and all the elders of the pro-Russian party, advised Maksud Alikhanoff to retire on to Ata, and run no risk with the handful of men he had with him. Maksud Alikhanoff accordingly returned to Ata, and joined the forces encamped there. On the same night some of Kajjar Khan's men marched to Ata and fired into the Russian camp. The fire was returned and the Tekkes withdrew.

On the 12th, all the Tekke elders, except Kajjar Khan, Baba Khan, and Hakim Khan, went to Ata in order to escort the Russians into Merv. The Russians had brought their water with them from Tejen. They advanced from Ata to Akiab and encamped there. They numbered about 2,000 horse and foot, and had two guns with them.

Shortly after their arrival at Akiab, the Russians sent a message to Baba Khan, and prevailed on him to come into our camp. They then presented Baba Khan with a khilat and six hundred tomans. He was then induced to tender his submission to the Russian Government. The Russians then sent for Kajjar Khan and invited his confidence. Kajjar Khan said that he would be guided solely by the wishes of his tribe. The Russians offered Kajjar Khan a khilat of the same value as that which they had given Baba Khan, but Kajjar Khan declined to accept it until he had consulted his tribesmen. Kajjar Khan then left the Russian Camp. The next day he collected a force of about eight thousand horse and foot, and incited them to fight against the infidels. He was also joined by Ahmed Shah, a follower of Siahposh Khan. They marched to Akiab. As they neared the Russian camp, they were opposed by some four hundred Russian troops. A skirmish ensued, in which the Tekkes lost three or four men killed and wounded. They were driven back and dispersed. It is not known where Kajjar Khan has gone. The Tekkes are now perfectly quiet, and have given up all thoughts of resisting the Russians. Sarikhani of Yolatan arrived from Orunj on the 14th to pay a visit to Yanur Sahib. It may be now said that Merv is in the hands of the Russians.

Yanur, the Russian officer, wished to build a fort near the bazaar in Kala Koushid Khan. The Mervis protest against this, and have asked that the fort may be built near the fort of Muhammad Niaz Bai. The Russians object to this site, on account of the difficulty of obtaining supplies there; and I do not doubt that they will carry out their first intentions. Maksud Alikhanoff intends to visit Pul-i-Khisti in order to inquire into Panjeh affairs. The Tekkes of Merv believe that the Russians will build an outpost at Pul-i-Khisti. (e)

Siahposh Khan is being kept under surveillance in Yolatan by Galdi Morad Khan. He had borrowed 6,000 krans which he has no means of repaying.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

WHO IS THE TRAITOR?

To a thoughtful and observant mind, one of the most interesting features of the hour in India is the persistent way in which the natives indulge in lip-loyalty towards Lord Ripon. No occasion is ever lost of administering to his Lordship some service of flattery, or of singling him out personally for the most extravagant praise, or of assuring him that he has won a special and permanent place in the affections of the natives. Strange to say, all this appears to be devoted to the man at the head of the Government; whilst for the Government, as a body, there is nothing but a ceaseless outcry of complaint, a perpetual arraignment, a constant, and continual holding it up to the natives as a very embodiment of selfishness, unprincipled oppression, and wrong-doing. The contrast between the exaltation of the man, and the attacks, infused with a bitterness and a political purpose never before seen in native journalism, upon the Government is so marked as to strike even the most unobservant. Then, again, the English, as a community in India, are, day by day, and week by week, held up in the columns of the native Press to the hatred, detestation, and political animosity of the natives, and yet the Chief of the English community is declared to be an object of veneration, of intense love, of unflinching hope, of unfaltering trust. Is this contrast healthy? It is a healthy and encouraging sign of the times that such a contrast should be drawn between the Viceroy and his countrymen? Is it to the well-being, or the stability of the Empire, that the masses of the natives should be taught that such a contrast is not only possible, but that it is true? Can it be, then, that Lord Ripon represents the native movement against the superiority, and against the very position of his countrymen in India? Can, in fact, any Viceroy be popular in the best acceptation of the term, when his popularity is a reproach in the mouth of the natives to the rule of his country, and an attack upon the very existence and position of his countrymen? We have said that the popularity of Lord Ripon is the praise of the lip merely. It is of the brain, not of the heart. It is one of those contrasts in which the subtle intellects of the natives delight, and a weapon by which their leaders hope to obtain a given end—that end being the use of the power vested in the Viceroy himself to weaken the strong hold of England upon the many lands and many races which compose India. We have repeatedly challenged the native Press to take up and examine the financial measures of the present Administration, but without effect. That task is avoided, for the very plain and sufficient reason that any analysis of the administration of the finances for the past four years would make it impossible for the natives to put Lord Ripon forward as in any way a friend of India. We have often wondered why there should be this affectation of admiration for the individual, side by side with such unusual and such excessive bitterness against the community,—a bitterness which goes the length of picturing the ordinary Englishman in India as a man distinct from his countrymen, as they are at home, opposed to the national wishes, and antagonistic to the national policy; which, in fact, seeks to teach the people of India that opposition to, and hatred of, Englishmen in India, is the best way of serving England and of anticipating the wishes and policy of the people of England towards this country. The phenomenon can only be the result of a mighty misunderstanding, and can only be the shadow of impending troubles, and of serious administrative difficulties. In December last, we had the misfortune, in the discharge of a public duty, to arraign the conduct of a high official, who appeared to have introduced into India the novel idea of directing native agitation from above. It seems to us then, and it seems so still, that if the natives believed they were, in carrying on an agitation, acting in conformity with the wishes, or strengthening the hands of Lord Ripon and his confidential advisers, they would be bound to indulge in a parade of personal loyalty, and to stand by him though thick and thin. An impression of this sort, once created, makes lip popularity a necessity, for the agitations represents an alliance where the one side suggests a grievance, and the other supplies a so-called public opinion. The result is a two-fold deception, so far as the public of England are concerned. On the one hand, Lord Ripon is represented as the idol of the natives, and on the other native public opinion is represented as, informed, spontaneous, intelligent, and powerful.

There reached us by post the other day a printed circular bearing the names of two of the most prominent Parsee citizens of Bombay. The papers are intended for circulation amongst the natives, but not for publication in native newspapers. They deal with an important public question, and we, therefore, consider it our duty to disregard their pseudo-private character. They are not in our opinion private documents at all, but papers of an essentially public character, intended to serve a public purpose, and to generate what may pass for public opinion. They are only private in the sense that they are to be kept from the knowledge of Europeans. We give them as they reached us:—

16, Marine-street, Bombay, April 9, 1884.

Dear Sir,—We daresay the Secretary of State's refusal to consider the desirability of raising the age of the Civil Service candidate has pained you as much as it has pained us. But it will serve us little to sit quietly nursing the grief. The subject is one to which we attach the utmost importance. Lord Ripon will not be able, however anxious, to obtain the change unless the country, as a whole, moves in the matter. We appeal to you, therefore, to lose no time in getting every association on your side to represent India's wishes to the authorities, each in its own words, temperately, but laying the greatest stress upon the necessity for this reform. Pray make the suggestion to your leading citizens at once. Never was there such pressing need for united action.

We quote overleaf for your private information, the views in this connection of an honoured English friend, who is in the best position to advise us, and whose advice we have always gratefully acted upon. Yours faithfully, Dadabhai Naoroji Behramji M. Malabari.

April 4, 1884.

My dear Friend,—Since writing to you a few days ago I have received information which shows that the Secretary of State has been induced to take an unfavourable view of the question of raising again the maximum limit of age for candidates for admission to the Covenanted Civil Service.

I feel quite sure that Lord Ripon, who, I know, holds most decided opinions on the subject, will continue to do all in his power to induce Lord Kimberley to reconsider the matter. But the Secretary of State and his Council will pay ten times more attention to the House of Commons than to any representations Lord Ripon may make; especially if the letter does not succeed in securing (and I myself fear this is doubtful) the unanimous concurrence of his Council.

If the natives really care about the question, as I believe that they do, now is the time for them to strengthen the Viceroy's hands by numerous and influential memorials couched in moderate language and addressed to the Secretary of State, though of course forwarded through the regular official channels.

I think that in my last* I advocated rather influential than numerous memorials. Knowing what I now do, I recommend both, as many Memorials as possible, and one at least from every influential Association, Sabha, &c.

If a general and strong interest is felt in the matter, and undoubtedly this latter is one of primary importance, then that interest should now be shown.

If it does not exist, or, what is practically the same thing, if it be not apparent, the question must lie over—and who can say when we may again get a Viceroy who thinks as we do in this matter and is anxious himself to get the required reform pushed through? Most certainly now unless we do rally round him in force, let him wish ever so much, the Viceroy will hardly be able to accomplish this.—Yours very sincerely,

We can scarcely imagine that these papers are forgeries, or that any one would be guilty of using the names of Messrs. Naoroji and Malabari without their sanction, knowledge, or approval. If the papers are forgeries, then there is in existence at Bombay a most unprincipled and unscrupulous propaganda, whose business it is to stir up native agitation by the basest means. But then, again, the circular may be genuine; and in this case it is a matter of the very highest concern to Englishmen in England and in India to find that behind the native agitation there is "an Englishman" of "position" who has found the natives' grievances subjects for agitation. The following paragraph seems to account for much that during the past four years otherwise would appear to be without a raison d'être.

We quote overleaf, for your private information, the views in this connection of an honoured English friend, who is in the best position to advise us and whose advice we have always gratefully acted upon.

Who can this "honoured English friend" be, who, speaking with a strong show of authority, can represent Lord Ripon as requiring to be strengthened by a native agitation against his own Council and against the Secretary of State? The matter is one which requires to be cleared up, not on the low ground of an individual's misinterpretation of his duty, or misconception of the obligations and responsibilities of high position, but on the far higher ground of the honour of the Government of India, and the good government and well-being of the Empire.—Indian Daily News.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

In the discussions which have taken place regarding the Rent Bill, both in the deliberations of the Legislative Council and in the columns of the Press, one of the chief cruces has been the prohibition of contract as between landlord and tenant. At first sight it seems a very extraordinary interference with the liberty of the subject, not only to prevent contracts being valid in the future, but also to break the force of contracts already existing. With regard to the latter, it seems to any impartial observer perfectly indefensible. It has been asserted, and probably asserted with truth, that certain contracts which have come to light disclose a system of fraud which no one can defend. Mr. Ilbert instanced one in his first speech on the Bill, and it certainly was about as bad a transaction as could well be conceived. It does not, however, appear a logical sequence that, because one man commits an offence which brings him within the range of the law provided for cheating, every other member of his class is to be debarred from carrying on his business in the manner common to civilised men, and that a bar is at once to be put to the system of contract which has hitherto been the basis of all dealings between landlords and their tenants. The case, as put by the advocates of the Rent Bill, is thus. The rayats are an ignorant lot of people. They are liable to be got at by designing zemindars, and, under pressure, they will contract themselves out of their just rights. We shall, therefore, render this impossible by declaring that every contract by which a rayat contracts himself out of the benefit of this act shall be worth the paper upon which it is written, and no more. The veriest squatter shall not be liable for the fulfilment of the obligations into which he entered, as a condition precedent to his being allowed to occupy land as a non-occupancy rayat, and in fact the zemindar shall be the only person who can suffer the consequences of his own actions. Now, whilst those who oppose the Rent Bill entirely differ from the estimate formed of the rayat by his friends and advisers, it is not difficult to suggest a via media whereby violence would not be done to the first principles of fair dealing, and the innocent and injured rayat would be protected from the wolfish jaws of his rapacious enemy, the zemindar. All these contracts must, under the existing law, be registered. At present the practice is that the executant admits execution, and the deed is completed. It can easily be imagined that it is quite possible for a fraudulent person to substitute one document for another, and to cause an illiterate rayat to admit execution of a document which is of a nature far different to the assessment into which he consented to enter. The present law is of course, powerful enough to punish the fraud, but judicial proof of it is difficult to obtain. It may then happen that the fraudulent zemindar may get off scot-free, but to prevent this undesirable state of things, it is not necessary to debar honest men from entering into contracts with their tenants, and to prevent those contracts being of any avail. A short clause in the Registration Act would completely do away with the possibility of such fraudulent transactions. If it were enacted that, in all pottahs and kabulyats registered at any sub-registry office, the registering officer should cause to be read out to the parties the documents regarding which they were about to admit registration, it would be simply impossible for any rayat to be cajoled into signing and admitting execution of a document different to that which he had agreed to execute. There is absolutely no necessity to disturb the whole existing system of contract, because some men happen to be fraudulent, any more than there would be in prohibiting the use of razors because some men are unwise enough to cut their throats. The sudden subversion of any system is undesirable, and it is to be hoped that, even now, some way may be made clear to our legislators whereby, by altering to a certain extent the existing law, the country may be saved from a wholesale disturbance of the conditions under which men have acquired and kept property for nearly a century.—Englishman.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE AFGHAN FRONTIER.

Mr. STANHOPE asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether it was the fact that the Russian Government had published a new General Staff Map, which placed the new frontier of Russia within fifty miles of Herat and included within that frontier territory always hitherto recognised as Afghan; whether any practical step had been taken for the delimitation of the Afghan frontier; and when he proposed to lay upon the table any of the correspondence with Russia upon this subject.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE: I have seen the map to which the hon. member refers. I beg that I may not be understood as in any way admitting the accuracy of this map, if I add that his description of it is not quite correct. It is true that it traces the Afghan boundary line at about the distance from Herat which he mentions, but a large extent of territory to the north of that line is left uncoloured and is not included within the Russian boundary. As I stated on May 26, in answer to the hon. member for Berwick, communications are proceeding with the Russian Government as to the delimitation of the frontier of Afghanistan, but I am not able at present to give any details or to make any promise as to laying papers.

Mr. MACFARLANE asked if Afghanistan was to be consulted. Reference was only made to England and Russia.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE: I cannot at present go into details. (Laughter.)

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked whether Merv was not also left uncoloured.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE did not see that this was a question which arose out of the answer he gave.

Mr. STANHOPE asked the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether Sarakhs and the adjoining line of frontier had been occupied by Russia in accordance with any treaty with Persia: and, if so, when Her Majesty's Government first became aware of the existence of such a treaty.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE—If by Sarakhs is meant the place on the western bank of the Heri Rud, it has not been occupied by Russia, and we are not aware of the existence of any treaty by which Russia is authorised to occupy it. As I stated on May 26, a report has reached us that the Russian Commander-in-Chief was about to take possession of lands on the right bank of the Heri Rud at Old Sarakhs, and to make them over to the Turcomans.

MADRAS OFFICIALS.

Mr. J. M'CARTHY asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether he would lay upon the table the returns of lands held by Madras uncovenanted and military officers in civil employment, referred to in the letter of the Governor of Madras to the Secretary of State, dated the 30th of January, 1884, and promised on several occasions during last session.

Mr. CROSS: The returns referred to have not been received in the India Office. On the 9th of April last year I informed the hon. member that the Government of India would be requested to furnish a report on the whole question of the concessions granted in Mysore. This report has now been presented and will be in the hands of members in a few days.

Lieutenant Shewan, 5th Bombay N.I., has been appointed Officiating Wing Officer, 4th Infantry, at Bolaram, Lieutenant Lewin, 14th M.N.I., as Wing Officer 6th Infantry, at Baichore; and Lieutenant Wapshire as Wing Officer 1st Infantry. Lieutenant Stratton, Wing Officer 3rd Infantry, Jalna, has resigned, and has been appointed Wing Officer and Adjutant of the Meywar Bheel Corps.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—The market reopened to-day with a small auction of undesirable green teas, which realised irregular and lower prices. Business by private contract is as limited as before the holidays. The deliveries of China and Indian teas for the past month were unusually heavy.

SUGAR.—The business in cane since last week has been very small, and public sales will not take place until Friday next. Some small passages of West India have sold on previous terms, and 2,000 bags low brown China at 10s. Beet easier—viz. 14s. 9d. for June. In the Clyde market a better tone, with prices 3d. and occasionally 6d. dearer than last week.

COFFEE.—The Netherlands Trading Company will hold their public sale on the 11th inst., to comprise 101,308 bags Java and 1,128 cases Badang. This market is quiet, but a few parcels of Rio have sold.

SPICES.—In the public sales Cochín ginger sold fully 1s. to 2s. dearer; small to medium, part cut, 53s. 6d. to 59s.; bold, 64s. to 70s.; rough, 43s. 6d. to 47s. 6d. Of 557 packages about two-thirds placed. 310 bags Bengal bought in at 42s. 124 packages Jamaica chiefly at 54s. to 59s. for common and small. Only 100 bags Tellicherry black and 215 bags Singapore white pepper bought in private business has been done in Singapore black at 7½d. to 7 7-16d. Mace rather easier, 39 packages Penang selling chiefly at 1s. 3d. to 1s. 5d. for middling to fair; red nutmegs steady; 102 packages Penang, two-thirds sold medium to bold 2s. 4d. to 3s. 2d. Other spices dull. 593 bags pimento bought in at 2½d. to 2¾d.; 405 bales Zanzibar cloves at 5½d. to 6d.; 12 cases Penang at 1s. 6d.; 465 bags stems at 1-16d. per lb.

RICE.—There have not been any sales effected.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that no change of interest has transpired in the Produce Markets, which are unsettled, as usual at Whitsuntide. Public sales of coffee, after being postponed for a week, were resumed to-day, and the moderate supplies brought forward partly sold at rather lower quotations. In Havre some further decline has been accepted, and this afterwards led to a better feeling. The next sale on account of the Netherlands Trading Company is appointed for the 11th inst., to comprise 101,308 bags, 1,128 cases. Good ordinary Java valued at about 28¼ cents, against 29 to 29½ cents, paid previously. The export deliveries here still show a material increase, compared with the previous seasons. In tea the business has been small, and the public sales have gone at even lower rates than already quoted, especially for red-leaf congou. Six steamers have now sailed from China with new season's tea. Deliveries in May were very heavy, being over 19¼ million pounds, including a larger quantity of Indian tea than during any former month. Sugar is quiet, and beet rather lower. Next season's has sold for October-December shipment, at 15s. 6d. per cwt. f.o.b., basis 88 per cent. Refined has declined for dry good. In the Clyde, pieces are rather dearer. Cane-grown continues depressed, with exceedingly small transactions. There have been no sales reported in rice. East India cinchona at public sale yesterday found buyers at irregular and occasionally easier rates. At the spice sale Cochín ginger went at 1s. to 2s. per cwt. advance. Black pepper is without alteration. Zanzibar cloves cannot be sold on previous terms, the demand having abated.

TEA.—From Messrs. Hawes and Hertz's Fortnightly China Report:—"Business since our last has been interrupted by the holidays. A public sale of 2,500 packages green teas was held yesterday on the market re-opening, but, being undesirable sorts, realised lower prices. At to-day's auction of 8,074 packages, common reds and some first crop Kaisows and Chingwos went easier at 7½d. to 8½d., but otherwise prices are unchanged. Auctions from the 22d. ult. to 5th inst. comprised 35,000 packages. Prices, however, continue to droop, first-class black leafs and red leafs, although now on a very low scale, not apparently tempting the trade to increase stock to any extent. Fine and finest Ningchows of the new crop, if, as reported to be, much finer than usual, will probably arrive to a good market; medium and common teas however, will soon find their level of value in the auction room. News from Foochow points to a late opening of that market. Deliveries for the past month have been heavy, viz.—China tea, 12,811,868 lb.; Indian, Ceylon, and Java tea 6,467,922 lb. Total deliveries of China tea from June 1, 1883, to May 31, 1884, 215,729,722 lb. A considerable business for Russia has been done in black leafs from 9d. to 10½d. per lb., and a few chops of fine Ningchow have been settled at from 1s. 2d. to about 1s. 4d. per lb. Exporters are correct in appreciating these teas at the present very low range of prices, and it is extraordinary how little attention the home trade pay to them. Owing to the holidays this week's sales were small, about 8,000 packages passing auction to-day. Notwithstanding the small quantity offered, the sales were very flat, and prices generally in favour of buyers. The lower grades of Foochow Congou, from 5¼d. per lb., showed a further decline, and first crop black leaf Congous and 'new season's' Canton Congous went at very easy rates."

SUGAR.—There have not been any sales made in West India, and a small quantity only declared for auction to-morrow. A cargo of Porto Rico refining sold at 14s. 9d. for the United Kingdom. In the Clyde market a more/quiet tone prevails for pieces. Beet is rather lower in all positions. Subjoined is M. Bertrand Silz's report, dated Paris, June 4:—"During the week which has just elapsed our market has remained without interest. Even the liquidation of May engagements which took place yesterday and this morning has been effected without any change in prices, although it was settled only with great difficulty. The latest reports concerning the coming crop are satisfactory."

COFFEE.—The first public sales since the Whitsun holidays were held to-day, which passed off flatly, and in many cases at fully 1s. decline; 275 casks 100 barrels and bags Plantation Ceylon, partly sold—small to low middling, 51s. 6d. to 56s.; middling, 60s. 6d. to 64s.; good middling to rather bold, 69s. 6d. to 75s.; bold 78s. to 82s. 6d.; fine, 89s. to 92s. Fine qualities of East India are steady, common to medium 1s. to 2s. lower; 712 cases 896 bags chiefly sold—medium to good colory, 63s. to 71s.; rather bold, 77s.; fine bold, 85s. to 92s.; common pale and faded, 54s. to 59s.; small in proportion. Guatemala rather lower, but 1,391 bags mostly sold—good ordinary, rather mixed, 47s. 6d. to 48s. 6d.; fine ordinary to middling greenish, 50s. to 56s. 6d. Most of the 2,543 bags Costa Rica bought in, a pile of middling greenish selling at 59s., and good ordinary, old import, 48s. to 49s. 6d.; 56 barrels Jamaica brought 45s., for good ordinary mixed, and 66s. for middling pale greenish.

RICE continues without demand.

MONDAY EVENING.

TEA.—A sale of 1,243 packages of green tea passed to-day heavily, prices showing an easier tendency all round. The private market for congous continues dull. Telegrams from Foochow announce the opening of that market at prices equal to last year's opening rates. Small settlements—viz., of about 30,000 chests, are reported. Probably the steamer Glengarry will be the first to leave Foochow for London.

COTTON.—Market continues steady, but without much business. The sales since Friday amount to about 1,000 bales, including Tinnevely at 5 9-16d. to 5½d., and Western at 4¼d. to 4¾d. per lb. For arrival, Tinnevely, May—June Suez, 5¼d. per lb. for good fair.

All lovers of racing in Bengal will, it is certain, be glad to see, from the prospectus published elsewhere, that the Sonapur Races are not likely to be abandoned, as was at one time anticipated. Anteus-like, they seem to have arisen all the stronger from their near contact with failure. The prospectus holds out every prospect of good racing, for good prizes are offered for horses of all classes as well as ponies. To those who are not specially attracted by the love of racing, the pleasures of the camp, with its many balls, lawn tennis matches, polo, &c., always afford ample enjoyment. So every one should wish success to the revived Sonapur meeting.

The Straits Times mentions that further news has lately been received of the unfortunate captive crew of the Nisero. The chief officer has written two letters to the Hon. W. E. Maxwell, stating that their provisions were lasting well, with the exception of biscuits and milk, which were all finished on March 30. The place of their confinement was, the officer believed, about ten or twelve miles above Tenom, but the port was blockaded all round, and the Raja appeared to be getting anxious for the return of Mr. Maxwell. The acting Governor at Singapore was doing all he could to forward to the men a fresh supply of provisions, but in the meantime one Italian, named Cosimo Lascaco, had died, and three others of the crew were seriously ill.

According to a Penang paper, a party of French engineers have lately visited the island for the purpose of surveying a new route for a canal across the isthmus. They propose starting from Trang on the west coast, and finishing up at Singora on the east coast in the Gulf of Siam. M. Deloncle, the chief of the expedition, further proposes to run a railway down from Trang to Butterworth, and thence to run a tunnel under the Penang Straits, which will come out near the late powder magazine, and be the terminus of the line on this side. He estimates the cost of the tunnel at £800,000.

At the meeting of the Municipal Commissioners, to be held this afternoon, Babu Kallynath Mitter will move that "This meeting records its high sense of Dr. McLeod's services as health officer for the last five years, during which time, by his tact and judgment, he soon gained the confidence of the Commissioners, and from the date of his undertaking the duties of his office to the date of making over charge, acquitted himself with marked ability, while by his zeal and cordial co-operation at all times he was able to effect a decided improvement in the sanitary arrangements of the town."

On Saturday, the anniversary of the Queen's birthday, the troops in garrison will parade in review order on the general parade-ground, Esplanade, and will be formed up at 6 a.m. in line facing west at twelve paces interval—Royal Artillery, with their guns on the right; 2nd Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment; B.V.R. Corps; 10th Regiment N.I.; and 21st Regiment N.I. An imperial salute of thirty-one guns will be fired from the reserve battery in charge of the Royal Artillery. Three rounds of blank ammunition to be issued per rifle, the usual precautions being taken to withdraw ball ammunition from pouches. The N.I. guards to mount after parade. The 21st N.I. will furnish points and colours. Recruits and boys of native corps will keep the ground.

The Chief Commissioner, Assam, has appointed the following officers to the Sibsagar Mounted Rifles:—To be Captains.—C. A. Turton and A. J. Elliott. To be Lieutenants.—D. P. D. Newington, J. H. Rolfe, J. B. Stevenson, and J. F. Lawrence.

The undermentioned officers had permission to appear before the Civil and Military Examination Committee which assembled at the Secretariat at eleven a.m., on Monday, 2nd June, for examination in the native languages:—

In Hindoostanee, Higher Standard.—Lieutenant W. O. M. Mosse, Royal Lancashire; Lieutenant S. Fraser, Middlesex (attached to the 28th Native Infantry); Lieutenant E. D. Broome, 1st West India Regiment (attached to the 21st Native Infantry) and Lieut. L. Herbert (attached to the 1st Regiment C. I. H.) In Persian, Lower Standard.—Lieutenant G. A. Collins, Meywar Bheel Corps.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1884.

A SHAM OFFICIAL INQUIRY.

ALTHOUGH only a few months have passed since the Secretary to the Government of Bengal was earnestly advocating the immediate passing of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, in the shape in which it had been laid before the Legislative Council, more prudent counsels have prevailed in certain quarters, and further local inquiry and report have been called for. But the Secretary to the Government of Bengal is still determined to keep his own position in the discussion, with irregular and illegitimate prominence, and in practical supersession of his sick master, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times reports that the Government of Bengal has addressed a long letter on the subject of the Rent Bill to all the Commissioners of the province. Those who are acquainted with the organisation of the Revenue Administration in Bengal will be apt to inquire why this irregular course has been adopted. The Board of Revenue, with its highly-paid and experienced Members and its able Secretaries, is the constituted adviser of the Bengal Government in all Revenue matters; and when the Government seeks for information and advice from the Commissioners and Collectors who are the official subordinates of the Board, it is usual to address them through the agency of the Board, and to receive their replies through the same channel. It is almost needless to state that the members of the Board, in submitting to Government the information obtained from its subordinates, take the opportunity of expressing their own opinion, and advising the Government on the course to be pursued. It is therefore obviously a slight to the Board, as at present constituted, that the Government ignores its existence, and does not deign to consult it. But it is doubtless very well known to the ardent Bengal Secretary that the Board as at present constituted, might give utterance to opinions which would be very inconvenient for his purposes; and as there is likely to be a change in the personnel of the Board before long, it will be time to consult the Board at a future season when the reply of the oracle is certain to be more friendly. However, it was not always thus in Bengal; and in former days the Government which sought for information and advice on Revenue matters from its subordinates, was content to receive their unbiased opinions, without any indication from a directing hand as to how the cat was expected to jump.

The Secretary to the Government of Bengal having thus taken upon himself to ignore the Board of Revenue, and to consult the Commissioners direct, was, of course, not very careful of the respect and courtesy due to the experienced officers who hold the post of Commissioner, all of them being his own seniors in the service; and he proceeds to instruct them strictly as to the manner in which they are to deal with the Collectors subordinate to them. Each Commissioner is directed to hold a conference of all the Collectors subordinate to him, and of such other officers as he may desire to consult. It is to be presumed that the such other officers are all the servants of Government, and it is noticeable how careful the Secretary is to exclude the opinion of the landholders and any independent residents, whom the Government are usually so prompt to invite to attend any local meeting, when co-operation in the shape of pecuniary subscription is needed. But the Bill is to be discussed at a conference of officials, and a report, embodying the general opinion of the assembled officers, is to be prepared and submitted to Government. If this instruction is attended to, it is obvious that a great opportunity is afforded of swamping individual opinion, and the Commissioner will probably find that his own vote on any particular point is neutralised by the vote of the least of his own subordinates. It is suggested by the Secretary that he anticipates benefit from this intercommunication of ideas, and a great lightening of the work of Government in reviewing the reports. This is perhaps rather comical, as the Board of Revenue might have been utilised to lighten his labours in reviewing the reports. And a further comic touch is supplied by the observation that the Lieutenant Governor abstains from expressing any opinion of his own, seeing that the Lieutenant Governor and his secretary's opinions have already been forcibly expressed and widely published on almost every point still reserved for further consideration. It is also well-known that most of the Commissioners and Collectors who are now being re-consulted, have already recorded their opinions, so that it is somewhat a mockery to invite them either to repeat or to change their assertions. If the Government had been really desirous of getting impartial information they should have appointed a special Commission, with a sufficient number of independent members, both English and Native, to inquire into the questions which are now reserved for consideration; and until such a Commission is appointed they may be assured that they will not arrive at the truth or give satisfaction to any party.

LORD RIPON'S FRIENDS IN ENGLAND.

THE Indian Mirror, the chief native daily newspaper in India, has recently started a London correspondent, and the letters of this gentleman are eminently readable. Being presumably himself an Indian, he writes with evident authority on the doings of our Indian visitors, as well as on affairs at large; and his accounts seem to us to be both trustworthy and interesting. The Indian Mirror has given the only report that, as far as we are aware, has been published of the meeting "to support Lord Ripon's policy," that was advertised to be held in the Kensington Town Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Firth, M.P., and of which Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose and Mr. Foggo were the Paul and Barnabas. The report is decidedly amusing reading; and seems to show that the relations between these two distinguished champions of Lord Ripon's policy are sometimes a little strained—Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose making a statement and Mr. Foggo crying "No" to it. The report represents Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose as saying:—

"Now, gentlemen, it is enacted that whenever an English prisoner is brought up before a district magistrate, no matter how trivial the offence may be with which he is charged—with being drunk or disorderly in the streets, he may claim to be tried by a jury, a majority of whom must be composed of his own countrymen. (A voice of 'No, no.') A gentleman behind me says 'No,' but I can only say that the statement I have made is perfectly correct, and I am astonished to find that a gentleman like Mr. Foggo, intimately connected as he is with an Indian Reform Association, should not have taken the trouble to acquaint himself with the exact terms of this compromise, and that he should take it upon himself to interrupt and contradict me on insufficient information and imperfect knowledge. (Laughter and cheers.)"

This seems rather severe on Mr. Foggo; but Mr. Ghose seems to have had it all his own way, for on Mr. Foggo rising to speak, the report in the Indian Mirror states that he was received "with some laughter":—

"Mr. Foggo, who was received with some laughter, said he could not understand why the mention of his name should cause hilarity."

After this naive remark, it is to be hoped that the meeting checked its unseemly mirth; and Mr. Foggo proceeded to deal with his adversary:—

"As regards the Ilbert Bill compromise, he would only say that it was possible to take, he would not say a fairer, but a somewhat different view from that which had been presented to them by his friend Mr. Ghose."

This might stand for an illustration of the "retort courteous"—more courteous perhaps than Lord Kimberley's reply to Pandit Shyamji Krishna Varma, on the occasion of the Indian Reform Association as reported in the Indian Mirror:—

"Pandit Shyamji Krishna Varma urged upon the Secretary of State the necessity for employing a larger number of Native officials, and Lord Kimberley said something to those near him about there being nothing like leather, the relevancy of which he did not stop to explain."

The doubts of the correspondent as to the relevancy of Lord Kimberley's remark are evidently sincere. It is really too bad that the worthy Pandit's legitimate aspirations should be thus cruelly made light of by the Secretary of State.

It is declared to be the intention of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, with the approval of H. E. the Commander in Chief, to carry out, as far as will be practicable in such a climate as India, the Regulations laid down in Horse Guards' General Orders Nos. 50 and 51 of 1883 for the instruction of the British army in drill and musketry, during the next season. The instructions will probably be commenced in July. As an experiment the native army will be included in the course.

The Englishman mentions the livelihood of Captain D. A. Macpherson, B.S.C., being transferred to take up the duties of Examiner of Ordnance and Clothing Accounts in Calcutta. This officer, who now holds a similar appointment in Bombay, has great experience in the Military Accounts Offices in Bengal, where he is much esteemed for his ability for hard work, combined with a just and impartial appreciation of the labour of his subordinates. It is expected that the changes will take effect from the 1st prox.

HOME NEWS.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 25,00,000 in Bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on June 4 at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were in telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 4,00,000 average rate 1s. 7⁷/₈d. on Bombay, Rs. 10,00,000, average rate 1s. 7⁷/₈d.; and Madras, Rs. 1,50,000, average rate 1s. 7⁷/₈d.; or a total of Rs. 15,50,000. Tenders on all Presidencies at 1s. 7³/₄d. and above will receive in full. Between April 1, and June 3 the total amount of remittances sold had reached Rs. 3,57,89,500, and realised £2,355,423.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The report of the directors of this company for the half year ended the 31st of December, 1883, states that the gross receipts were £1,165,133, and the expenditure according to revenue account £731,325, leaving a balance of £433,808. The payments to Government on account of leased lines were £8,749, so that the net profit was £425,059. The above expenditure is in the ratio of 62⁷/₇ per cent. of the receipts. For the corresponding period last year the expenditure was equal to 58⁸/₇ of the receipts. The gross receipts of the half year were less by £67,346 os. 11d., or 5⁴/₆ per cent. than in the corresponding period, the falling off being £33,154 18s. 6d. in coaching traffic, £29,500 9s. 11d. in goods traffic, and £4,690 12s. 6d. in electric telegraph and sundries. As regards the coaching traffic, the decrease is due entirely to the special movement of troops in 1882, occasioned by the Egyptian expedition. Apart from the troop traffic under "Abstract H" of the accounts in both half years, there is an increase in ordinary traffic of £28,453 13s. 11d., or over 11 per cent. In his half-yearly report to the Board, the agent remarks "that, notwithstanding the important reduction made in the passenger fares, the earnings have been maintained." With respect to the goods traffic, the quantity carried was 849,817 tons, being 36,151 tons more than in the corresponding period, the lower receipts indicating that the traffic was carried shorter distances on the average, and in larger proportion at lower rates. The traffic of the half year was seriously affected by a break in the line occasioned at the beginning of July by heavy floods at the Bookree and Ajunta rivers, about 3³/₄ miles apart on the North-Eastern (Jubbulpore) division, the bridges across both rivers having been washed away. The total number of train miles run in the half-year was 3,305,563, compared with 3,322,972 in 1882. The receipts per train mile amounted to 7s. 1d., and the expenditure to 4s. 6d., against 7s. 5d. and 4s. 5d. respectively, in the corresponding period. The average cost of maintenance per railway mile amounted to £136 15s. 2d., as against £133 14s. 1d. in the corresponding period. Lately a suggestion has been under the consideration of the company and the Government to extend the double line beyond Bhosawul to Khundwa (76⁷/₆ miles) in the direction of Jubbulpore, and to Sheazaum (63⁸/₃ miles in the direction of Nagpore, and it is thought that the time has arrived for taking action towards doubling both portions of the line in question. It is estimated that this work will cost about £500,000, chargeable to capital. The sanction of Government has been applied for, and it is contemplated that by allowing ample time it may be carried out most economically in the course of two years. The capital will be raised as needed with the sanction of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, under the company's borrowing powers. A resolution to authorise the exercise of the borrowing powers to the extent of £1,000,000 will be submitted to the meeting, this larger amount being necessary to cover expenditure on other works, and for additional engines and rolling stock.

ASSAM COMPANY.—The annual general meeting of this company was held on June 9 at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. Walter Prideaux presided, and in moving the adoption of the report (which proposed a dividend of 14 per cent. for the year), stated that the information it contained showed the present position of the company, but what he thought must be of most interest to the proprietors was to endeavour if possible to forecast the future. To assist them in that he referred to the quantity of tea made and the cost of manufacture every year since 1874, and afterwards observed that the cost in India of producing last year's crop was only £6,000 more (£102,000) than the cost of 1874, when the out-turn was 1,600,000 lb. of tea, or 900,000 lb. less than last year. The reduction in the expenditure in India had been owing almost entirely to the introduction of machinery. He hoped that the crop of 1885 would be all dried by machinery. The most unfavourable circumstance in their report was the low price at which their tea had sold. Looking at the very great and increasing demand for Indian tea, he thought they had reason to believe that the lowest point had been touched. They were now getting about 350 lb. of tea to the acre, but he thought they might expect to see that yield increased to 500 lb. Mr. George Turnbull seconded the motion. In answer to Mr. Tendon, the chairman said he saw no reason whatever to believe that the tea plant would wear out any more than he saw reason to believe that the oak would wear out. No doubt there would be vacancies, which they must fill up. He had no fear whatever of the failure of their old plantations, and with regard to manuring, he did not believe it would be advantageous. A shareholder observed that the experience of himself in connection with tea gardens at Cachar and Sylhet was opposed to what the chairman had stated as to the value of manuring. The report was adopted.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

TUESDAY.—Business in the Silver Market has hardly been resumed yet, although the absence of transactions is to a great extent caused by the want of supplies. Prices of both bars and dollars are unchanged. All Eastern exchange rates and Rupee Paper are again unaltered.

WEDNESDAY.—Only a very trifling amount of business has been done in the Silver Market to day. There have been no fresh arrivals of either bars or Mexican dollars and prices in each case are still unaltered. Indian rates for telegraphic transfers are unchanged at 1s. 7³/₄d., but advices have been received stating that the directors of the Bank of Bombay have reduced their discount rate to 10 per cent., the rate having been fixed at 11 per cent. on the 7th of April. The anomalous position of the Indian Money Market, which was lately so conspicuous, is thus giving place to a more normal state of affairs, although the discount rate in Calcutta is still 2 per cent. higher than that of Bombay. Rupee Paper is unaltered at 83³/₈ 83³/₈ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 81¹/₂ 81¹/₂ for the Four per Cents, and business has been very limited.

THURSDAY.—Bar silver being scarce and in fair demand has to-day commanded 50¹/₂d. per oz., at which rate a small amount of business was done. There have been no dealings in Mexican dollars which are again only nominally quoted at 49 13-16d. Indian exchange rates are weaker at 1s. 7 11-16d. in Calcutta and 1s. 7 23-32d. in Bombay, owing to the recent reductions in the value of money in these two cities, and also to the nearness of the monsoon which greatly reduces the volume of trade. There are no further changes in the Eastern discount rates, which are quoted in Bombay at 10 and in Calcutta at 8 per Cent. Business in Rupee Paper has again been at almost a standstill, and prices are unchanged at 83³/₈ 83³/₈ for the Four-and-a-Half and 81¹/₂ 81¹/₂ for the Four per Cents.

FRIDAY.—Some bar silver has again been sold at 50¹/₂d. Although the somewhat exceptional demand which led to Thursday's advance has now been satisfied, the above price was maintained, because the Indian exchange rates are 1-32d. higher, at 1s. 7 23-32d. in Calcutta, and 1s. 7³/₄d. in Bombay.

China exchange quotations are unaltered, and there has again been no business in Mexican dollars. Rupee Paper is firmer this evening, at 83¼ 84 for the Four-and-a-Half, and 81½ 81¾ for the Four per Cents. The India Council have sold two lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Bombay at rs. 7 25-32d. per rupee showing an advance of 1-32d. on the price obtained on Wednesday.

SATURDAY.—Bar silver was in some demand for India, but there was very little business, and the price again closed at 50½d. per ounce. Mexican dollars were only nominally quoted, there having been no dealings in them. All Eastern exchange rates are unaltered, the current quotations being rs. 7 23-32d. in Calcutta, rs. 7¼d. in Bombay, 3s. 9d. in Hongkong, and 5s. 2d. in Shanghai. Rupee Paper also is unchanged. The India Council have sold two lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Calcutta at rs. 7 25-32d. per rupee.

MONDAY.—Refined bar silver is still quoted at 50½d. per ounce, at which there is some demand. Scarcely any business has been done, however, owing to the small supplies on hand. There is nothing fresh to report as to Mexican dollars, only a nominal quotation being obtainable for them. Eastern exchange rates are again unaltered. Rupee Paper has been in better demand, and rose ½ to ¼. The Four and a-Half per Cents. closed at 83¼ 84¼, and the Four per Cents. at 82 82¼.

For Madras: Lieut. Col. and Miss Ross Thompson.

Mr. J. Ferguson, of the Ceylon Observer and Tropical Agriculturist (whose work on "Ceylon," published by Sampson Low and Co., was recently the subject of favourable notice in our columns), has lately come home on furlough, travelling from Ceylon by way of the Straits Settlement, Hongkong, and Canton, in China, Nagasaki, the Inland Sea, Kobe, and Yokohama, as well as Tokio in Japan, and thence across the Pacific to America. Mr. Ferguson spent some seven weeks in travelling through America, including California, Utah, Kansas, Chicago, Toronto (Canada), and thence through the Eastern and Southern States as far south as Florida, where, as well as in California, sub-tropical agriculture was the subject of observation. Since his arrival in England Mr. Ferguson has, by request, given addresses on the subject of Ceylon and its Christian missions and religious progress at Exeter Hall, and before the Liberation Society, while on the topic of agricultural prospects he had a good deal to say at the last meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute. At this time when so much interest as to the future of the planting industry, especially in tea, in Ceylon is felt in mercantile and banking circles, it is well to have so good an authority at hand to refer to as this gentleman. A second edition of the standard work, now called "Ceylon in 1884" we see is announced by Sampson Low and Co. Mr. Ferguson returns ere long to his work in Colombo, which city is likely to become the centre for information to the planters both of the east and west through the pages of the Tropical Agriculturist.

The services of Surgeon H. C. Hudson, Indian Medical Service, attached to the 5th Bengal Native Infantry, and Surgeon F. D. C. Hawkins, Indian Medical Service, officiating medical officer, 12th Bengal Native Infantry, have been placed at the disposal of the Home Department, for employment under the Government of the North-West Provinces and Oudh.

PURE INDIAN TEAS.—Two kinds (both very good), at 2s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. per lb., are sold at the Pure India Tea Depot, Ennerdale-road, Kew-gardens. The superintendent (Lieut. Col. MONEY, the Author of the standard work and prize essay on "Tea Cultivation and Manufacture in India"), who is a large producer, sells at the above low prices (25 per cent. below usual ones) because no middleman's profits are incurred. Details Post Free. Address, Manager, as above.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing FORTNIGHTLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

A LASKARI DICTIONARY,

OR,

ANGLO-INDIAN VOCABULARY OF NAUTICAL TERMS AND PHRASES IN ENGLISH AND HINDUSTANI.

Chiefly the Corrupt Jargon in use among Laskars or Indian Sailors.

Originally compiled by Captain Thomas Roebuck, Madras Infantry, Professor of Hindustani, Examiner, &c. in the College of Fort William, Calcutta. Revised and corrected by William Carmichael Smyth, Esq. B.C.S. and now carefully re-edited and enlarged by GEORGE SMALL, M.A. MISSIONARY, Formerly of the B.M.S. at Calcutta and Benares, now to the Laskars, &c., in London, in connection with the Asiatic Strangers' Home, Limehouse.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We have received a copy of what we venture to predict will prove one of the most useful books that ever fell into the hands of a ship's officer—a vocabulary of the sea jargon of Indian laskars. In the brief space of eighty-two pages Mr. Small has given us some 1,400 nautical terms, embracing nearly the whole vocabulary of native crews. We congratulate Mr. Small on the completion of a book which if it is the least pretentious, is, to our thinking, the most useful and the most enduring of all the books he has yet written."—Statesman, Calcutta.

"Of the value of the present edition, for the intended purpose, it is difficult to speak too highly."—Home news, May 26, 1882.

KNOWLEDGE:

AN

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF SCIENCE,

PLAINLY WORDED—EXACTLY DESCRIBED.

Edited by R. A. PROCTOR.

"KNOWLEDGE" is a Weekly Magazine intended to bring the truths, discoveries, and inventions of Science and Art before the public in simple but correct terms—to be, in fact, the "minister and interpreter" of Science and Art for those who have not time to master technicalities, and—at a price within the reach of all.

The first number of Volume V. commenced with No. 114, January 4, 1884. Among the subjects for this year we may mention the arrangements are made or in progress for a series of Papers on

"Flowers," by Mr. GRANT ALLEN;
 "Electroplating," by Mr. SLINGO;
 "Dreams," by Mr. EDWARD CLOUD;
 "Microscopic Studies," by Mr. H. J. SLACK;
 "Telegraphic Studies," by F.R.A.S., and Mr. R. A. PROCTOR;
 "Cookery," by Mr. W. M. WILLIAMS;
 "Tricycles," by Mr. J. BROWNING;
 "Happiness," by Mr. THOMAS FOSTER;
 "Insects," by Mr. BUTLER;
 "The Almanack, Mapping, the Zodiac, and Constellation Figures," by Mr. R. A. PROCTOR;

Besides others on "Chance," "How to get Strong," "Plain Facts in Physics, Apparitions," various Mathematical Subjects, simply treated; Whist, chiefly Illustrative Games; and Chess, chiefly simple discussions of the Leading Openings.

Vols. III. and IV. (January to December, 1883) are still to be had, price 7s. 6d. each.

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT TO ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL

CONTAINING

THE LETTERS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL, AND TO THE HIGH COURT OF CALCUTTA, ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL; WITH OTHER PAPERS ON THE BILL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1884.

BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

No. 784.

From D. Fitzpatrick, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Simla, May 5, 1884.

SIR,—I am directed to invite your attention to the Preliminary Report (including the dissents) of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill and to the Revised Bill, recently published in the Gazette of India,* and to request that the Report of the Bill may be taken into consideration by the Government of Bengal as soon as possible, in order that the Government of India may be made acquainted with the views of the Bengal Government on the revised Bill and of those officers whom the Bengal Government may consider it expedient to consult.

2. In concluding their Report, the Select Committee specify several points with which they were unable to deal adequately without further information than that contained in the papers before them. And they state that on some of these points, they would be glad to receive the advice, both of the Local Government and of the High Court. A separate communication will be addressed to the High Court. The particular questions which the Select Committee wish to be referred to the Local Government are—

(1). Whether, with reference especially to landlords' improvements, it is desirable to empower Revenue officers to arrange for the cutting of irrigation channels, the distribution of water, and the payment of compensation; and, if so, what form such provisions should take.

(2). Whether the summary sale procedure can be applied to those dependent taluqs, the revenue of which was settled direct with Government, though the holders pay it through the zemindar, who is responsible for its realisation. These tenures apparently find no place in the Government registers, and it was proposed that the modified patni procedure should be applied to them.

(3). Whether the same procedure can be made applicable also to the recovery of arrears of road cess and public works cess from rent-free tenure holders.

(4). Whether any provisions are required in the Bill with respect to tenants of homestead or bastu land which is not a part of an occupancy holding. The Select Committee have omitted Chapter VII of the original Bill on the ground that it was inapplicable to the very varying conditions attaching to the holdings of such tenants in different parts of the country, and that they had not before them the information requisite to dealing with the questions involved. It is desirable that information of this description should, if possible, be supplied.

(5). Whether the saving of customary and other conditions specifically applied in Section 214 of the revised Bill to utbandi and halhasili tenures should be extended to similar tenures under other names; and whether any special saving is necessary in regard to the special tenures under which land is held in the Chittagong Division.

(6). Whether it would be possible to specify for the purpose of exemption from the pre-emption sections any such transferable occupancy rights as those in guzashta and gora holdings.

(7). Whether it is possible to improve the accuracy of the price lists which have been published during the past twelve years; and what would be the probable effect of basing a system of enhancement of rent mainly on these lists.

3. To these points the attention of the Government of Bengal is especially invited. It may be that the first of them would require separate legislation; but, as they have been referred at the instance of the Select Committee, it would be desirable that the opinion of the Bengal Government upon them should be given in reply to this letter. I am further to mention some other matters on which either the opinion of the Government of Bengal is particularly required, or an expression of the views of the Government of India seems desirable.

4. The first question concerns the sufficiency of the revenue establishments of the Province to discharge, in addition to their present onerous functions, the numerous duties which, under the revised Bill, will devolve upon them. They are required, for instance (1) to ascertain the prevailing rate by local inquiry at the instance of a Civil Court before which an enhancement suit under section 44 is brought; (2) to prepare authoritative price lists under section 52; (3) to receive deposits of rent (section 73); (4) to appoint officers to superintend the division of the produce where rent is taken by appraisal or measurement (section 82); (5) to decide the respective rights of landlord and tenant to make an improvement, or whether any particular work is an improvement (section 89); (6) to register landlords' improvements, and to record evidence respecting any improvement (sections 91 and 92); (7) to grant permission to measure the holding of a tenant (section 99); (8) to prepare a record of rights, or to make a settlement of rents (Chapter X); (9) to frame tables of rates (Chapter XI); (10) to survey and record a proprietor's private lands (Chapter XII); (11) to determine the incidents of a tenancy by means of a local inquiry at the direction of a Civil Court (section 174). This list does not exhaust the duties delegated to Revenue officers; but it is sufficiently full to show that the efficient working of the Act will in a great measure depend on the ability of the revenue establishments to respond to the calls which will be made upon them. Some of the duties, as, for instance, the preparation of a record of rights or of a table of rates, or the settlement of rents, will probably arise only in exceptional localities, and may require the employment of special establishments. Others, however, such as the registration of improvements or local inquiries into the prevailing rate, will not improbably be frequent throughout the Province; and the Government of India would like to know whether the existing revenue establishments can cope with the work, or whether it will be necessary to strengthen them, if the Bill be passed in its present form. In connection with this subject, I am to invite the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to Paragraph 19 of the Secretary of State's Despatch No. 30 of August 17, 1882, dealing with the question of introducing a system of survey and record of rights, either generally into Bengal, or experimentally into the Patna division. The Government of India is anxious that a complete statement of the Lieutenant Governor's views and proposals on this subject, and as to the necessity of providing further legislative facilities for it beyond those which are given in the Bill under consideration, should be submitted.

5. Passing from this general question of administrative machinery to the most important alterations made by the Select Committee in the Bill as originally introduced, I am to notice the following points:—

6. TENURE HOLDERS (Chapter III).—The description of tenure holders and raiyats, which is given in Chapter II, in place of a definition, is believed to represent substantially the views expressed by the Government of Bengal in its letter No. 972 of September 27 last, although it was not deemed expedient to draw the line between the two classes of tenancies with the precision and definiteness which was there recommended. The Bill, it is understood, requires the Courts, in deciding whether a tenant is a tenure holder or a raiyat, to look, in the first instance, to the primary object for which the tenancy was acquired—whether for collecting rent, or for cultivating the land—and in doubtful cases directs their attention to local customs. But in case these issues cannot be adequately ascertained, it provides a presumption which is, doubtless, in accordance with existing facts, that holdings, exceeding 100 bigahs, were taken for the former purpose. The Government of India will be glad to learn if these provisions will afford reasonable facilities for meeting what is clearly felt to be a grave practical difficulty in deciding what holdings are, and what are not, tenures. The most doubtful feature of the scheme is the proposed conversion of occupancy raiyats who sub-let more than one-half their holdings, subject to certain exceptions, into tenure holders (Section 37). The object is to bring the sub-letting raiyat under the more summary sale procedure of Chapter XVI., and, at the same time, to allow the sub-tenant to acquire occupancy rights. The report of the Select Committee in its comments on Chapter V, discusses these provisions at some length, and touches on the practical difficulties which may be anticipated to arise. To these remarks the attention of the Government of Bengal is invited. It will be noticed that the converted tenure holder still remains liable to enhancement of rent as an occupancy raiyat, though, in other respects, he acquires the rights and liabilities of a tenure holder, and is, in some ways, especially as to pre-emption and distraint, in a better position than if he had never sublet. The expediency of giving these privileges as part of a scheme for discouraging, sub-letting, and the general effect of this distinction should be considered; and it would be well if local inquiries were made as to the practicability of the scheme, and as to the possibility of giving effect to it by means of a system of registration as contemplated by the Bill. The obvious objections that it is difficult to ascertain if a man has sub-let half his holding, and that it may be neither to his own interest nor to that of anyone having a knowledge of the facts that he should be registered, require to be carefully weighed, and, if possible, overcome.

7. RAIYATS HOLDING AT FIXED RATES (Chapter IV).—The assimilation of this class of raiyats to tenure holders with respect to transfer and succession is a provision about which the Select Committee were not unanimous. It has been urged that, while these conditions may very fairly be allowed to raiyats holding at fixed rates under a registered lease, or under a judicially declared title, they should not be claimable by raiyats whose right to hold at fixed rates rests only on the statutory presumption. It was the opinion of the Select Committee that no distinction can be drawn in the Bill between these two classes; but it is open to consideration whether some further restriction might not equitably be placed on the twenty years' presumption, in addition to that proposed in the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 64, and in section 122. The Government is disposed to think that, subject to restrictions, the presumption should be retained. The presumption was originally enacted in Act 10 of 1859, in order to facilitate the proof of certain well-recognised rights. To remove it entirely from the Statute book would throw on the tenant claiming to be a fixed-rate tenant, the burden of proving that he had held at the same rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement; and this, in the absence of public and authoritative registers of tenancies, would be equivalent to an absolute bar to every claim of this nature. Other proposals have now been made with a view of limiting the currency of this presumption: they are (1) to provide facilities for registering such tenancies and for deciding the disputed claims to which registration is certain to give rise, and to prescribe that no tenant whose title to hold at fixed rates is unregistered after a certain date, to be fixed by the Act, can claim the benefit of the presumption; or (2) to enact that the presumption shall not continue to run after the passing of the Act, or after some subsequent date, so that the raiyat claiming to hold at fixed rates must, in order to have the benefit of his presumption, be prepared to show that for twenty years previous to the date thus fixed (instead of previous to the date of institution of the proceedings) he has held at an unchanged rate. The attention of the Government of Bengal is requested to these suggestions, as there cannot be a doubt but that, the presumption being cumulative, every year renders it less in accordance with the real facts, and also increases the landlord's difficulty of rebutting it.

8. OCCUPANCY RAIYATS (Chapter V).—A preliminary question is raised by the Select Committee as to the definition of "estate" with reference to exceptionally large estates such as those of the Maharajah of Burdwan. The Select Committee also invite attention to the date provisionally given in Section 27 (b). These points should now be considered by the Government of Bengal.

9. The Select Committee also remark that the main lines of the original Bill in regard to the acquisition of the status of a settled raiyat and the right of occupancy have been retained, while considerable alterations have been made in the provisions relating to the enhancement of the rent of occupancy raiyats. The whole of this chapter will, no doubt, be fully considered by the Government of Bengal, and the effect of the minor amendments introduced into it should receive careful at-tion. The presumption introduced in Section 26, Sub-section (2), is, it is believed, quite in accordance with existing facts. It has been said by a leading opponent of the Bill that 90 per cent. of the raiyats of Bengal have occupancy rights; the practical difficulty, however, has always been for them to prove these rights. The object of the presumption is to facilitate this proof by throwing the onus probandi on the party asserting the case to be an exception from the general rule. From this point of view the Government of India accepts it as an improvement of the Bill. Other important features in the early portion of the chapter are the sub-divisions entitled "Restrictions on transfer," and "Restrictions on subletting," and the omission of Section 56 of the original Bill, which conferred a right of occupancy on a raiyat let into an occupancy holding after it had been bought up by the landlord. Of these, the restrictions on subletting have already to some extent been discussed. It is understood that the universality of the practice both in Behar and in Bengal rendered the prohibition of the practice impossible; and, as the Committee point out, the attempt to place restrictions upon it has been attended with extreme difficulty. It is not probable that any satisfactory solution of the problem can be found in the direction of increased stringency. The provisions of Section 56 were very generally condemned in the papers before the Select Committee. The Governor of India concurs in the omission of this Section from the Bill, though it is obvious that the absence of such a restriction may have the effect of enabling the more wealthy landlords to diminish by purchase the area held by tenants in occupancy right, and may also afford a means of raising the customary or prevailing rate of rent over the occupancy area. The former advantage, however, will only remain to the landlord as long as he retains the land in his own cultivation. If he lets it, the ordinary provisions as to the acquisition of occupancy rights will apply to the incoming tenant; and it is believed that these will be found sufficiently broad for all practical purposes. The possible effect of the omission of the section on the prevailing rate is, no doubt, a more serious consideration. The landlord who buys up the occupancy right in a holding may either let the land to a non-occupancy raiyat at any rent he likes (Section 56), or to a settled raiyat subject (see Section 42) to such enhancement on the rent paid by the late occupancy raiyat as is permissible under Section 41. Should this power be extensively exercised on an estate where the competition for land is keen, the higher rents obtainable for such land by the landlord would eventually tell on the prevailing rent, and would enable the landlord to enhance the rents of the general body of occupancy tenants, on the ground that they were below the prevailing rate of rent. The Government of India is, therefore, prepared to admit that the omission of Section 56 may occasionally operate unfavourably towards the occupancy raiyat by allowing in certain cases (especially in connection with the effect of Section 42 on an occupancy raiyat succeeding tenure of a non-occupancy raiyat, room for the entry of competition rents. But, admitting this, the Government of India cannot but recognise the force of the objections which were brought against that section of the original Bill from the opposite point of view, and is disposed to think that justice to the landlords requires the modification of the Bill in this particular. Your attention, however, will be more specially directed to the effect of Section 42, in a subsequent portion of this letter. The only remaining restriction which affects the acquisition of occupancy rights by the landlord is that in Section 28, which declares that the occupancy rights so acquired merges in the superior right of the landlord. It allows the accrual of occupancy rights by the lapse of time to the new tenant, prevents the legal complications which would arise from the co-existence of different interests in the same person, and merely affirms what appears to have been assumed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in the case referred to in Mr. Justice Field's note on this subject, to be the existing law. The section, it will be noticed, applies whether the landlord is the zemindar or a tenure holder.

10. The alterations made in the law of enhancement in the latter portion of Chapter V are set out in detail in the report of the Select Committee, and the Government of India will only direct attention to one or two points. The omission of the section limiting money rents to a maximum of one-fifth of the gross produce may, perhaps, give rise to some misgivings, and it may be said that with this section the only absolute check on rack-renting has been removed. On the other hand, many objections have from the first, been taken to this provision of the original Bill. It has been condemned as setting up a maximum rate of rent which might possibly be suitable in a particular locality in regard to particular crops, but which would certainly work inequitably as a uniform standard for all classes of crops and in all districts. Thus, in the poorest lands it might leave an insufficient margin for the subsistence of the cultivator, whilst on the best lands it might give him more than he is entitled to get. It has also been condemned as likely to encourage enhancements of rent in all cases in which the rent was below the legal maximum. It has been further condemned as economically vicious, because it leaves out of view the enormously important elements of cost of cultivation, and again because it professes to lay down as a permanent standard of the maximum rent a proportion of the gross produce which circumstances, such as the increasing pressure of the population may make it difficult to maintain. But the most serious objections lay in the notorious difficulty of ascertaining by the agency at the disposal of the Courts either the average produce of different classes of land, or the produce of the particular fields of which the rent was in question; and this latter difficulty is greatly increased by the provision that the average gross produce of the field was to be calculated in staple crops, whatever might be the special crop grown on the land in question. The problem has been repeatedly attacked by experts in connection with the land assessment of temporarily settled provinces; and the results of their elaborate inquiries have been so conflicting and of so little practical value that the Government of India will not concur in the expediency of omitting the gross produce test from the law of enhancement in Bengal. In the Bombay Presidency, experiments have, for years past, been made by Revenue officers with the view of ascertaining the proportion borne by the land assessment to the gross produce. The report of the Director of Agriculture on the experiments for 1882-83 has recently been communicated to the Government of Bengal. It should be referred to as well illustrating the difficulty of the inquiry, and the impossibility of establishing any certain relation between the produce and the rent or revenue. First of all, the produce of particular fields has to be ascertained by actual experiment. Then inquiry has to be made whether the produce is exceptionally large, owing to the exceptional character of the cultivation, or exceptionally small owing to previous cropping or accidents of weather. Then comes a difficult inquiry into the prices obtained by the cultivator and the value of the produce. At every stage there is room for much difference of opinion; and the data obtained from the several experiments are too conflicting to lead to any certain conclusion as to the average value of the produce of different classes of land. The same difficulty was felt in the case of the Khurda Settlement, which was recently referred for the orders of the Government of India by the Government of Bengal. The Settlement-officer of Khurda was certain that his assessment took less than one-fourth of the value of the gross produce; but his estimate and the date on which it was founded were considered of doubtful accuracy by the Government of Bengal. But even if average standards of produce could be ascertained, the facts remain that rent bears no fixed relation to the gross produce. The cost of cultivation is quite as important a factor as the gross produce; and if one fact is clearly brought out by inquiry, it is the impossibility of ascertaining the cost of cultivation with any degree of accuracy.

11. These are some of the considerations which have led the Government of India to agree with the Select Committee that the gross produce test should be abandoned. The Government of India is also inclined to agree with the Select Committee that, failing this test, the most feasible check on rack-renting is to limit the percentage of increase obtainable at any one time on existing rents when rent is enhanced, either by private agreement or by suit. There is an additional reason for fixing a limit on the percentage of increase; and this is that, whatever the land can afford to pay, it is certain that under existing circumstances in India, the ordinary raiyat cannot bear a very large and sudden increase in his rent without the risk of a material deterioration of his agricultural stock and means of living. Great importance is attached by the Government of India to this consideration, in connection with periodical re-assessments of land-revenue. The propriety of the several percentage limits of enhancement specified in the revised Bill, and also the other incidents which the Bill attaches to agreements out of Court to pay a higher rent, are points which may profitably be considered by the Government of Bengal. In other provinces an increase of 20 per cent. in the course of 30 years' settlement is at the present day looked upon as considerable. The Bill allows what is equivalent to 50 per cent. in this term in most cases, and in some circumstances as much as 100 per cent.

12. Before leaving this subject, I am to invite attention to the provisions of Section 42. Fears have been expressed lest the rule under which an occupancy raiyat let into land hitherto held by a non-occupancy tenant has to pay the same, or even under contract an enhanced rent, may have an extensive effect in the direction of raising the prevailing rate of occupancy raiyats. The landlord, as noticed in paragraph 9, may, on acquiring an occupancy holding, re-let it to a non-occupancy tenant at a competition rent. And should it again fall vacant any occupancy tenant of the estate, who may then be let in by the landlord, will be bound to pay this rent. The tendency of these provisions to raise the prevailing rate has been urged by Mr. Reynolds in dissent, and His Excellency in Council would be glad to receive an expression of the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, as to whether the anticipated danger is not such as to require some safeguard, and, should this be the case, in what way it might best be met.

13. The effect of the alterations which have been made in the grounds on which an enhancement suit can be brought should also receive close attention. The most important points are—(a) the restriction of enhancement on the ground of increased productivity to the two separate cases of fluvial action and landlords' improvements; (b) the method proposed for determining enhancements on the ground of a rise in prices. In regard to (a) it should be considered whether the scheme for registering landlords' improvements, which the Bill provides (Sections 91, 92), is sufficient for the purpose, and whether there are any other cases besides the two specified in the Bill, in which enhancement should be allowed on the ground of an increase in the productive powers of the soil. The Government of India is disposed to agree with the Select Committee that this ground of enhancement will be difficult to work, except in the special case of landlords' improvements, in respect to which the requisite information can, to some extent, be obtained by means of registration. In regard to (b) the explanatory remarks of the Select Committee should be considered. Their intention is that authoritative price-lists of staple food-crops should be prepared by the Local Government, and that, in deciding an enhancement-suit on the ground of an increase in prices, the Courts should have regard to these lists as indicating a general rise or fall in prices in local area without any reference to the particular crop grown on the land, the rent of which is in dispute. When a general rise has thus been ascertained, it would rest with the tenant to prove any particular causes which may have prevented him from enjoying the full benefit of the rise. The general tendency of these provisions would be that, so far as this particular ground of enhancement is concerned, the standard of rent as expressed in grain would not vary, but the landlord would be protected from the loss now arising from the diminished purchasing power of silver in relation to grain. The Government of India agrees with the Select Committee that these proposals would very materially facilitate the decision of this class of enhancement cases, and considers also that the zemindars are entitled to some substantial improvement in the procedure for obtaining enhancements of rent in such cases. In many parts of Bengal, the rise in prices of recent years has been very considerable, and the complaints of the zemindars that under the present law, they have been unable to obtain a proportionate increase of rent are admitted to be well founded. If the present proposals of the Select Committee are calculated to work equitably, the Government of India would be glad to see them enacted, as they go far to redeem the promises which have been made at various times to the zemindars. They are, however, not free from difficulties and objections, some of which may here be indicated. The first difficulty will occur in the selection of the staple crop or staple crops for each district, and on this point the opinion of the Government of Bengal and its local officers is very desirable. Is it possible to select in each district one or more staples which are so generally cultivated as to be fairly indicative of the agriculture of the tract? The Select Committee have restricted the staples to food-crops; the objection to the inclusion of other staples, such as jute and indigo, being that they are grown for export in place of food-crops, and are subject to such great fluctuations in prices as to afford no reasonable stable standard of comparison. If staple crops can be selected, it will then be necessary to ascertain whether trustworthy price lists for past years exist or can be now prepared, and what arrangements are possible in the future. Assuming that these points can be satisfactorily settled, the practical effect of the proposed method of enhancement should be considered. Is it safe to presume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that because the price of the staple crop of a district has increased in that district by 20 or 30 per cent., the gross value of the crops produced on any particular holding has increased in the same proportion? And, if this inference be fair, is it further permissible to assume that the rent may be enhanced in exact proportion to the rise in prices, or should some deduction be made to cover the increased cost of production? An increase in prices, again, may possibly be due to temporary or local causes, as, for instance, recurring bad harvests in the tract itself or in adjoining tracts. Can the price lists be made to distinguish the permanent from the temporary rise in prices, and the occasions when the tract has benefited from the rise from those when it has suffered, or must this be left to the discretion of the Courts? Lastly, is the fluctuation of prices recorded at the headquarters of a district or a subdivision a true index to the fluctuations which attend prices obtained by the cultivator in his village? These are some of the questions which require to be considered in connection with the scheme. They point to the impracticability of devising any method of enhancement that can be worked in a purely mechanical way. And this the Bill admits by the provision requiring the Courts not to decree any enhancement which is unfair or inequitable. The question therefore, which the Government of India would have the Government of Bengal consider is whether this provision is sufficient to guide the Courts in applying the price-lists in enhancement-suits, or whether any other considerations to which the Courts ought to have regard, should be more definitely stated in the Bill.

14. The provisions for commuting grain-rents to money-rents also demand attention. In regard to the method of commutation, it would probably be desirable that the officer should ordinarily look to the analogy afforded by the prevailing money rents for similar land, but that the result should be checked by the average rent which the landlord has hitherto received—in other words, by the test of experience. If the latter alone were to be regarded, it is obvious that, as Mr. Reynolds points out, a deduction should be made for the risks and other burthens which the tenant assumes in undertaking a money-rent but if the prevailing money-rent is taken as the primary guide, these risks and burthens will ex hypothesi have been ordinarily discounted. The provisions, therefore, seem to the Government of India to be fair and equitable; but His Excellency in Council will be glad to receive the Lieutenant Governor's views on the point.

15. Non-occupancy raiyats (Chapter VI).—The point on which most difficulty will be felt as regards this class of raiyats is the omission from the Bill of all restrictions on the rent which a landlord may demand from the raiyat on his first entry upon a holding. The Government of India, as already said, agrees with the Select Committee as to the necessity for abandoning a maximum rate of rent fixed in terms of the gross produce, and is inclined also to think that the Bill goes sufficiently far in protecting the non-occupancy raiyat during the period in which he is acquiring rights of occupancy. The great safeguard for raiyats of this class will lie in the broad basis on which the occupancy right is constituted by the Bill, and in view of this, the Government of India would be prepared to accept the proposals of the Select Committee. But before coming to a final conclusion on the matter, it would be glad to learn the views of the Government of Bengal. The Government of India accepts the proposal of the Committee to give the non-occupancy raiyat when enhancement is demanded a five years' lease at a judicial rent as a substitute for compensation for disturbance. This provision also serves to some extent to secure the object of the abandoned maximum based on a proportion of the gross produce, and affords the non-occupancy raiyat a better chance of acquiring occupancy rights under the twelve years' rule; though, as he remains liable to ejectment at the end of the five years' term, it gives the landlord the opportunity of getting rid of a bad tenant if he chooses.

16. The Lieutenant Governor's opinion as to the sufficiency of the protection given to under raiyats in Chapter VII is also requested. It will be remembered that when an occupancy raiyat by sub letting becomes a statutory tenure holder, his immediate tenants become raiyats, and this chapter there upon ceases to apply to them.

17. General provisions as to rent (Chapter VIII).—The only alteration in this chapter to which the Government of India would specially direct attention is the definition in section 83 of the respective rights and liabilities of landlord and tenant as to the possession of the crop where rent is taken by appraisement or division of the produce. It should be ascertained whether this definition is exhaustive, and whether it conforms to practice and custom. The opinion of local officers, especially in South Behar, would be valuable as to the sufficiency of the provisions (sections 81-83) with deal generally with produce rents.

18. Miscellaneous provisions as to landlords and tenants (Chapter IX).—The registration-procedure in respect to landlords' improvements which this chapter provides has already been noticed, and another point to which attention is invited is the manner in which the Select Committee have attempted to solve the very difficult question of abandonment by a tenant. The Government of India is disposed to accept the section (Section 96) as the fairest way of dealing with the conflicting interest of the landlord and tenant in such cases. The Lieutenant Governor's opinion is further invited to the provision of section 101 (standards of measurement) and to the criticisms of the dissentient members of the Committee on the sections relating to the appointment of managers. The chief objections taken to the sections last mentioned are that the law which they are intended to re-enact is practically obsolete, and that they are unnecessary in the present state of society. On the other hand, the Government of India observes that these provisions were very generally approved by the district officers, who reported on the original Bill.

19. Record of rights and settlement of rents (Chapter X).—In this chapter the first point which should be considered is whether the powers conferred or conferable on the Revenue officer charged with the preparation of the record of rights are sufficient for the purpose in view. The Revenue officer must have authority to compel parties to attend to give evidence, to point out boundaries, and to otherwise assist him in his inquiries. He must also have power to enter upon, survey, and demarcate land, and to examine its character and productive powers. Under Section 223 the Local Government is competent to confer certain powers on Revenue officers, and these will probably be sufficient for the purpose, but it would be well if the provisions of the Bill in this respect were carefully examined by an officer versed in settlement procedure. It should also be considered whether the particulars to be included in the record are stated with sufficient fulness in section 111. As the enumeration there given is not exhaustive, the Local Government in issuing an order under the section would be able, if necessary, to add to or vary it. If, however, there is any obvious omission, it might be well to correct it.

20. The second question concerns the important change which has been introduced into the procedure for framing the record of rights. All undisputed entries will simply be presumed to be correct in any future proceeding between the parties until the contrary is proved. Disputed entries will be decided by the Revenue officer according to the regular procedure of a Civil Court, and his decision will have the force of a decree. As regards the undisputed entries, the Government of India agrees with the Select Committee as to the undesirability of attaching more than a disputable presumption to them. As to disputed entries, however, the Government of Bengal should consider whether the Revenue officer is capable of disposing in the manner provided of every class of case which may arise, or whether he should have the power to refer any case of special difficulty or importance to the ordinary Civil Courts. It should also be considered how the proposed appointment of a special judge, or special judges, to hear appeals from the Revenue officer, is likely to work in practice, specially where the paucity of such cases would render it undesirable to appoint a separate officer for the work. The Government of India would like to have some indication of the way in which the Government of Bengal would propose to give effect to this provision. The Select Committee evidently contemplate that the special judge, or judges, should be familiar with the local agricultural system, and should also be judicially qualified for the office. And the point for the Local Government to consider is whether these requirements can be adequately satisfied.

21. Passing now to the sub-chapter, Settlement of Rents, the Government of India would invite attention to three points—(1) the appellate procedure as described in the report of the Select Committee; (2) the restriction of the Settlement officers' powers in regard to the alteration of existing rents; (3) the prohibition of enhancement suits for a term of fifteen years after the preparation of the rent-roll. As regards the first point, the Government of India will not add anything to the remarks of the Select Committee, but would like to have the opinion of the Government of Bengal on the proposal. As regards the second and third points, it will be noticed that the Settlement officer will exercise no powers with respect to the rents of non-occupancy tenants, or of sub-tenants, beyond recording existing facts. With respect to the rents of occupancy-tenants and tenure-holders, his powers are similarly restricted, unless an application that the rent should be altered is made by either landlord or tenant. But whether any alteration is made or not in the rent of an occupancy-tenant or tenure-holder, the rent recorded by the Settlement officer is not to be enhanced during a term of fifteen years, except on the ground of a landlord's improvement, or of an alteration in the area of the holding. This provision has been objected to from the landlord's point of view, and its equitableness should be carefully considered. The obvious advantage of the provision is that it secures the settlement of rents throughout the area by a specially qualified officer with special facilities for dealing with this class of cases; and it can be defended on the ground that, as the landlord is given the opportunity of enhancing by means of a special Court the rent of any occupancy holding, which seems to be held at an unduly low rent, he may be trusted to avail himself of this power, and all rents which he is content to leave as they are may be presumed to be adequate, and, as such, suitable to be confirmed for a term of years. On the other hand, one of the objections taken is that litigation is stimulated, and enhancement suits forced on, which the landlord would otherwise have been willing to postpone. That there is some force in this must be admitted; but looking to the fact that a settlement of rents will not be undertaken, unless the relations between landlord and tenant are unsatisfactory, and litigation is impending, the Government of India is disposed to accept the proposals of the Select Committee as, on the whole, most favourable to the true interests of both parties. It may be well to notice that, as the Settlement officer will have no power to alter the rents of non-occupancy tenants, the ordinary provisions of Chapter VI, as to enhance will continue to apply to them, notwithstanding a settlement of the rents of the occupancy tenants. Your attention has already been called in Paragraph 4, to the Secretary of State's remarks regarding the general introduction of a survey and record of rights, and the Government of India would be glad to learn in what way and to what sort of areas the Lieutenant Governor thinks it would be expedient to apply the procedure which the Bill provides for making records of rights and settlement of rents.

22. TABLES OF RATES, Chapter XI.—The Select Committee have explained that, though the procedure under this chapter, with only a few minor alterations, has been retained, its use will probably be confined to special tracts, and it is no longer so important a feature in the Bill as it was in the original draft. The practical utility of the table in any tract is the question which the Government of India would now like the Government of Bengal to consider. Assuming that it is found possible for a Revenue officer to frame rates of rent for different classes of land, and that these rates are, on the whole, equitable, it is certain that, if the land can be brought under the right class, the procedure of the Courts will be very greatly facilitated; but there still remains the difficulty that the Civil Court may often have to ascertain by local inquiry to what class or classes of land the holding belongs when a suit to enhance the rent is instituted under Section 134. If the land is of fairly even quality, or falls into clearly marked classes, there may be no room for a dispute on this point. But if this is not the case, and the tenant contests the landlord's classification, the local inquiry might be charged with delicate questions of land valuation, and it is no disparagement of the Civil Courts to say that they have rarely at their command subordinate agents capable of discharging their duties satisfactorily. These difficulties are by no means conclusive as to the inutility of the table of rates, but they seem to deserve consideration.

23. RECORD OF PROPRIETORS, PRIVATE LANDS.—(Chapter XII).—With this chapter should be read Section 30, which in its restriction of the accrual of occupancy-rights in this class, of lands is understood to be in literal conformity with the existing law. The combined description and definition of this class of lands which the Select Committee have substituted for the definition in the Bill, will so far meet the landlords' objections in that they allow greater weight to be attached to local custom by the Court or officer engaged in determining what are private lands. The assumption also that all lands must be either khamar or raiyati has been excluded from the Bill. The Government of India is disposed to accept the Select Committee's solution of a very difficult question. It will be noticed that by section 30 the acquisition of occupancy rights in land recorded as khamar or zerrat is not prevented when the tenant holds otherwise than on a lease from year to year.

24. DISTRAINT.—(Chapter XIII).—The Select Committee have substantially retained the provisions of the original Bill with the minor alterations specified in their report. They have not, on the one hand, seen their way to reverting to the procedure of the present law as advocated by the landlords, nor have they accepted the suggestion of the Government of Bengal to abolish distraint altogether with respect to occupancy-raiyats whilst retaining it in its present form (though with sharper penalties in the case of abuse) for non occupancy and korfa raiyats. The Government of India is satisfied that if distraint is to be maintained at all, the process can no longer be left to the unsupervised action of the zemindars' servants, and the reference to the Courts is an essential safeguard. It would be well, however, for the Government of Bengal, to examine what foundation there is for the criticism that the delay caused by obtaining the aid of the Court before the first step to distraint can be taken, must deprive the process of its utility. In considering this point, the effect of the new provision enabling an interim order to be issued by the Court (section 141 (3)) should not be overlooked. As regards the former proposal to abolish distraint in the case of occupancy tenants, the Government of India is inclined to doubt the universal correctness of the argument that in the saleability of the occupancy right the landlord has perfect security for his rent. The occupancy right must vary greatly in value in different districts; and where the population is sparse and land abundant, it may very possibly be unsaleable. It would seem, therefore, that the process of distraint should apply to both classes of raiyats. It has, moreover, been suggested that in the case of an improvident peasantry a remedy against the crop may be a more humane process than the remedy against the land. For these reasons the Government of India would be willing to consider any suggestions for still further improving or cheapening the procedure adopted by the Select Committee, and with reference to the doubts above expressed as to the effects of delay, commends the question specially to the consideration of the Government of Bengal.

25. JUDICIAL PROCEDURE (Chapter XIV).—The several questions in connection with this chapter on which the Select Committee specially desire to have the advice of the Bengal Government, have already been noticed. The specific proposal put forward by the zemindars with the view of shortening the procedure in rent suits was that a landlord should be permitted to institute a collective suit against any number of tenants belonging to one village by means of a single plaint. The advantages claimed for this procedure appear to be (1) the reduction in the stamp duty and possibly in pleader's fees; (2) the possible reduction of process fees, as the notices could be served by one process server on the same date on all the defendants, and possibly also on the plaintiff's witnesses; (3) the hearing of the cases on the same date. It is obvious that all advantage from this procedure ceases from the appearance of the parties in Court. Each case would have to be heard separately, and would require a separate decree and separate execution process. The merits of the scheme are thus very limited; but as the zemindars have laid much stress on it, the Government of India would like it to be carefully considered by the Government of Bengal. It may, however, be observed that the advantages claimed for the scheme might, to a great extent, be obtained by executive orders under the existing law. The stamp duty on rent suits might, for instance, be reduced, and a lower scale of fees prescribed for processes issued on the same day on persons residing in the same village. It must, however, be borne in mind that any proposal to reduce court fees, either generally or in rent suits, cannot be considered with exclusive reference to Bengal.

26. The possibility of facilitating the service of the summons might also be considered, and the Government of India, as already mentioned, proposes to ask the advice of the High Court on this chapter. But it will gladly welcome any suggestions which local officers may offer for attaining the object of a speedier and cheaper method of recovering arrears, provided always that it does not jeopardise the raiyat's right to have his case fully heard, and that it does not require him to pay money into court before his liability to pay is established. The Committee aim at securing an important and very necessary reform by the provision of section 164. It is desirable to know if, in the opinion of local officers, the section is sufficient to fulfil this purpose.

27. By Chapter XVI the method of summary sale is made applicable to tenures other than putni tenures which may hereafter be registered. It is expedient that no time should be lost in considering this scheme for registering tenures, so that, if it be found feasible, it may be introduced into the Bengal Council at an early date.

28. The remaining chapters of the Bill, though they require to be carefully examined by the Government of Bengal, do not call for detail remark in this letter. There is one point, however, in Chapter XVII, (Contract and Custom) to which reference may be made. By section 210 (b) a raiyat is prevented from contracting himself out of the incidence of the occupancy-right specified in section 31, and among these incidents is the right of transfer. The Government of India has re-learned from re-opening in this letter the much-discussed question of the expediency of conferring the right of transfer on the occupancy raiyat. The question was fully considered by the Government of Bengal in its letter of Sept. 27, and the Select Committee have adopted the view there set forth. It has, however, been urged by the zemindars that the raiyat might at least be given the power of contracting himself out of this right, and that by means of such a provision a landlord could prevent the acquisition of occupancy holdings by money-lenders and speculative land-jobbers. Such a provision is open to numerous objections, but the suggestion, as well as the similar suggestion that a raiyat should be allowed to contract himself out of the right to sublet, may be brought to the notice of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

29. In conclusion, I am to request that the reply to this letter may be so sent as to reach this Government not later than the end of August.

I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

D. FITZPATRICK,
Secretary to the Government of India.

No. 785.

From D. Fitzpatrick, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Legislative Department, to the Registrar, High Court, Calcutta. Simla, May 5, 1884.

SIR,—I am directed by his Excellency the Governor General in Council to request you to invite the attention of the Honourable the Judges of the High Court to the Report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, published in the Gazette of India on March 29 and April 5 and 12, and especially to paragraph 99 of the Report, in which the Committee state that they would be glad to have the advice of the Honourable the Judges on several matters connected with the Bill.

2. The particular points mentioned by the Committee are—

(a) What modifications it may be desirable to make, whether by rules or otherwise in the Code of Civil Procedure, with a view to expedite the trial of rent-suits, and in particulars whether it is desirable that landlords should be empowered to institute, by means of a single plaint, suits for arrears against a number of raiya's holding independently of each other.

(b) Whether any provision can safely be enacted restricting the right to claim a re-trial when a decree has been given ex parte. "We are aware," the Committee say in referring to this point, "that a Judge is in no way bound to admit a re-trial, unless he is satisfied that the summons failed to reach the defendant, or that he was prevented by some sufficient cause from appearing; but the representations made to us are to the effect that the due service of the summons is systematically denied, and that the Courts too readily accept the plea, thus encouraging tactics the only object of which is to interpose delay and to involve the landlord in unnecessary expense in recovering his dues."

"The proposal before us," they continue, "was that ex parte suits should not be re-tried, except upon the defendant depositing the amount decreed; but we were unwilling to adopt this proposal on the information before, and desired that it should be referred for the consideration of the Hon. Judges of the High Court."

(c) A suggestion that a defendant in a suit for arrears should not be allowed to appeal from a decree passed against him, except on depositing the amount of the decree.

3. His Excellency in Council desires me to enclose, for the information of the Hon. the Judges, some correspondence * which has recently taken place, bearing on one of the matters submitted by the Select Committee. It will be observed that the correspondence has not yet been completed, a final reply having still to be received from the Government of Bengal.

4. His Excellency the Governor-General in Council would ask the Honourable the Judges to give to these questions their careful consideration, as it is important that the Government should have their advice on such matters. It would be convenient if the views of the Honourable Judges could reach the Government of India at an early date, in order that they may be communicated to the Select Committee before the Bill is again taken under consideration by that body, and, as the subject is still under the consideration of the Government of Bengal, I am to suggest that the Honourable the Judges may facilitate a decision by forwarding a copy of their reply direct to the Government of Bengal.

I am to add that the Government of India would be glad to receive at the same time any remarks which the Honourable the Judges may

Secretary to the Government of India.

THE TENANCY BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ENGLISHMAN."

SIR,—The Select Committee admits that the rule, so far as regards the acquisition of the status of a settled ryot and the right of occupancy, remains unchanged. But, if the Government had inquired into the matter it could have been proved by the ryots themselves that they do not like to allow men of another village to acquire rights of occupancy in their own village. A resident cultivator could never acquire right of occupancy beyond the limits of the village in which he lived. Sir John Shore defined a resident cultivator as any one who cultivated the land in the village in which he lived.

Will the Government, in giving the right of occupancy to a stranger in the way contemplated by the Tenancy Bill, also give him all the rights belonging to a resident ryot, or, in other words, will the ryots of one village who can come within the definition of settled ryots of another village, with the right of occupancy acquire also the right of fishing, pasturage, the right of performing Id Namaz and Pujas in the village of their statutory or theoretical residence? I need scarcely mention here the amount of jealousy with which the villagers look upon each other when they come to interfere with these rights. If we go through the sessions records of Eastern Bengal, it will be seen that most of the serious riots have originated from causes connected with fishing, grazing of cattle, and boat races in the month of Srabon. The right of transfer, combined with the provisions relating to the acquisition of the right of occupancy, will afford a great stimulus to the turbulent Farazee Mussulmans of Eastern Bengal to break each other's heads.

If the mode of acquiring right of occupancy as provided by the Bill may create inconvenience in exceptionally large estates, will it not a fortiori cause greater inconvenience in exceptionally small estates scattered all over the district or districts? A theoretical measure conceived in utter ignorance of existing circumstances can never stand the test of reason and justice.

Chapter II of the Bill and Sec. 37 afford to occupancy ryots the privilege of converting their holdings into tenures whenever it suits them. To-day a man is an ordinary occupancy ryot, to-morrow he can create himself a tenure holder by subletting a portion of his holding or more than half of it. See Sec. 37 and 5. So it will be seen that every ryot holding more than a hundred begahs of land can become a Patwedar whenever he may choose to become so. He can also create undertenures, and the undertenure holders can also create se-tenures, and the se-tenure holders may create fourth tenures and so on, and this privilege is not only given to ryots holding more than a hundred begahs of land, but ryots subletting more than half of their holding have been empowered also to create all these subtenures. What a beautiful device our rulers have adopted to put restrictions on subletting. Then the explanation attached to Section 37 provides that a person who has been converted into a tenure holder does not cease to be so by reason of the portion of his holdings subletting to be more than one-half of his holding; so it will be seen the principle of Hindu law, "once vested, cannot be divested," has been applied to these tenure holders also.

We cannot really understand what meaning our rulers intend to convey by clause 4, section 35, which runs thus:—"In the case of gifts made by Mahomedans nothing in this section shall apply to a gift to a person within the prohibited degrees." What are we to understand by the words "within the prohibited degrees?" Do they mean persons who cannot marry each other, or who cannot be heirs to each other?

A VICTIM OF THE TENANCY BILL.

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION MEETING.

The Annual General Meeting of the British Indian Association was held on the 12th of May, at the hall of the Association at half-past four o'clock. There were present:—Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, Rai Bahadoor, LL.D., C.I.E., president; Baboo Damodur Das Burman, Nawab Mir Mahommed Ali, Maharajah Narendra Krishna Bahadoor, Baboo Kristo Gopal Ghose, Juggodesh Nath Roy, Griesh Chunder Ghose, Surendra Nath Pal Chowdhry, Boykuntha Nath Basu, Adhurlal Sen, Bejoy Kissen Mookerjee, Peary Mohun Mookerjee, Joykissen Mookerjee, Chare Chunder Mullick, Odoy Chund Dutt, Kumud Krishna Mitter, Joggendra Chundra Ghosh, Okhil Chunder Mookerjee, Herjesbhoy Manickjee Customjee, Esq., Baboo Gopal Chunder Gupta, Kumar Denendra Narain Ray, Baboo Kisseroy Mohun Gossain, Rai Buddree Das Mukim Bahadoor, Baboo Roma Nath Ghose.

The President said that the first business before the meeting was their annual report which their Secretary would read out.

The Secretary (Hon. Kristodas Pal) then very briefly read out a few of the chief items in the report. The first was the Criminal Jurisdiction Bill. The report stated:—

"The object of the Bill was to remove, to a certain extent, the blot on the law of the land which arose from race-distinctions in the administration of justice in British India Courts. It evoked much violent and very unseemly opposition from the British inhabitants of Bengal. Public feeling was so roused and race animosity got so rampant that, in the interest of public peace and harmony, your committee thought it fit to allay irritation by following a policy of inaction. The Government in a manner was pledged to the measure, and in the calm atmosphere of the Council Chamber, it was expected that justice and fair play would meet with no serious opposition, and everything would be done for the best. This object, however, was not gained. The inaction of the native community was interpreted by certain sections of the Anglo-Indian public to mean that the natives did not care for the measure, and to remove this impression, your committee deemed it expedient to submit, in conjunction with several native associations of Calcutta, a joint memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy. This was signed by the representatives of the British Indian Association, the East Bengal Association, the Mahomedan Literary Society, the National Mahomedan Association, the Indian Association, and the Vakeels Association of the High Court, Calcutta. In this memorial the several bodies expressed their satisfaction and thankfulness for the introduction of the Bill in the Viceroy's Council, which proposed to remove race disqualification in the trial of European British subjects in criminal cases. This was a step, they said, in advance towards the establishment of that equality in the eye of the law, without the invidious distinction of country, race, or religion, which was the just pride of British jurisprudence and policy, and the guiding principle of British rule in India. They then referred to their intention of convening a public meeting to give an emphatic contradiction to the statement of indifference on the part of the native community in the matter of the Bill; but, remembering how such a demonstration was apt to lead to a display of passions and feelings, and to spread wide the flame of race animosity and antipathy, they thought fit to express their views in the form of a memorial. The memorialists further said that, relying on justice and liberality of the Government of the present Viceroy and of Her Majesty's Government in England, and on the noble principles which actuated the great British nation in the government of peoples of many races and religions, they felt every confidence that His Excellency in Council would not allow any clamour, taunt, or threat based on mistaken and prejudiced notions, to interfere with the progress and due enforcement of this just and righteous measure. The Committee deeply regret to say that the Bill has since been passed in a form which will all but completely defeat the object for which it was framed. It is the more to be regretted that the alterations made in the Bill will, in some cases, interfere with the equal and fair administration of justice between the natives and the British-born subjects of Her Majesty. The Bill has finally passed, gave to certain favoured races privileges and immunities which are highly prejudicial to all sense of equality in criminal law." The second head of the report was the Agricultural Loans Bill. The Committee made a representation to the Bengal Council, protesting against certain provisions of the Act, but the Council did not amend it in the way proposed. With regard to the Port Trust Amendment Bill, the speaker said that that Committee made certain proposals, but unfortunately did not meet with success. The Hill Coolies Bill had been passed, although the committee were against it. The Mofussil Municipalities Act Amendment Bill had been adopted by the Bengal Council. But the chief attention of the committee was directed during the year to the Bengal Tenancy Bill. The report stated:—"The action taken in connection with the Bengal Tenancy Bill was chiefly through the agency of the Central Committee of the landlords of Bengal and Behar, and the operations herein described were for the most part conducted by that committee."

The speaker said what was now necessary to allude to was the part the Committee took in the reception of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. The report stated:—

"In the second week of November last, the Committee received a communication from the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta, informing them of a decision come to by the Town Council of the Corporation to take some steps for the purpose of providing a suitable reception for their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and to invite the chief representative bodies in Calcutta to co-operate with the Corporation in forming a General Committee of all classes of the community for that purpose, and further inquired whether this association will unite with the Corporation in furthering the object, and if they do so, they will depute one or more representatives at their discretion to meet the representatives of the Corporation and of other associations for the purpose of forming a committee for considering the best manner of welcoming their Royal Highnesses on their arrival in Calcutta.

Reply of the Committee.—The Committee in their reply expressed their satisfaction in co-operating with the Calcutta Corporation in the proposed demonstration of loyalty, and nominated the undermentioned members as their representatives on the Reception Committee:—

Rai Rajendralala Mitra Bahadoor, C.I.E., LL.D., President of the British Indian Association.

Maharaja Sir Jotendra Mohun Tagore Bahadoor, K.O.S.I.

Maharaja Narendra Krishna Bahadoor.

Hon. Durga Churn Law.

The Committee rendered assistance to the Calcutta International Exhibition, and also afforded help in the address which Mr. Joubert delivered at the hall of the British Indian Association. They further distributed 2,000 copies of a Bengalee circular, inviting all classes of people to come and witness the Exhibition. The Committee regretted the death of Baboo Peary Chand Mittra. He was, the speaker said, of great assistance in times of emergency. The speaker thought that a tribute of fitting testimony should be raised to his memory. Lastly, the speaker laid before the meeting an abstract of the finances of the Association, and said that they made had an addition of Rs.4,000 in two years.

It was then moved by Baboo Oodoy Chund Dutt, and seconded by Baboo Kristo Gopal Ghose, that the annual report and accounts be approved and adopted.

The President, in a very lengthy speech, said, that before the motion could be put to the vote he deemed it necessary to give a brief summary of portions of the report. He said, that owing to the illness of his friend to the right, he had been obliged to give them only a summary of the report, and not to read the whole of it. He congratulated the Committee of Management on the success which had attended them. It was thirty-two years since that association had been started, and during the whole of that time, he had been connected with it, except with the brief interval of two months, so that he was in a position to say that the institution was never in a more thriving situation than it was at present. The list of members was exceedingly steady and satisfactory, and their financial condition showed a handsome saving. The material prosperity of the association also continued very satisfactory. The committee had been steadily at work from the year 1852, when they first started, to the year 1883, and they had done as much work as they had occasion to undertake. The only thing that he had to mourn on the present occasion was the loss of two of their very valuable members. The first was Peary Chand Mittra. It would be long before they should be able to replace so valuable a co-adjutor. He was glad to find that a few months ago this association took the leading part in holding a meeting to devise means for perpetuating the memory of Peary Chand Mittra—a subscription for which purpose had been opened, and various sums had been subscribed. He hoped ere long to have the pleasure of seeing the bust of that gentleman placed in some corner of this institution. The other gentleman was Raja Prannath Dass, of Diggaputty. This gentleman had erected a noble monument of his goodness by contributing a lakh and fifty thousand rupees for the Rajshahaye College. He was for some time a member of the Bengal Council. Turning to the work done by the committee, the speaker said, the first subject noticed in the report was the Jurisdiction Bill—the notorious Ilbert Bill. It was conceived in the best spirit. Nothing could be nobler than the idea which the highest statesman at the head of Government conceived in order to do away with the race distinction in matters of law. He was in a manner going to follow in the footsteps of that nobleman, Lord William Bentinck, who inaugurated the Civil Jurisdiction Bill. In so far there had been a deduction, not a gain, in the Ilbert Bill. Consequently the Bill had been an absolute folly. He was sorry that the day of re-opening the question had been deferred sine die. It would be a very strong Government, indeed which would be able hereafter to come forward to re-open the case, so the means of amendment had been indefinitely lost to them. They could not mourn more deeply for any other act of the Government of this country. They must have heard that this Bill had been passed under the administration of a nobleman who had justly endeared himself to the whole native community by his liberal sentiments and views. The Agricultural Loans Bill was the next subject on which he spoke. He said that this Bill should not be passed, and ought to be rejected. The Excise Act Amendment Bill did not require any remarks, except that he regretted that they should be deprived of the refreshing beverage, called khajoor rosh. The next was the Port Trust Act Amendment Bill. This was one of those things which people in this country will complain from time to time. There was a solemn privilege by Lord Dalhousie that the Strand was intended for the health and recreation of the people of this city. The present interpretation of that term was to erect large three-storied godowns and thus the ventilation of the town had been blocked. The speaker would like to know why the Strand, which was reserved for the health and recreation of the people of this town should be used for building godowns for storing jute. The Hill Coolies Bill was next referred to. He said it appeared that the hill coolies were not allowed to exercise their calling, except by obtaining a license from the magistrate of the district or the Municipal Commissioner of the district; and if a man happened to go to Darjeeling and get out of the train, and ask a wayfarer to take his clothing to his lodging, then, if that wayfarer happened to be an unlicensed individual, he would really be sent on to the magistrate for trial and sent to gaol for six months. No man ought to be permitted to sell his own labour, except with the license of the magistrate, and the fare was to be regulated by the employer, not the employed. The Bill was modified to some extent, but it was still in full force in Darjeeling and Kurseong, the Mofussil Municipality Act Amendment Bill. He had read the discussion and the resolutions passed with regard to this Bill in the Bengal Council. He could only say that the richer the man the less he should pay for municipal purposes. He next spoke on the Bengal Tenancy Bill. He said that the Government should consult the interests of both the zemindars and the ryots before this Bill could be passed into law. He concluded by saying that their committee had done their utmost in carrying on the business of this association, and he should now retire and leave the presidency to the gentleman on his left (Maharaja Narendra Krishna) who would succeed him. That gentleman's knowledge and vast experience in matters connected with the association would, no doubt, enable him satisfactorily to discharge the duties of president. He then put the resolution to the vote that the report and accounts be adopted, which was unanimously carried.

Baboo Bejoy Kissen Mookerjee then proposed that the best thanks of the committee be tendered to the retiring president, to the secretary, to the office-bearers, and also to the members of the committee, for the untiring zeal and industry with which they had performed their duties during the past year. The motion was seconded by Baboo Koomud Kissen Mitter, and carried unanimously.

The under-mentioned gentlemen were elected members of the Association:—

Baboo Dwarka Nath Mookerjee, Rai Bahadur, Zemindar, Kidderpore—proposed by Baboo Joykissen Mookerjee, seconded by Maharajah Narendra Krishna, Bahadur.

Baboo Nilcomul Mitter, merchant and landholder, Calcutta and Allahabad—proposed by Baboo Joggodesh Nath Roy, seconded by Baboo Jodoolal Mullick.

Hon. Chunder Madhab Ghosh,—proposed by Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, Bahadur, K. C. S. I., seconded by Baboo Joggendra Chandra Ghosh.

Maharaja Coomur Ramessur Sing, Bahadur, C.S., Durbhunga, proposed by Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, Bahadur, K.C.S.I., seconded by Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, Rai Bahadur, L.L.D., C.I.E.

Rai Bunwarilal Bahadur, Zemindar, Durbhunga—proposed by Maharajah Sir Jotendra Mohun Tagore, Bahadur, K.C.S.I., seconded by Baboo Saligram Sing.

Baboo Fani Bhusun Chatterjee, barrister at law—proposed by Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, Bahadur, K.C.S.I., seconded by Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee.

Baboo Kumud Kissen Mitter, zemindar, Calcutta—proposed by Baboo Jodoo Lal Mullick, seconded by Maharajah Narendra Krishna, Bahadur.

Baboo Dwarku Nath Chuckerbutty, zemindar and pleader, Beerbhoom—proposed by Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee, seconded by Baboo Joggendra Chandra Ghosh.

Baboo Bhuggobutty Prosono Roy—proposed by Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee, and seconded by Gresh Chunder Ghose.

Baboo Adder Lall Sen proposed, and Damoodur Dass Burman seconded, that the following gentlemen be selected office-bearers, for the ensuing year:—

President—Maharajah Narendra Krishna, Bahadur.

Vice-Presidents—Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, L.L.D., C.I.E., His Highness the Maharajah Lutchmessur Singh, Bahadur, of Durbhunga, Baboo Joykissen Mookerjee, and Baboo Doorga Churn Law.

Committee—Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, Bahadur, K.C.S.I., H. H. the Maharajah Kristi Pratap Sahai, Bahadur, Rajah Harendra Krishna, Bahadur, Rajah Suttanund Ghosal, Bahadur, Kumar Debendra Mullick, Baboo Jodoo Lal Mullick, Baboo Gobind Lal Seal, Baboo Deno Nath Mullick, Baboo Chunder Kant Mookerjee, Baboo Grish Chunder Ghose, Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee, Rajah Poorna Chunder Singh, Nawab Mir Mahomed Ali, Baboo Narendra Nath Sen, Herjeebhoy Manickjee Rustomjee, Esq., Baboo Ohoy Churn Guhu, Baboo Shama Churn Law, Baboo Joggendra Chandra Ghose, Baboo Gurudas Banerjee, D.L., Baboo Kali Nath Mitter, Baboo Sreenath Chandra, Baboo Surendranath Pal Chowdry, Baboo Baikanthanath Bose, Baboo Kali Prosonno Ghose, Baboo Joggodesh Nath Roy, Baboo Saligram Singh, Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf, Kumar, Surrat Chander Singh, Baboo Surendro Mohun Tagore, Hon. Hurbans Sahai, Hon. Chunder Madhub Ghose, Baboo Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, and Hon. Kristodas Pal, Rai Bahadur, C. I. E., Secretary; the motion was put and carried.

Dr. Rajendralala Mitra then made over the presidency to Maharajah Narendra Krishna Bahadur.

Maharajah Narendra Krishna, on taking the chair, said:—

Gentlemen,—From the annual report, which we have just heard read by our able secretary, it will be seen that among other matters of public interest considered last year by the association, it gives a fair history of the Bengal Tenancy Bill. As this Bill has been exhaustively discussed both here and in England, any lengthy remarks on it by me will, I think, be quite out of place. But I shall merely glance at one or two of the principal objections to which it is most open. I am sure that no case whatever for legislative interference to the extent contemplated by it has been made out, and to persist in passing it in face of the hard logic of facts and figures, which unmistakably disprove the necessity of a measure of a revolutionary character seems to be a most objectionable course to pursue. We asked of Government to afford us increased facilities for realising our rents from our ryots, and the Government, in its supreme wisdom, answers our appeal by attempting to thrust upon us this obnoxious Bill, which in fact not only aims to deprive us of our rights, but also to cruelly unsettle the hitherto amicable relations between us and our ryots, which took years to form and consolidate, and which are now to be so ruthlessly dissolved without any just cause at a moment's notice! It is not worthy of credence that the establishment of fixity of tenure throughout the country could be claimed as a reason in support of it; for statistics, carefully collected by our Association, go to prove the other way. These show that the ryots are already perfectly secured in the enjoyment of their possessions, and are subject only to the payment of rents agreed upon between them and the zemindars. They also clearly prove that landlords seldom, if ever, abused their power of ejectment. So the argument based upon the fixity principle, flimsy as it would appear at the very first blush, falls flat to the ground. The right of free sale of tenures is already recognised where the custom of the country allows it, and in other parts, though the ryots cannot claim it as a privilege, the zemindars scarcely refuse to accord their sanction to such transfers when the ryots get them recorded in their sheristah. I believe the practice of levying small fees on such occasions cannot be reasonably objected to. There are other points such as occupancy rights, table of rates, maximum rents, &c., on which having dwelt at some length elsewhere, and more or less at other meetings held sometime ago to consider the provisions of the Bill, I would not inflict a needless repetition of my views regarding them on the meeting. It is with a heavy heart that I have to observe that my friend, Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, vacates the Presidency by rotation this year. His services to the Association have been conspicuous. They are so patent and widely appreciated by us that they need no words of commendation from me. I thank you, gentlemen, for electing me President of your Association.

Baboo Joy Kissen Mookerjee said:—The Bengal Tenancy Bill, as revised by the Select Committee, to which it was referred, has been made public; but it appears to me that the scant consideration which the Bill has received in their hands is not the least prominent among the numerous untoward and inexplicable circumstances which mark the origin and progress of this unfortunate measure. No inquiry was made into local conditions and circumstances; no witnesses, excepting some in an informal way were examined in regard to the various questions, which could not be determined otherwise than on an examination of evidence, and no measures were taken to collect a body of statistics on points on which the informations received by them were conflicting. They themselves admit that "there are various points on which we consider that further information is requisite," and yet they have not hesitated to submit, in hot haste, their proposals for amendment of a measure which would materially affect the social economy and the vested rights of a vast community, and which, as such, should have received in their hands the fullest consideration. And the result is that we have now before us a much worse Bill than what was introduced into Council in March, 1883. The provisions relating to the acquisition of the right of occupancy and the incidents of that right were bad enough, and to those the Select Committee had added a section creating a rebuttable presumption of occupancy right in every case, and thus throwing the whole onus of proof on the landholder. They have vastly enlarged the sphere of restriction to freedom of contract. They have omitted the provision regarding forfeiture of tenant rights on a disclaimer of landlord's title, and have thus, not only held a premium to false pleas, but have also deprived landholders of an equitable relief which, on every consideration, they are entitled to. In spite of overwhelming official testimony to the fact that the presumption of fixity of rent has deprived landholders of their just dues in regard to innumerable holdings, which did not exist at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the Select Committee have not only retained that provision, but have rendered it worse by extending it to cases in which produce rent has been, or shall be, commuted to money rent. The provisions of the amended Bill, regarding the sale of occupancy rights and sub-letting by occupancy ryots, would take away most valuable rights from landholders, and would at the same time reduce the ryots to the position of labourers in the interests of a class of men who possess no rights whatever at present, nor are on any equitable ground entitled to any. The number of restrictions that have been suggested in regard to enhancement of rent, either out of Court or by suit in Court, would not only stop all enhancements of rent, but would also curtail, to a material extent, the right to enhancement which landlords at present, at least in theory, enjoy. The provisions relating to distraint amount virtually to an abolition of the process, while no proposals whatever have been made for giving landholders any facilities for recovering admitted rents. It was feared that the whole tendency of the original Bill was to set landholders and ryots by the ears without doing good to anybody, but the licensed and unlicensed practitioners of law. I have no doubt that the tendency of the amended Bill in that direction would be worse. The ability and fearlessness with which the Hon. Rai Kristodas Pal has criticised the main provisions of the amended Bill in his dissent, leave little room for further comment. There is no doubt that that dissent and the dissent of the Hon. Maharajah of Durbhunga will receive due attention at the hands of the Secretary of State and his Council, but I would move that the Sub-Committee of the Central Committee of Landholders be requested to direct their attention to the amended Tenancy Bill with a view to a further and continued agitation on the subject.

The resolution was seconded and carried. Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerjee, with a few observations, moved "that measures be taken to submit a memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy in Council on the subject of the limit of age for candidates for the Indian Civil Service competition."

Baboo Jogendro Chunder Ghose seconded the resolution which on being put to the meeting, was carried.

After a vote of thanks to the Chair, the meeting separated.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Major F. G. Teale, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, has been granted six months' leave to England on private affairs.

Mr. Nicholetts, Assistant Commissioner, Amrohi, has been elected Captain of the A Company Berar Volunteers.

Paymasters of regiments and officers commanding batteries of artillery have to take the monthly muster in future.

Lieutenant F. H. J. Birch, R.A., No. 3, Peshawar Mountain Battery, has been granted leave to Kashmir, on private affairs.

The transfer of Lieutenant P. E. O'Clague from the Rangoon Volunteer Rifles to the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles has been sanctioned.

Lieutenant Colonel R. M. Lloyd, S. C., Assistant Adjutant General, Poona Division, has been granted furlough to Europe for one year, on medical certificate.

The Mounted Infantry and Naval Artillery Volunteers represented the Presidency Volunteers on the Queen's birthday parade at Calcutta on the 24th May.

Brigadier General Blair, commanding the Aden Brigade, is about to proceed to Europe, being called thither by private affairs. He will be away from his command for three months.

Sixty days' privilege leave has been granted to Captain Atkinson, Adjutant of the Bombay Volunteer Corps; and three months' leave of absence to Captain and Paymaster A. King.

Colonel M. N. Channer, V.C., Second in Command of the 32nd Pioneers, has been appointed Commandant of the 14th Sikhs in the place of Colonel L. H. Williams, vacated.

Lieutenant H. S. Wishart, 1st Punjab Volunteer Rifle Corps, has been promoted to Captain to fill an existing vacancy, and Quartermaster Serjeant J. Robb has been appointed Lieutenant vice Wishart.

Lieutenant Colonel Aylmer Vivian, commanding 3rd Punjab Cavalry, has been granted leave from May 10 to the port of Bombay, preparatory to retirement from the service on the 19th dem.

Lieutenant Colonel Battiscombe, R.A., has taken over command of the Royal Artillery at Lucknow. Colonel Bouldestone, 17th Lancers, has gone home on three months' privilege leave.

Thursday's Bombay Government Gazette contains the notification that Major General Sir J. Ross, K.C.B., commanding the Poona Division, has been granted six months' leave to Europe on medical certificate.

The two companies of the Bombay Sappers and Miners were to leave Quetta on the 12th instant, for Manji, for employment on the Hurnai Road, along with the Bengal Sappers and Miners and 1st Madras Pioneers.

With the sanction of His Excellency the Commander in Chief sixty days' privilege leave of absence is granted to Captain F. J. A. Wiehe, Deputy Assistant Adjutant General for Musketry, 2nd Circle, from such date as he may avail himself of it.

Native drivers of Mountain Batteries of Royal Artillery are to be allowed the following scale of clothing:—Biennially—one blue serge blouse; one pair blue serge knicker-bockers; one pair blue serge bandage or leggings. Every seven years—A great coat.

The services of Lieutenant C. P. Campbell, Officiating Squadron Officer, 2nd Regiment Scinde Horse, have been placed at the disposal of the Foreign Department, for employment as officiating Squadron Officer of the 2nd Regiment, Central India Horse.

The schoolmistresses of the British Army stationed in India are to be allowed to remit their savings bank and family allowances to England at the rate of 2s. ½d. the rupee as heretofore, pending receipt of the orders that will be issued on the subject of increased pay.

The following officers have been granted furlough to Europe on private affairs:—Colonel G. J. Melliss, S.C., Examiner, Public Works Accounts, Bombay; Major R. Westmacott, Second in Command, 1st Grenadiers, Native Infantry; and Lieutenant Gordon, Adjutant, 16th Native Infantry.

The following appointments have been made:—40th N.I.—Lieutenant Wood to be adjutant, vice Briscoe, vacated on promotion. 8th N.I.—Lieutenant Dunn, supernumerary on establishment, to be permanent wing officer, vice Stockly vacated. Lieutenant Maxwell from 6th N.I. to 6th B.C., as officiating squadron officer.

Brigade Surgeons of the Indian service selected for promotion to the administrative grade are to be attached for two months to the office of a deputy surgeon general before they are promoted. Those who have performed at least six months' military duty within the previous three years to be exempted from this probationary service.

Lieutenant Colonel J. J. S. O'Neill, 2nd Battalion Lancashire Fusiliers, now at Mhow, will be placed on the retired pay, from June 8 next, when he completes four years' service as a regimental lieutenant colonel; and Colonel Colquhoun, 2nd Battalion, Middlesex Regiment, will be placed on half pay from the 20th idem.

Lieutenant Colonel Hanna, Assistant Quartermaster General, on his return from furlough next month, will, it is believed, be posted to the Presidency District in the place of Captain A. J. Pearson, who will be transferred to Meerut on Major Gaselee giving up his appointment on the expiration of his tenure. It is a rule in the department that each of the officers shall have a season at Allahabad—a trooping season—consequently it is probable that Captain St. J. Michell, at present with the Rawal Pindi Division, may in due course be brought down for his year shortly.

Says the Lahore paper:—"It seems pretty well certain that General Sir C. C. Ross will succeed General Cureton in the Oudh command, in October next. At any rate, he has been offered and has accepted the appointment. It is also pretty well known that Sir C. Ross would have liked Allahabad; but there is not much chance of Sir Herbert Macpherson's leaving Allahabad, unless he gets the Meerut Division; and His Royal Highness would hardly go home at the beginning of the dull season. The Lucknow people fancied that the Duke rather took a fancy to their pleasant station; but there is no hill station in the Oudh command.

Exchanges between officers of the Royal Engineers who are actually serving in India, and who have completed, or are about to complete, a tour of Indian service, and officers who are under orders for duty in India, will be permitted, where an officer of the former class would bind himself to complete another seven years in India without relief, on the understanding that in the case of those officers who are serving in the civil and military branches of the Public Works Department the application will only be made with the approval of the Government under which the officer is serving.

The retirement of Lieutenant Colonel Vivian, Commandant of the 3rd Punjab Cavalry, should give promotion to all grades of the regiment. Lieutenant Colonel Anderson, who has been with the corps for twenty-one years, twenty of them as squadron commander, will in all probability succeed to the command; Lieutenant-Colonel Macpherson becoming second in Command, his service with the regiment extending to over twenty years, whilst Captain G. G. Mansel should become squadron commander pro tem., until Major J. Davidson, at present employed in the Adjutant General's department at Simla, rejoins, which will not be till 1st December, 1886. Lieutenant Colonel Vivian served in both the 20th and 24th Regiments Native Infantry before joining the Staff Corps, his first appointment to the 3rd P.C. being as far back as October, 1860. He succeeded Colonel Jones in command on the 4th July 1879.

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY, Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my friend's medicine man had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 16, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, May 26; Madras and Allahabad, April 25; Calcutta, April 24.

THE Times correspondent in Calcutta still continues to expose in forcible language the scandal of the Simla exodus. The educated Native community is at one with the non-official Anglo-Indians, and probably the majority of officials too, on this question. The Madras incident has brought it into the field of practical politics—only just in time, for a few years more of palatial office buildings on the hills would have committed us almost irrevocably to the monstrous system of hole-and-corner government which has produced such legislative abortions as the Ilbert Bill and the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

BOTH the correspondent of the Times and the correspondent of the Standard at Calcutta give due weight to the great meeting of Behar landholders held at Bankipore on Friday last to protest once more against the oppression and confiscation threatened in the Bengal Tenancy Bill. We are glad to observe that the Maharaja of Hutwa presided on this occasion—thus taking his proper place beside his Highness the Maharaja of Darbhanga as a defender of the liberty of the rights of property, and of the freedom of contract of the Indian peoples.

THE Standard correspondent thus summarises the proceedings of the Behar meeting:—

"The amended form of the Bengal Tenancy Bill is as far from satisfying the zemindars as the original draft. An important meeting of Behar landholders has been held at Bankipore, the Maharaja of Hutwa presiding, to protest against the measure, and more especially against the provisions that the presumption of law should be in favour of the tenants having held for twelve years; that the ryots should have the right of free sale and subletting; that the jurisdiction of the civil should be substituted for that of the revenue courts. The zemindars finally demand the fulfilment of the letter and spirit of the Regulation of the year 1793.

THIS demand of the zemindars of Behar will be supported by all Englishmen who have any regard for the good faith of the British Government and the honour of the British name. We trust that there will be a large gathering of such good men, and true, at the St. James's Hall meeting of next Wednesday week, June 25, of which an announcement appears in our advertisement columns.

A BRITISH village in Eusafzai, in the Peshawur District, has been burnt by Afghans. Punitive measures, as usual, will have to be taken; and so the world will wag, so long as the present imbecile policy on frontier matters is in vogue.

IT is amazing that so many of our Native contemporaries should have accepted without question the gross mis-statement—falsely attributed to Lord Kimberley in his reply to Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose—regarding Lord Lytton's policy in the matter of the extended employment of natives in the Civil Service. Lord Lytton's liberal policy in this question was an affair of absolute notoriety at the time. But even if it had not been so, the despatch itself was published in a Parliamentary paper presented to both Houses in 1879—and must have been seen by Mr. Ghose, for he quoted from it. At page 13 of this Blue Book is the report of Lord Lytton's Government as to "the best means of providing for the more extended employment of natives in the Civil Administration" of this country. At page 15 (paragraph 19) Lord Lytton said:—"We are convinced of the political necessity of giving to the natives of India, whether of pure Asiatic or of mixed descent, as large a share as possible in the Civil administration of the country; and on political grounds we desire to take every opportunity of associating Natives, of the influential classes more especially, with us in the work." So also in paragraph 22, page 16—"But we attach great importance to the obvious political expediency of endeavouring to strengthen our administration by attracting to it that class of Natives whose social position or connection gives to them a commanding influence over their own countrymen. The qualifications of such persons for administrative employment are partly inherited, partly developed by early habits of command, partly proved by the readiness with which their right to command is recognised by large numbers of their native fellow-subjects. But qualifications of this kind cannot be tested by competition."

AND in the reply to this despatch, published in the same Blue Book, the Secretary of State acknowledges and commends "the large and liberal spirit in which your Government has applied itself to the solution of a problem which during the last forty years has baffled the efforts of Indian Administrations."

THE fact is absolutely beyond question that no Indian Government ever took up the question with half the earnestness, or half the success, of Lord Lytton's Government. It is well-known that Lord Lytton himself was blamed in some quarters for an excess of liberality in the matter. Can it be possible that Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose and his friends really think they are advancing the cause they profess to have at heart, by attacks which demonstrate nothing but a remarkably short memory in regard to very solid benefits conferred on that cause?

SOME of these attacks may be induced by a desire to confine the advantages of "extended employment in the higher ranks of the Civil Service" to that very small class of Indian gentleman who come to England. But we think that a careful perusal of Lord Lytton's despatch will clearly show the impolicy of any such narrow restrictions. Unhappily, the time is somewhat a favourable one for enforcing those restrictions, inasmuch as the very peculiar considerations brought into prominence by the discussions on the miserable Ilbert Bill, tended to elevate the "England-returned" civilians at the expense of their stay-at-home brethren of the "Statutory" Service. But we are inclined to believe that the civilians of the latter Service will be numerous and powerful at a time when that apple of discord, the Ilbert Bill, has fallen into the oblivion it deserves. It will then be felt that the capacity for judging the lower classes of Europeans is not at all a necessary, or even an important, criterion of the qualifications of a Native magistrate; and for all other purposes, Lord Lytton's despatch shows conclusively that it is by no means advisable for the Indian Government to restrict its selection of Native civilians to the very small number of Indian gentlemen who visit England, however great may be the benefit gained by that visit.

AS many of our Native friends seem quite to have forgotten the despatch to which we have been referring, we shall take an early opportunity of reproducing it in extenso. Meanwhile, we repeat what we have often said in these columns, that the liberality of Conservative Governments and of Conservative Viceroys, in all matters concerning the advancement of the natives of India, has been at all times conspicuously greater than that of the other party in the State; and it is, therefore, all the more to be regretted, from an Indian point of view, that so many Indian journals, and so many Indian visitors to England, should allow themselves to be carried off as partisans of a bigoted and illiberal Radicalism, such as that of Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert. It is quite true that the Conservative policy is, to allow no one class to ride rough-shod over the feelings of another, as Lord Ripon proposed to do in the Ilbert Bill. But surely our Indian friends can see that the contrary policy, that of Lord Ripon and the Radicals, is a two-edged one, and may cut both ways, as indeed we have already seen in the case of the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

THE Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market, for the week ending May 24:—

"Our mail days having been changed from Tuesdays to Saturdays, we have only a few days to report upon since the date of our last. A very fair amount of business has been put through both in steam as well as sailing tonnage. Steamer rates close with a slight improvement upon last quotations. There is no change in sailing rates. The south monsoon has apparently set in in the Bay, as sailing ships have been arriving freely and have increased our unfixed tonnage to 42,000 tons."

The Indian Spectator says:—

"We are very sorry to hear of the serious indisposition of the Hon. Mr. Kristodas Pal, which has necessitated his removal from Calcutta. It is to be sincerely hoped that the veteran will be soon on his legs again. He is perhaps the hardest worked amongst our public men."

We entirely concur. Mr. Pal can ill be spared from Calcutta, where he has long been a loyal and patriotic intermediary between the various races and classes of his fellow-subjects. Alike distinguished as a journalist and a politician, Mr. Pal's deservedly great influence has always been exerted for the good of the country and the Empire.

The Statesman says:—

"The astronomer of the Raja of Benares, and his nine assistants, may congratulate themselves that they have to do with Hindoo ladies rather than the seven Belgravian mothers, or the girl of the Period. It is their business to prepare for each year an almanac showing the lucky days for marriages, and other ceremonies, a work which regulates the whole domestic life of Behar and the North West. With incredible audacity they have published an edition, according to which there is not a single possible day for a wedding in the coming year. There is wailing not only in the zenana, but among the whole people who delight in marriage feasts. And yet, strange to say, no police guard has been supplied to the astrologers, nor has there been in Benares any movement for a march on the Raja's house after the fashion of the insurrection of the women, when they attacked Versailles. The North West accepts the astronomer's edict against marriage in a humble and submissive spirit, and prepares for passive obedience. It is true that the first step is not unpleasant. As no marriages can be celebrated next year, it has been resolved to have as many as possible this, and the bazaars echo to the sound of the tom-tom. Perhaps when the interdict really begins to work, popular feeling may change, and the astronomer be taught that it is his business to provide lucky days."

The Civil and Military Gazette says:—

The meetings of natives that are being held in various parts of India, to agitate in favour of raising the age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service, may have a good effect in one way. It is extremely desirable that the age of candidates should be raised; not so much to facilitate the entry of natives into the Service, as to make sure of Government obtaining as its servants young Englishmen who have at least had some experience of the world, and whose constitutions have not suffered from overwork in their youth. Whether by raising the maximum of age we should have more native civilians is another thing. Lord Lytton's letter to the Times, gives a common-sense view of the matter. There are undoubtedly some, nay, even many posts in the Administration which might conveniently and economically, be held by natives. But to give our native friends the opportunity of attaining to them, the best means is the nomination of Statutory Civilians. If natives also like to go home and try their luck at the open competition, they will, of course, in some cases be successful. But Lord Lytton's plan was the best; both for India and for the natives of India."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated June 15:—

"The people of Madras seem to be determined not to allow the agitation to drop which they have commenced on the subject of the annual removal of the Government to the Hills. A preliminary meeting was held on Tuesday last to concert measures for giving expression to public opinion. Mr. Rungiah Naidu presided, and many representatives of the different castes were present. The meeting resolved to form a committee for the purpose of taking steps to forward representations to the Supreme Government, requesting it to withhold its sanction from the order of the local Government requesting the removal of the officers from Madras until a public meeting of the inhabitants of Southern India had expressed itself on the subject.

"It is evident that a strong feeling exists in Madras, for the newspapers, native and European, are unanimous in denouncing the system of Government from the Hills. The Calcutta press of all shades of opinion is no less unanimous; and it is not unlikely that the capital may follow the example of Madras, by holding a meeting of protest. The Bombay journals have said little on the subject as yet, but that little would seem to indicate that they agree with their contemporaries of the other two Presidency towns.

"The Madras Government attempts to justify its order for the removal of the Military Accounts Office to Bangalore by arguing that the step will effect a large annual saving. This argument, however, entirely overlooks the fact that the buildings in Bangalore Fort, in which it is proposed to locate the offices, are in such a bad state of repair as to require a very large outlay, and that the fort is situated in native territory, some 220 miles from the capital. An up-country journal, which is one of the few supporters of 'the Hill exodus,' remarks that the tendency to carry on the work of Government from hill stations is not only growing, but is natural and proper. This utterance provokes the retort that if the Governor and heads of departments are unable to bear the Indian climate, there remains no reason why their salaries should be fixed at Indian rates. No attempt has been made to answer one of the gravest objections to this annual migration—namely, that it tends more than anything else to widen the gulf between the Government and the native community by showing the latter that for eight months of the year their rulers are anxious to go as far away from them as possible. Nor can it be seriously contended that the work done by the secretaries and heads of departments in the hills is greater in quantity or better in quality than that of their countrymen who labour all the year round as judges, barristers, or merchants, in the Presidency towns, and as district officers in the country.

"The question, in fact, is one between a few score highly-paid officials on the one side, and all the inhabitants of India, native and European, official and non-official, on the other. That the present system should be allowed to continue is a disgrace to England, and a wrong to India. Its scandal and danger only requires to be thoroughly understood at home in order to be emphatically condemned by public opinion.

"The landholders of Behar held a meeting in Bankipore on Friday last for the purpose of considering the amended Rent Bill. The speeches delivered call for no remark, as they did little more than reproduce the already oft-repeated arguments of the opponents of the measure. The resolutions passed were to the effect that the amended Bill was open to many objections; that in some respects it was worse than in its original form; that the Government should appoint a roving Commission to visit the districts concerned and collect facts; and that a committee should be appointed to impress the views of the meeting upon the Government.

"The latest weather and crop reports are generally favourable. The monsoon still holds off, but most parts of the country have received some rain. The public health also appears to be improving, although cholera and small-pox are still present in most of the provinces.

"Pirzai village, in the British district of Eusufzai, has been burnt by a party of Solazai tribesmen from beyond the frontier. It is believed that the Salarzais were hired to commit the outrage by some enemies of the Pirzai villagers. Fifteen of the Salarzais arrived in the village one evening, and slept there. Next morning, when the villagers had gone out to cut the crops, the fifteen were joined by a hundred of their tribesmen, who were lying in ambush close at hand, and the combined band looted and burnt the village before the people returned. The raiders then retreated across the frontier, carrying off two men, a number of cattle, and some guns. The prisoners have been released. The Commissioner of Peshawar is holding an inquiry into the matter, and a guard has been placed over Pirzai.

"Mr. Townsend, a petroleum expert, who has been employed in examining the oil-bearing strata near Sibi, has gone to Canada in order to purchase boring plant for the Indian Government. On his return in the autumn he will begin boring operations at several points near Sibi and Hurnai.

"A correspondent at Quetta gives the following account of the recent murder near that station of Lieutenant Dupuis:—The deceased officer had a passion for hill climbing. He attempted to ascend Mount Zurghat on Sunday, May 18, but was unsuccessful; and tried again on the 25th. How near he got to the summit is not known; but in a note-book which has been recovered he had entered that he found snow at an altitude of 10,600 feet. He had descended, and was within 400 yards of the spot where he had left his pony, when he had to cross a narrow ledge with a fall of some feet on either side. Here he was waylaid by three Yassinai Pathans who pushed him off the ledge and stoned him to death. Mr. Dupuis fired two shots from his revolver at them, but both missed. The murderers buried the body in the shingle of the watercourse where the unfortunate officer fell. The search was directed first to the main hill. The searchers gradually drew close to where the body lay, and at last discovered both it and the murderers. The men were arrested; one of them was hanged and two were transported for life. The cause of the murder probably was that it was too great a temptation to these fanatical Pathan blackguards to see an English officer wandering unprotected.

"The Englishman's announcement that an Afghan Frontier Delimitation Commission will be sent out in the autumn is probably premature. It appears likely, however, that an agreement for the appointment of such Commission will be arrived at before long, and it is said that the Indian Government has already sent an unofficial notice of the intended appointment of it to the Ameer. Public opinion here is unanimous in designating Sir Charles MacGregor as being the officer best qualified to head the Commission. The rumour that the boundary will be a line from the Oxus to Pul-i-khatun is very doubtful. There is reason to hope that it may be drawn much further north.

"The Russians are said to have released 400 prisoners detained by the Tekkes and the Saryk Turcomans.

"It is reported from Merv that a Tekke recently attempted to strike General Komaroff with his sword. He was siezed, and while being taken to prison was cut down by his own brother. The Russians are building a fort in Koshut Khan Khali, in the centre of the enclosure built by the Turcomans in 1880.

"A raid was made in the course of the last week in April on to Persian territory by some Saryk Turcomans from Panjdeh. Eighteen travellers were carried off near Dogura on the Meshed road.

"Letters received from Cabul state that the Ameer has ordered a heavy levy of income-tax of 1 per cent. for four years, the tax to be paid in advance. He also proposes to secure a monopoly of the sale of ghee and oil.

"Ishak Khan has sent to the Ameer the following account of the capture of Maimena:—

"On Saturday, May 17, I moved from Khattakala and reached Khistpul, eight miles from Maimena, and halted there on Sunday. I ordered the Kaiser troops to Almar, the Jankera troops to Sumagh, and the Kohistan troops to Kalainiazbeg and the interior of the pass; instructing these forces to get their accoutrements ready to march on Tuesday, with God's help, and to encamp round Maimena at about noon. I myself rode on Sunday to Khistpul, with 300 cavalry and two field guns, to reconnoitre the road, with a view to leading the troops and the transport to Nauroz Tappa, where the plain of Maimena begins. After examining the road I returned to the camp.

"When the people of Maimena saw the troops they were surprised and terror-stricken. By the morning 2,000 of them had come out; and to-day the majority of the people waited on me at Khistpul. Mir Dilawar Khan, the ruler of the country, being pressed and unable to escape, came into my camp with his principal officers, fell at my feet and asked pardon. To-morrow, the 20th, with God's help, I shall enter Maimena."

"The Mastiff of Candahar has been fined heavily and thrown into prison on a charge of embezzlement.

"There are rumours that the Governor of Candahar has been ordered to send a detachment, with a battery of artillery, towards Herat.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

ENGLISH OPINION ON MR. GLADSTONE'S SURRENDER TO RUSSIA.

If the intelligence transmitted by Reuter from Simla be true, the Government have made another disgraceful surrender. For some time past, negotiations have been in progress between the authorities of St. Petersburg and London with reference to the delimitation of the north-west Afghan frontier, a matter forced upon the attention of the two countries by the recent annexation of Merv. It now seems, according to Simla advices, that "an agreement has been arrived at between the British and Russian Governments, providing in general terms that the frontier shall follow the course of the Oxus as far as Khoja Saleh, whence it will proceed south and west, taking a circular course along the margin of cultivation to Pul-i-Khatun, on the Hari Rud river." In accordance with this arrangement, it is expected that "a mixed English and Russian commission will proceed in the autumn to the northern border of Afghanistan to mark out the frontier." On the face of that the information would appear to be reliable enough, however disagreeable it may be to the public. We have allowed Russia to annex Merv by one of the most unscrupulous and unprovoked coups-de-main of modern times. We have let her take Sarakhs, the key of Herat, and as much a part of Persia as Odessa is a part of Russia. We have resigned to her the Atak oasis, lying between Askabad and Sarakhs, and for the preservation of which to Persia—its rightful owner—English diplomacy has been struggling for more than three years. And now, having made all these concessions, the Government, for no apparent reason, must needs make another. It was bad enough that the Russians should occupy Sarakhs, 202½ miles from Herat, but the Government are going to make matters worse by resigning to them a strip of Afghan soil, allowing them to advance 52½ miles closer to the key of India. Russia, in fine, is to be permitted to establish a post at Pul-i-Khatun, 150 miles from Herat, while we still continue at Quetta, 514 miles from that great natural fortress, barring the way to our Eastern Empire.

It would be impossible, we imagine, for the blindest adherent of the present Ministry to entertain undiluted satisfaction at this concession. As Mr. Marvin has pointed out, in a statement accompanying a map showing the proposed delimitation "it was altogether uncalled for." The Russians could have controlled the Turcomans just as well at Old Sarakhs as at Pul-i-Khatun. They had there the best possible post for what they say they are seeking—a firm frontier. But they wanted more. While they were at it, taking advantage of England's embarrassments to steal a march on Central Asia, they thought they would get as close to Herat as they could. The annexation of Sarakhs was the first step after the annexation of Merv. Then followed the publication of a map by the Russian General Staff, thrusting back the Afghan frontier to within fifty miles of Herat. This Russia knew very well would be contested in England, but she put the claim forward in the confident expectation that something would be conceded her to get rid of it. Her hopes have been realised. She has been allowed to advance from Sarakhs to Pul-i-Khatun, 52½ miles nearer Herat, and has gained thereby not only a closer foothold to the Key of India, but also a lodgment within 80 miles of Meshed. This city, as our readers are aware, is the most important point in the region lying between the Caspian and Herat. Its population is at least 10,000 larger than that of the key of India. The great shrine of Iman Risa located within its walls is visited by 100,000 devotees every year. It is the third city in Persia in point of size, and the second in point of commercial importance. If the Russians be allowed to establish themselves at Pul-i-Khatun, where the river Gashaf Rud, watering Meshed, runs into the Hari Rud, eighty miles to the east, they will completely dominate the city. Their military post there will practically sever communications between Khorassan and Afghanistan; and at any rate they will be able to cut them at a stroke by moving a march or two to the south. Hence their gain by the new advance is of a two-fold character. They secure the power of predominant influence over the capital of Khorassan as well as over the key of India. At Old Sarakhs their position was cramped, for the desert here and there encroaches upon the fertile land of the locality. But the strip of valley 52½ miles in depth, from Sarakhs to Pul-i-Khatun, allows of a cultivated base being formed, capable of supporting a force large enough for any operations in Afghanistan. The Government have thus done their best, by the concession, to render the Russian position at Sarakhs perfect.

The aggravating features of the whole matter is that it was we who ought to have demanded concessions from Russia, not Russia from ourselves. Our rival, as Mr. Marvin has demonstrated in his pamphlets on Merv and Herat, had seized upon enough territory by her Merv coup de main without touching an inch of Afghanistan. Over and over again she had assured England she did not mean to occupy Merv, nor yet advance against it unless grossly provoked. We would like O. K. or any other glib extenuators of Russia's annexations to prove where the actual provocation was in this case. The Merv Tekkes have ceased all their forays against Russian subjects, and were on terms of the utmost friendliness with the authorities of Askabad when Alikhanoff suddenly rode into the oasis with a Cossack force, and by mingled lies, promises, and threats, coerced the people into surrender. This accomplished, Russia laid hands on the Atak Oasis, she imposed her authority over the Ersari Turcomans dwelling between Merv and Bokhara and, in a word annexed a province as large as France and a population of 600,000 souls concentrated in oases within easy halting distance of Herat. Being the aggressor, the breaker of pledges, the infringer of the existing order of things, and the winner of so much territory by her coup de main, she had no cause for demanding any of the lands of the Ameer. On the contrary, we, as the offended, the aggrieved nation, had a natural right to expect that not only should our frontier line in Afghanistan be respected, but that where it was unsatisfactory it should be rectified, not at our territorial expense, but at that of the unoccupied Turcoman country lying north of it. Instead of this, the Government have weakly surrendered their strong diplomatic position, and with it a valuable slice of Afghan territory. This concession cannot possibly give satisfaction to the public, no does it justify expectations of a firm attitude on the part of the Government to the inevitable further advances of Russia. The Government seems fated to make as great a muddle of the Central Asian Question as they have of the Egyptian. But the public that passively allow this trifling with the national interest will be mistaken if they think their enemy in this case will be as negligent in following up successes as the Mahdi. When the Russians strike, they strike hard, and it was not without just cause that Skobeleff threatened before his death to "bring back the times of Tamerlane" to the handful of English ruling India.—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The authorities having conferred upon Lieut. General Lord Chelmsford the valuable appointment of "Lieutenant of the Tower of London," requires me once more to lay my cause before the public, and thus to record a protest against an action which, in its approval of Lord Chelmsford, amounts to a positive injustice to the memory of a good soldier who willingly gave up his life in his country's service.

It will be remembered by many that in 1880 (speeches in the House of Lords, August 19 and Sept. 2, and a letter in the Times of Aug. 25) Lord Chelmsford made a deliberate and un-called for attack on the late Colonel Durnford, Royal Engineers, with a view to place upon him the responsibility for the disaster at Isandhlwana, Jan. 22, 1879. Lord Chelmsford stated:—

1. "At the same time a letter was written to Colonel Durnford to move up to Isandhlwana Camp and take command of it."

2. That the following statement "expressed plainly what his views were," viz.—"that he (Lord Chelmsford) had an interview with Colonel Pulleine, and in reply to his question as to any orders he might have to give to him, that he had said, 'defend the camp and do not leave it.'"

3. That Colonel Durnford took over this order to "defend the camp," and, Lord Chelmsford says, "that order was, I maintain, as binding upon Colonel Durnford, as those which a soldier takes over from the sentry he relieves on a post."

4. That Colonel Durnford, therefore, in quitting the camp to reconnoitre, "had departed from the orders which he had received."

Now, it is quite unnecessary for me to enter upon Lord Chelmsford's further mis-statements, or upon the actual facts which directly led to the disaster, for Lord Chelmsford himself limits the position, as between him and the late Colonel Durnford, to "neglect of orders." He writes on December 12, 1879—"The question . . . whether there could have been any neglect of orders at Isandhlwana, covers the whole ground of controversy. . . . The order was given to 'defend the camp.'"

Controversy there can be none, from the simple facts—

1. That Colonel Durnford was not ordered to take command of the camp.

2. That Lord Chelmsford gave no orders whatever respecting the camp or its defence.

3. That, therefore, there were no such orders which were, or could have been, "departed from."

The proofs of what I say are beyond question.

1. On May 18, 1882, I received from Colonel Crealock (Lord Chelmsford's Military Secretary in 1879) what he states to be a "true copy of the last entry in Lieut. Colonel Crealock's notebook, left in his tent on Jan. 22, 1879. This was a copy of the order sent to Colonel Durnford at daybreak by the hand of Lieutenant Smith-Dorrien." (Colonel Crealock says:—"The notebook was recovered from the field of Isandhlwana, and sent me in England, in 1879.")

The entry in the notebook is—

"22. Wednesday.

"2 a.m. The following order sent to Colonel Durnford:—'You are to march to this camp at once with all the force you have with you of No. 2 column.

"Major Bengough's battalion is to move to Rorke's Drift, as ordered yesterday.

"2.24. Artillery and mounted men, with the General and Colonel Glyn, move off at once to attack a Zulu force about ten miles distant. (Signed) "J. N. C.

"If Bengough's Battalion has crossed the River at Eland's Kraal it is to move up here.

"(Nangwana Valley.)"

And here it will be convenient to note what instructions Colonel Durnford had previously received.

Lord Chelmsford writes on Jan. 16:—

"No. 3 Column will first advance to a position near the Isandhlwana Hill, and from there, assisted by a portion of No. 2 Column, will clear the Equideni Forest, or induce the Chiefs, &c., to submit. This work completed, the portion of No. 2 Column, under Lieut. Colonel Durnford, will move towards the Mission Station near the Empandleni Hill, whilst No. 3 Column advances to a fresh position near the Isipezi Hill, detaching, if necessary, part of its force to support No. 2 Column." (C. 2252, p. 63.)

And again he writes, Jan. 19:—

"One of Colonel Durnford's regiments will cross the river from the Sandspruit Valley, whilst his mounted natives will co-operate with us from Rorke's Drift, where they will be tomorrow (20th)." (C. 2260, p. 16.)

Colonel Durnford, writing on Jan. 21, thus epitomises his instructions—"My movements are to operate against the two Matyanas." And, on receiving the order of the 22nd, Colonel Durnford's remark was, "Ah! just what I expected; we are to go on at once. The General has gone out to attack an impi."

It was into Matyana's country, close to the Equideni Forest, that Lord Chelmsford advanced on Jan. 22.

2. In a memoir of my brother which I have published, I state (p. 224)—

"A captain of the 24th Regiment, who marched out with the General's force, distinctly says that neither Lord Chelmsford nor his staff left any orders, but that, when miles away from the camp, Lord Chelmsford asked what orders had been left for Colonel Pulleine."

In May, 1883, I received a remarkable confirmation of this statement from the editor of the Natal Witness, who, on January 27, 1879, wrote to Colonel Crealock for information on various points, and, amongst others, as to orders given by the General at Isandhlwana on January 22. Colonel Crealock's written reply was—"No written orders or spoken orders by General were issued. Colonel Glyn gave his own orders."

What these orders were, appears in C. 2260, p. 81, and they contain no special instructions "to defend the camp." It would be rather strange if they did, as Lord Chelmsford had just pooh-poohed Colonel Glyn's suggestion to form a laager. And, further, these orders define the period of Colonel Pulleine's command—"you will be in command of the camp during the absence of Colonel Glyn."

The situation of the camp is made perfectly clear by the statement from Major Cochrane, the survivor of the interview between Colonels Durnford and Pulleine, that, when Colonel Pulleine said "I'm sorry you have come as you are senior to me and will of course take command," Colonel Durnford replied, "I'm not going to interfere with you, I'm not going to remain in Camp."

Esteeming it to be my duty to clear my brother's memory from unjust reproach, I have from time to time urged the case upon the notice of the authorities—H.R.H. the Field Marshal Commanding in Chief, and the Secretary of State for War—with the only result that I have been informed that it is not considered "desirable to re-open the question of the responsibility of the late Colonel Durnford, Royal Engineers, in connection with the disaster at Isandhlwana."

The situation then is this:—An officer living brings a charge against another officer, who is dead, which charge is proved to be entirely without foundation. The authorities decline to consider the matter, and therefore deny to the dead officer that justice which he, if alive, could and would have demanded. As long as the living officer was permitted to remain unemployed, one could in some manner comprehend the line the authorities have taken; but now that a valuable appointment is conferred upon the living officer, what can the inference be but that his conduct is approved, and thus the injustice to the memory of the dead is bitterly emphasised?—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

EDWARD DURNFORD, Lieut. Col.

Rothamsted Lodge, St. Albans, June 10, 1884.

MR. COMMISSIONER FORJETT ON THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE.

A LETTER TO THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P., ETC., ETC.

June 5, 1884.

SIR,—The apparent indifference displayed by you in regard to the approaches of the Russians towards India, is exercising its influence on Liberals in both Houses of Parliament and imbuing them with the fatuous confidence displayed by the Government, in Russian probity and good faith, and paralysing the efforts of the Conservative body. It would have called for no seriously expostulative depreciation, but for the welfare of England and the safety of India being thereby most seriously imperilled. Egypt, the Conference, the Sudan, and the great danger to General Gordon at Khartoum are absorbing public attention. General Gordon is unquestionably a man of the most lofty heroism; and a hero in peril, it is right, should command the deepest solicitude, especially when apathy, vacillation, and repudiation of responsibility as regards practical action have, throughout, characterised the conduct of the Government. But, on the other hand, the attention devoted to a minimum danger, I beg to urge, should not be allowed to place beyond view a disaster which is impending of incomparably greater magnitude which, if not warded off, will prove overwhelming and disastrous, placing thousands of British lives in jeopardy and under risk of destruction. The characteristic of British public opinion, it is said, is to attend to only one subject at a time; but the impending disaster will not be arrested by any peculiarity of British idiosyncrasy, nor its advance impeded in order to enable the British mind philosophically to pursue its even course."

In my book on "Our Real Danger in India," written about seven years ago, is mentioned, in page 146, the purport of a conversation with the late Sir Erskine Perry and Sir Harry Verney, with reference to the Khiva episode of protestation on the part of your Government against the movement of Russian forces on Khiva, followed by the mission of Count Schouvaloff to England, conveying the solemn assurances of the Emperor that his object was only to chastise the Khan and people of Khiva for the wrongs inflicted on Russian subjects, and that after inflicting the chastisement to withdraw, and do as we had done in Abyssinia. These assurances, sir, were received by your Government—in fact, by all England—with the most complete belief in Russian good faith. But as stated in my book, page 147, I gave Sir Erskine Barry and Sir Harry Verney at the time to understand “that notwithstanding the solemn assurances of the Emperor, every inch of ground which the Russians took they would keep, and that the Count's mission was merely to dupe the Government.” They shortly afterwards possessed themselves of Bokhara and Samarkand, stages very much nearer to India than Khiva. I then anticipated and repeated in my letter to you of February 15, 1882, that their next step would be Merv. Their possession of Merv is an accomplished fact. And within the next three years, if not in less, the annexation of Herat will follow and eventually will develop and become culminated Indian demoralisation which is already in considerable progress. Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein, some ten years ago, was travelling through Cashmere. And the Cashmere Prince spoke to him in terms of great alarm at the progress the Russians were making, so much so that Prince Frederick, as stated in one of the Blue Books, thought it necessary to write upon the subject to Lord Northbrook, who, at the time, was Governor-General of India.

Of the views of British might in India, prestige is the sacred intangible essence which forms the great foundation, and which has enabled a handful of Englishmen to hold the millions of India in a state of loyal subjection. With the Russians at Herat, the conviction that we are the great “zabardusts”—the indomitables of the world—will cease to exist, and we shall be ranked as inferior to and incapable of competing with the Russians.

And I beg, Sir, you will permit me to place before you facts of which, presumably, you possess no knowledge. With Orientals, the stronger power invariably has, and always will, command allegiance. Macaulay's essays afford a memorable instance. The French sepoy soldiers were perfectly devoted to the French so long as they believed in their superiority; but Clive's success against the French, at Arcot, impressed them with the belief that the English were the more powerful. The result was that 600 sepoys who had served in the French army “came over to Clive's quarters and were taken into British service.” The history of the Peshwa, of the Deccan, too, affords strong evidence of the influence exercised over Orientals, by their belief in the stronger power. His own subjects, notwithstanding the abhorrence of the Hindu and the Mahomedan of the beef and pork consuming European, whose touch is desecration to the Brahmin, freely joined us and fought against their own sovereign. A number of his leading courtiers, too—notably Sudasheo Row Mankeshwur and Balajee Punt Natoo—proved disloyal. As sheriff of Poona, in 1834-35, I was acquainted with many of them.

The Duke of Argyll, a Liberal of Liberals, in the course of the discussion in the House of Lords on the Russian annexation of Merv, never gave expression to a more stringent fact than that “Russian assurances are not worth the paper upon which they may be written.” This being so, you will perhaps, sir, be prepared to avow the inexplicability of the Ministerial statement that “the Government are in communication with the Russian Government for a clear indication of their policy.” British simplicity, no doubt, has been heartily laughed at by Russian diplomatists. That policy, when made known, as even you must be aware will beclouded over with diplomatic subtleties, and accompanied with strong professions of good will and good faith; but you may make quite sure as to what will be the eventual outcome.

“Communication with the Afghan ruler,” it was stated by the Secretary of State for India, “proved that he was animated by a friendly disposition towards England.” This, sir, is resting on a broken reed. Dependence upon such disposition is most dangerous, and I declare, under convictions the most solemn, from my knowledge of the Oriental character, that it is utterly worthless; and every Anglo-Indian of experience will corroborate this opinion. Take the case of Shere Ali. The belief that Russia was the more formidable, led to his placing himself under the aegis of the Russians. His representations to the Governor General, embodied in Blue Books, set forth his great alarm, because of the Russian advance; but it received no attention, and the opportunity offering, he at once made common cause with them to the extent even of engaging to join them in the conquest and partition of India. Such will be the case with the present Afghan ruler; and I venture to state with the utmost certainty, that the subsidy of £120,000, now annually paid him, is so much money thrown away.

Under a continuation of the present policy of confidence in Russia, the Russians will be at Herat within three or four years, and, casting the veil of deception over Persia on the one hand, and over the Afghans on the other, and rendering them their devoted allies, a move will be made upon India. And with their own 100,000 and more Russians; with more than that number of the Khanate hordes; with their Afghan and Persian auxiliaries; with the warrior tribes within our own limits stimulated to disaffection by Russian intrigue; with the confidence of the masses and the faith of the sepoy army in British might undermined, there can be no hope of our being able to hold India. We may largely increase our European forces by the employment of American and foreign mercenaries; but that remedy even will not prove reassuring.

Every European soldier, moreover, landed by us in India costs, on an average, £100, while the expenditure to Russia is only one-tenth that amount. The disproportion, too, in their maintenance is in about a corresponding ratio. From England to India (if the Suez Canal be not impaired) the distance may be traversed in twenty-four days, while the Russians can land their reinforcements in less than half that time. Independently of these advantages, there is the enormous disparity between British and Russian military resources. For every soldier we can find, she has more than ten times the number at command; hence the imminent peril to which India is exposed by the Russian advance.

But India, sir, may be ignored as unimportant—as a dog to Great Britain. You, yourself, may re-echo the repudiation of her value to England, and charm and convince your followers by the fascination of your oratory. Exeter Hall may again be made the scene for indulging in stirring epigrams. “Perish India” may again and again be freely, emphatically declaimed; but the calamities, sir, with which her loss will become associated will, for the reasons which I shall now place before you, reach every homestead in Great Britain, and wring from them expressions of bitter anguish that to you and your Government are to be attributed the wormwood and the gall.

England has all along been the chief factor in withstanding Russian attempts upon Constantinople and the Black Sea, and it imparted to the Russians the conviction that if their object is to be attained, it can only be by placing it out of the power of England to play the part of obstructionist. And since the Crimean war, the object of advancing towards India has been steadily persevered in, and the commander of the Trans-Caspian territory has now by a stroke of surreptitious diplomacy, in which the Russian Captain Alikh offacted the plenipotentiary, completed the annexation of Merv. Their next step will be to take Herat and to enter into combinations for marching upon India, with the object of centring England's efforts and resources in the defence of India. Simultaneously will follow the swoop down upon Constantinople. “A united Europe,” which formed an important element in your political declamations at Edinburgh and elsewhere, will not—as you must be aware—be forthcoming for the prevention of this wrong. Germany will not intervene. She will find no national interests involved. To Austria, Russian success will prove most seriously prejudicial. Within a very few decades her political extinction will follow in absorption by Russia; but alone she will be powerless to interfere. To Great Britain, on the other hand, the inevitable will present itself within ten or fifteen years after, in a naval rivalry which would deaden her commerce throughout the world and spread poverty and pauperism throughout the land. As stated more than six years ago in a letter to the Duke of Westminster, and more than two years ago in one which I took the liberty of addressing you, “If India is to be saved and Great Britain safeguarded, the only means of doing so is by war (with Russia) in Europe in alliance with Austria and Turkey.” The cause for war is a clearly established necessity. The Berlin Treaty is in a state of open violation; Russian troops swarm in the Balkan provinces. Of Roumania they are in overwhelming conterminous proximity, and Russian intrigues are fully at work. As regards India, their hostile designs are bold and undisguised. This state of circumstances point to war as a called-for remedy, and I shall be indulging in no flight of imagination by saying that a Palmerston would have pronounced it to be a casus belli.

The proposal for war, in alliance with Austria and Turkey, you will, no doubt, view with indignation, probably with contempt. Austria you aspersed, but afterwards tendered an explanation, which was equivalent to an apology. But Turkey, sir, you virulently maligned. You held her up to studied opprobrium; you advocated her political extinction. Without any advertence to the benign inculcations of our great moral code, I would respectfully submit whether it is proper to place a nation under the ban of condemnation, because of the profligacy of the few whom the accident of birth has placed over them. A Mahomedan's belief in a “sensuous hereafter” it may not be easy to extinguish; but notwithstanding the very stringent opposition which Koran precepts inculcate, the extent to which Turkey has yielded in permitting, within her domains, the proselytising efforts of Christian missionaries, proves her to be less bigotted than her hereditary foe, who very largely enjoys your admiration; and it affords substantial grounds for the hope that a “strong” British Ambassador at Constantinople, with no scant of the suaver in modo, and imbued with the anxious desire to engage in the moral elevation of the Turkish oligarchy, would prove to be no hopeless undertaking. And it is due to Turkey that England should impose upon herself this duty, as her loyalty towards England has known no deviation.

I am aware, sir, that I am treading upon very tender ground in presuming to animadvert on your political acts and expatiations; but veracity is not to be maintained under circumstances of mental bondage.

With the present policy of confidence in Russia prolonged—were it only for a few years—India will be lost, followed by the relegation to the past and the obsolete of both India Office and the Secretary of State for India, and Great Britain will be landed in disaster. You, sir, more than any man in the Kingdom will have contributed to the result.

Of the loyalty towards England, of the Czar and Royal family of Russia, there can be no doubt. But the aspirations of the Russian generals and malcontents, for territorial aggrandisement, is uncontrollable, and evolving the danger that is looming in the immediate future. We should have gone to war in 1876-77, but your Bulgarian Horrors—euphemistically speaking—abounded in representations that will not bear the test of analysis; which, you ought to have been aware, was brought about by individuals of Russian nationality, caused a serious division in public opinion and placed war out of Lord Beaconsfield's power.

War is abhorrent in all its aspects, and he who advocates a war which is unnecessary and preventable would deserve the execration of man, the malediction of heaven; but it becomes a duty, a holy, a sacred duty, when country's needs point to and it is undertaken.

If the political wisdom of Great Britain should prove erratic and war be repudiated, British lives on land may, to a certain extent, be saved; but on the seas the sacrifice would be all the more weighty. The world affords no instance of the existence in terms of amity and concord of two nations of co-ordinate strength.

I add here the following paragraph from my letter to you of Feb. 15, 1882:—"The war I advocate may be brought to a successful issue in the course of a single year; but naval conflicts, spread all over the world, you must be aware, would involve enormous and prolonged sacrifice of British life and treasure. It is necessary, too, to bear in mind the enormous numerical strength of Russia, and that her efforts could not be speedily snuffed out. It must also be borne in mind that British pluck in days gone by, under all circumstances, proved talismanic. When the British bayonets and out-lasses were brought into play, all opposition vanished; all superiority in the numbers arrayed against us became speedily levelled. You will remember the poetic grandeur of Colin Campbell's 'Single file, my boys' to receive the charge of Russian cavalry, and Hedley Vicars' 'Follow me, my men,' when leading his picket to meet a strong Russian attack to dislodge him from the neighbourhood of the Redan. But those were during the days of Brown Bess, and impracticable at present, from the long ranges and very rapid firing. The nation that can stand having army after army mowed down, must now carry the day, as was evidenced during the conflict between the Federals and the Confederates of the American Republic. In a naval warfare, we shall have to meet the conflict single handed, but in the war in Europe, it would be in alliance with Austria and Turkey. The moral effect in India of such a war would be incalculable; it would vitalise the now dying prestige of British rule; it would quicken and invigorate the loyalty of the princes and people of India; it would ensure the devotion to us of the Afghan, Turcoman and other warlike hordes of Central Asia, and it would enable India, not only to take care of herself, but to assist Great Britain with a native army. And called upon to join us in an expedition beyond the seas, to engage in an offensive war against a foreign Power, to fight side by side with the British soldiery on European soil, and to follow the lead of its English officers, the fidelity, devotion, and valour of that army would be beyond question."

If, Sir—uninfluenced by the fear of stirring up the antipathy of the nation by the proposition for war, and overcoming any unpatriotic selfishness which might prompt the feeling of "after me come the deluge,"—you will consider and explain present exigencies with a minimum of the fervour you displayed in your "Midlothian campaign," I should be in no way apprehensive of the result.

It is to be remembered, Sir, that the Russians are making all possible effort to complete their railway to Herat; that they are pushing on night and day in order to have it in their power to throw in reinforcements to any extent. And loss of time on our part will prove perilous, by placing in jeopardy everything that is dear to Great Britain. The great majority of unthinking public are plodding on in a state of peaceful unconsciousness. If they are awakened to a sense of the danger, there will be no want of unanimity in fervency of desire for the adoption of measures to avert what is impending.—I beg leave to remain, Sir, your very obedient servant, late Commissioner of Police of Bombay.

C. FORJETT,

Meetings continue to be held in different parts of the country to protest against the present limit of age of candidates for the Civil Service.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

MR. HUNTER'S TRIP TO ENGLAND.

NOWHERE is the announcement that Mr. W. W. Hunter is to be sent to England at the country's expense to give evidence before the Select Committee on Indian Railways received, with anything but surprise and derision. We find a Madras paper writing, under the heading "Toujours Hunter," in the following strain:—

It is whispered at Simla that the Hon. Dr. Hunter, LL.D., will go home to give evidence on Indian Railways before the Special Committee of the House of Commons. There is probably nothing under the sun that that self-satisfied gentleman is not prepared to give evidence upon; and, strange to say, he succeeds in inducing Viceroy after Viceroy to take his evidence at his own estimate of its value. He was for a time part proprietor and dictator of the Englishman, and then, indeed, did the Government of India have a good time of freedom from criticism marked by refreshing candour. Subsequently he made himself useful to the Times. He succeeded in inducing Lord Ripon to appoint the Education Commission last year; but we have yet to learn that that Commission served any more important purpose than that of providing Dr. Hunter with a billet as president. It was in 1869 that he took charge of the compilation of Indian Gazettes; and since then he has been a law unto himself, and a "bore" to almost every official with whom he has brought himself into contact. There is reason to suppose that he is wrong in supposing that he is the centre and chief ornament of the Indian bureaucracy. If good solid administrative work he has had little to show since 1869. It is well that India has but one Hunter; and if the Government, for want of any better employment for him, resolves to shunt him to London, where at least he will be out of the way, though he will after the manner of him be always in evidence, who can blame it? But that Dr. Hunter should pose as a shining light on Indian Railways, their administration, and their extension, is too funny. If the Viceroy really desires to do his trumpeter a service, he should appoint him to a collectorate, and insist on his spending a hot season, just for once, at a distance from the blandishments of Simla. But if His Excellency had rather have Dr. Hunter at his beck and call at Simla, than submit to the annoyance of being favoured from a distance with that gentleman's patronising advice, he will do well to induce him to continue to give his invaluable moral support to the Government of this land, by creating for him the high and noble office of Inspector-General of Viceroyal toothpicks.

We see yet another explanation of Mr. Hunter's mission to Mr. Baxter and his Railway Committee. It is given by the Simla correspondent of the Times of India, and is the same that appeared a few days ago in the Englishman:—

Regarding the approaching departure of the Hon. W. W. Hunter to England to give evidence before the Parliamentary Committee on Indian Railways, it may not be generally known that the idea of sending Mr. Hunter home for this purpose has been on the tapis for some time. Some time ago, the Public Works Department asked Mr. Hunter as Director General of Statistics, to compile industrial economic facts connected with railway extension in India, and it was proposed that he should give evidence on these subjects before the Committee, while Major Conway Gordon represented the professional side of Public Works Department, and Mr. Westland the financial aspect of the railway question. The honourable gentleman was however, unable to go home in March, as he was wanted at Simla for the preparation of the despatch, which goes home by next mail, on the report of the Education Commission. The despatch being completed, the question of sending Mr. Hunter home has been revived by the Public Works Department, which is said to consider that its case will not be properly placed before the Committee without the facts which Mr. Hunter has collected for it.

If the Government desire to secure the evidence of an expert as to the value of railways and the development of the wheat trade, they should ask Mr. Birkmyre to tell the Committee what he knows on the subject.—Indian Daily News.

MR. GRANT DUFF'S PERSECUTION OF THE LATE COLONEL DREVER.

The "hard case" of the late Colonel Drever, C.S.I., is attracting renewed attention in Madras. It may be remembered that Colonel Drever was passed over for the post of Inspector General of Police in Madras, in spite of his valuable services during the famine, and his twenty-three years' record in the Department. He had acted more than once in the post, and on his return from leave it was a bitter disappointment for him to find that Colonel Cloete, his deputy and junior in the army, had been appointed over his head. Manfully resuming his old duties he took the orders of an officer whom he had occasions to take to task seriously more than once. In April, 1883, he had an attack of jaundice; and after being pronounced invalid, he learned that Colonel Cloete had reported him unfit for duty. This he indignantly denied; he was not believed, however, but was subjected to the humiliation of having his conduct made the subject of a commission of inquiry. Before the commission had given in its report, Colonel Drever suddenly died; and there can be little doubt that the sad event was in great degree owing to the coarse treatment he had received at the hands of the Governor of Madras and his advisers. Putting aside the question of the conduct of Government in this matter, it was beyond dispute that Colonel Drever bore a high character in Madras and it was therefore no surprise that the commission reported in his favour. But now we come to a turn in the affair which has provoked the present outburst of feeling. Colonel Drever's widow applied for a copy of the commission's report, but was refused on the ground that it was "a statement of an entirely confidential character." Mrs. Drever renewed her request to the Secretary of State, but of course that personage supported the contention of the local Government. It is admitted that Colonel Drever was exonerated from the charges brought against him but it is thought necessary to withhold the document in which his character is vindicated. In this, Mr. Grant Duff has made a serious mistake, for he has confirmed the belief that he is seeking to screen himself from censure. He dealt hardly and unjustly with the late Colonel Drever; he is now hiding the evidence or the petty persecution which ended in a grievous tragedy. The Madras Mail advises Mrs. Drever to carry the matter to Parliament, and it is to be hoped will do so in the interests of justice and official morality.—Civil and Military Gazette.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA AND THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE history of the Bengal Tenancy Bill admirably illustrates the vicious character of the Indian Legislature. The Legislative Council is a farce; it exists only to register the decrees of the Executive Government. The Tenancy Bill was proposed by the Executive Government of Bengal, was revised by the Executive Government of India, and was sanctioned by the executive head of the India Office. Then was the farce enacted of the introduction of the Bill into the Legislative Council. This Council consists of both official and non-official, European and Native members, but it is so constituted that the official members always outnumber the non-official. There was the usual mock debate, prolonged, able, and animated, but the result was as was anticipated. The non-official members, seeing the overwhelming majority against them, did not dare propose the throwing out of the Bill. The Bill was in due course referred to the Select Committee. This Committee, as usual, commanded a standing official majority. In addition to the preponderance of the official element, the Lieutenant Governor introduced his sub. or as some say his mentor, the Revenue secretary, to the sittings of the Committee, whether his Honour was present or not. His Highness the Maharaja of Durbungha took objection to Mr. MacDonnell's presence as being opposed to the rules of the Council, but the chairman of the Committee ruled that he had power to admit any one to the sittings of the Council. We do not deny his power to admit any person as a witness, or one intending to supply information to the Committee; but we doubt whether he has the power to admit a person who is neither a member nor a witness to the sittings of the Committee from day to day, and permit him to take part in the deliberations of the Committee. We are not aware of any rule which vests the chairman with this extraordinary power. If the Lieutenant Governor was competent to introduce his Revenue secretary to the sittings of the Select Committee, would the same liberty be accorded to the Maharaja of Durbungha to introduce his private secretary? But let that pass. The Select Committee laboured hard, holding sittings three days a week, and for four hours daily. Their labours are embodied in the Amended Bill, and the report of the majority of the Committee. The unfortunate minority have recorded their dissents. How does our Executive Legislature treat them? It has issued two letters one to the Government of Bengal and the other to the High Court, inviting their opinion on the provisions of the Bill, traversing over the whole range of the Bill, discussing in detail the recommendations of the Select Committee, but hardly touching upon one point of the dissenting members' note except upon the minute of Mr. Reynolds, himself an official, and the representative of the Bengal Government in the Council. The non-official members are not shown even the common courtesy of having their dissents referred to the Bengal Government for consideration. This is the way Indian legislation is carried on—this is the way the non-official members of the Indian Legislative Council are treated. Could there be a greater mockery and delusion than this? And yet we are told that the legislature will hold with an even hand the balance of justice between the landlord and the tenant in this momentous question.

Rumours were abroad that the Government of India are anxious for a compromise. The Pioneer published some articles on the subject which seemed to us to be inspired, and which advocated compromise. And intelligence came to us from the India Office that a compromise was talked of. But where is the compromise, and what is the compromise? The letters of the Government of India before us give no sound whatever on the subject. On the contrary, they endorse all that has been done by the Select Committee, or recommended by the Lieutenant Governor or his mentor. The letter to the Bengal Government is a running commentary upon the Bill not so much upon principles as upon executive details. The particular questions which are referred to the Local Government for opinion are as follows:

(1) Whether, with reference especially to landlords' improvements, it is desirable to empower Revenue officers to arrange for the cutting of irrigation channels, the distribution of water, and the payments of compensation; and, if so, what form such provisions should take?

(2) Whether the summary sale procedure can be applied to those dependent taluqs, the revenue of which was settled direct with Government though the holders pay it through the zemindar, who is responsible for its realisation. These tenures apparently find no place in the Government registers, and it was proposed that the modified patni procedure should be applied to them.

(3) Whether the same procedure can be made applicable also to the recovery of arrears of road cess and public works cess from rent-free tenure-holders.

(4) Whether any provisions are required in the Bill with respect to tenants of homestead or bastu land which is not a part of an occupancy holding. The Select Committee have omitted chapter VII. of the original Bill on the ground that it was inapplicable to the very varying conditions attaching to the holdings of such tenants in different parts of the country, and that they had not before them the information requisite to dealing with the questions involved. It is desirable that information of this description should, if possible, be supplied.

(5) Whether the saving of customary and other conditions specifically applied in section 214 of the revised Bill to utbandi and halhasili tenures should be extended to similar tenures under other names; and whether any special saving is necessary in regard to the special tenures under which land is held in the Chittagong Division.

(6) Whether it would be possible to specify for the purpose of exemption from the pre-emption sections any such transferable occupancy rights as those in guzashta and gora holdings.

(7) Whether it is possible to improve the accuracy of the price lists which have been published during the past twelve years; and what would be the probable effect of basing a system of enhancement of rent mainly on these lists.

It will be seen from the above that the Government has given up the idea of appointing a Roving Commission to take evidence upon the Bill. Again, selected officers are to be consulted, and they will doubtless be selected according to their predelections, and we will be greatly mistaken if they do not give their opinions inconsonance with those of the Government.

The letter to the High Court contains the following questions:

(a) What modifications it may be desirable to make, whether by rules or otherwise in the Code of Civil Procedure, with a view to expedite the trial of rent-suits and in particular, whether it is desirable that landlords should be empowered to institute, by means of a single plaint, suits for arrears against a number of raiyats holding independently of each other.

(b) Whether any provision can safely be enacted restricting the right to claim a re-trial when a decree has been given ex parte. "We are aware," the Committee say in referring to this point, "that a Judge is in no way bound to admit a re-trial unless he is satisfied that the summons failed to reach the defendant, or that he was prevented by some sufficient cause from appearing; but the representations made to us are to the effect that the due service of the summons is systematically denied, and that the Courts too readily accept the plea, thus encouraging tactics the only object of which is to interpose delay and to involve the landlord in unnecessary expense in recovering his dues."

"The proposal before us," they continue, "was that ex parte suits should not be re-tried, except upon the defendant depositing the amount decreed; but we were unwilling to adopt this proposal on the information before us, and desired that it should be referred for the consideration of the Honourable Judges of the High Court."

(c) A suggestion that a defendant in a suit for arrears should not be allowed to appeal from a decree passed against him, except on depositing the amount of the decree.

We have neither time nor space to discuss all the points raised in the letter to the Government of Bengal. The Government of India admits that the Select Committee have gone much further than the original Bill in seeking to strengthen the position of the raiyat. The law will presume every tenant to be an occupancy raiyat unless proved to the contrary. It will give little facility to enhancement of rent, and will fully secure the raiyat freedom of sale of his holding. With the three Fs. thus secured the raiyat's position may be impregnable, while the poor zemindar is not allowed even ordinary facility for the realisation of his just dues. We give below this part of the letter to the Government of Bengal.

The several questions in connection with this chapter on which the Select Committee specially desire to have the advice of the Bengal Government, have already been noticed. The specific proposal put forward by the zemindars with the view of shortening the procedure in rent-suits was that a landlord should be permitted to institute a collective suit against any number of tenants belonging to one village by means of a single plaint. The advantages claimed for this procedure appear to be (1) the reduction in the stamp duty and possibly in pleader's fees; (2) the possible reduction of process-fees, as the notices could be served by one process server on the same date on all the defendants, and possibly also on the plaintiff's witnesses; (3) the hearing of the cases on the same date. It is obvious that all advantage from this procedure ceases from the appearance of the parties in court. Each case would have to be heard separately, and would require a separate decree and separate execution process. The merits of the scheme are thus very limited; but also the zemindars have laid much stress on it; the Government of India would like it to be carefully considered by the Government of Bengal. It may, however, be observed that the advantages claimed for the scheme might, to a great extent, be obtained by executive orders under the existing law. The stamp-duty on rent-suits might, for instance, be reduced, and a lower scale of fees prescribed for processes issued on the same day on persons residing in the same village. It must, however, be borne in mind that any proposal to reduce court fees, either generally or in rent-suits, cannot be considered with exclusive reference to Bengal.

The possibility of facilitating the service of the summons might also be considered, and the Government of India, as already mentioned, proposes to ask the advice of the High Court on this chapter. But it will gladly welcome any suggestions which local officers may offer for attaining the object of a speedier and cheaper method of recovering arrears, provided always that it does not jeopardise the raiyat's right to have his case fully heard, and that it does not require him to pay money into court before his liability to pay is established. The Committee aimed at securing an important and very necessary reform by the provision of section 164. It is desirable to know if, in the opinion of local officers, the section is sufficient to fulfil this purpose.

By Chapter XVI. the method of summary sale is made applicable to tenures other than putni tenures which may hereafter be registered. It is expedient that no time should be lost in considering this scheme for registering tenures, so that, if it be found feasible, it may be introduced into the Bengal Council at an early date.

It will be seen from the above that the Government of India would give very little facility for the recovery of rent.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

CENTRAL ASIA.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Ministers recognised the absorption by the Russian Government of the country up to Old Sarakhs; whether they had accepted Tuli-Khatun, which is fifty miles south of Sarakhs, and 150 miles south of Merv, as the starting point of the new Russo-Afghan frontier; and when the papers promised in February last would be presented to the House.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE: In view of the communications with Russia, it is not advisable that I should make any statement in this House in regard to Old Sarakhs or Tuli-Khatun. The papers promised in February have been laid as No. 1, Central Asia.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the proposed Boundary Commission would commence its work, and what steps were being taken meanwhile to check the constant advance of the Czar's troops towards Herat; and whether Her Majesty's Ministers had clearly intimated to the Russian Government that they did not recognise the assumption of the Russian staff map, which carried the Afghan frontier back to within fifty miles of Herat.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE: I cannot, under present circumstances, give any information in regard to the communications which are passing between Her Majesty's Government and the Russian Government respecting the Afghan frontier question.

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT wished to ask the noble lord a further question (a laugh)—namely, whether the Russian Government had given any undertaking not to proceed with those constant advances while Her Majesty's Ministers were making up their minds.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE said he had already stated that he could not, while negotiations were pending, give partial information to the House. (Hear, hear.)

BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

A Meeting of the Executive of the London Committee formed to oppose the Bengal Tenancy Bill, held on Tuesday, June 10, it was unanimously resolved that the cordial support of the Committee should be given to the demand of the Indian Constitutional Association of Calcutta, for a preliminary Commission of Inquiry. The Committee believe that a full and public inquiry will show that the Bill, as now before the Indian Legislature, is a measure of confiscation likely to affect most injuriously all classes of the agricultural community of Bengal, and calculated to impair the confidence of the Natives of India in the good faith of the British Government.

A MEETING, under the auspices of the Liberty and Property Defence League, and of the Indian Constitutional Association, will be held in St. James's Hall (Banquet Room, Regent-street entrance), on Wednesday, June 25, at 2.45 p.m.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Wemyss in the Chair. To support the demand for a preliminary commission of inquiry in regard to the Bengal Tenancy Bill. Gentlemen connected with India who are willing to co-operate in this important movement are invited to attend. Tickets of admission can be obtained on application to Roper Lethbridge, Esq., 19, Clanricarde-gardens, W., or to J. Berry White, Esq., E. I. U. S. Club, 14, St. James's-square, S.W., or to W. C. Crofts, Esq., Liberty and Property Defence League Offices, 4, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 16, 1884.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ON THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE TENANCY BILL.

THE two letters of Mr. Fitzpatrick, the Secretary to the Government of India, regarding the Bengal Tenancy Bill, as revised by the Select Committee of the Legislative Council, were published in extenso as a Special Supplement to "Allen's Indian Mail" of the 10th inst. These two letters are of such great importance, and of such an unusual character, that no apology is necessary if we attempt to pick out some of the salient points, so as to present their contents to our readers in a clear and concise, and easily intelligible shape.

It will be observed that in the first place Mr. Fitzpatrick's letters, as addressed to the Government of Bengal and the Registrar to the High Court of Calcutta, are communications of an unusual, and almost unprecedented character. The usual course would have been to refer the report of the Select Committee to the Government of Bengal, and to the High Court, for their opinion on the points indicated in that report. But in the present case the Government of India has done a great deal more than this. It has favoured the Government of Bengal with a running commentary on the report of the Select Committee, and has added some very significant suggestions of its own, both on the revised Bill and on several supplementary points arising out of the Bill. In the letter of the Government of India to the High Court, the drafter of the letter followed the ordinary course of consulting the judges on the specific points mentioned in the Select Committee's Report; but the last paragraph of the letter shows that a more liberal spirit operated on the minds of some members of the Imperial Council, and an opportunity has now been afforded to the judges of recording their remarks on the provisions of the whole Bill as amended by the Select Committee. Thus, to use a homely expression, all the fat is in the fire again. There is not a point in the whole controversy which will not now come under the critical eye of Chief Justice Garth and his distinguished colleagues; and although it is not to be expected that their opinion will be unanimous, it will be of no slight importance to the Government, and to the landowners and the ryots, that the provisions of the new Bill will be fully reviewed by independent legal minds. This reference of the whole Bill to the criticism of the High Court is in itself a sharp rebuff to Mr. A. P. Macdonnell and those other gentlemen who were so keen to pass the Bill in its original form, even without the amendments of the Select Committee. It is a perfect justification of the course which has been adopted by the opponents of the Bill in England, who have demanded that it should not be passed without further full and impartial inquiry.

As the letter to the High Court is comparatively brief, it may be convenient to deal with it at once, before proceeding to the consideration of the longer letter addressed to the Government of Bengal. The judges are consulted, at the request of the Select Committee, on the question whether by rules or otherwise in the Code of Civil Procedure it may be desirable to expedite the trial of rent suits. This, it will be seen, is a very important question. It is to a certain extent an apparent concession in favour of the landowners, whose grievance is that they cannot collect their rents by the procedure of an ordinary civil suit in time to enable them to meet the peremptory periodical demand of Government for revenue. The Select Committee in their report declare that they are unable to suggest anything for shortening and simplifying the procedure in rent suits. But they are ready to hear any suggestion that the High Court may have to make. The reference of this point seems to be simply delusive and misleading. Some of the members of the Select Committee might have been acquainted with the old summary processes for collecting rents, or they might have known that it was promised in the Regulations of 1793 that the landowners should never be compelled to have recourse to the Civil Courts for the collection of their rents. But it is hardly to be expected that the judges of the High Court, accustomed to all the formalities and delays of ordinary civil procedure, will be prepared to suggest a more rapid procedure for the recovery of rents. Another point referred to the High Court is whether a landlord may be allowed to bring one suit against a number of ryots holding independently of each other. Obviously such a proposition is offensive to the judicial mind, and it is almost a mockery to consult the judge on it; as there are only very exceptional cases in which such a scheme is feasible, and it is of dubious advantage to both landlord and ryot. Another point referred to the judges concerns the re-trial of a rent suit which has been decided ex parte. It is hardly necessary to say that many rent suits are decided ex parte, the object of the ryot being merely to gain time and avoid expense. When the ex parte decision is executed, he is prompt to declare that he never received notice of the suit against him. To those who are fond of legal presumptions, it surely ought to be a presumption, that the process of the court has been duly served, and that notice of the suit has been duly received. But the judges of the High Court are now invited to say whether they would allow a case which has been decided ex parte to be re-heard unless the amount decreed ex parte is first paid into court. If the Civil Courts are not rotten, there can be but one reply.

The judges are also consulted on the practical question whether a ryot is to be allowed to appeal unless he has deposited the sum decreed against him in the Court of First Instance. The Select Committee might surely have settled this point for themselves, but there is no objection to our hearing what the High Court thinks of it. The Select Committee seem to have had no great desire to consult the High Court on the most important parts of the Bill; and it is a matter of congratulation that the letter of the Government of India has enabled the High Court to express an opinion on the whole of the legislative project.

Turning to the letter addressed to the Government of Bengal, a much wider field for comment presents itself. The Secretary first enumerates the special points on which the Select Committee desired information and advice, and some of these points appear to be altogether outside and beyond the necessary limits of a rent Bill. For instance, the Committee wish to be informed if it is desirable to empower Revenue officers to arrange for the cutting of irrigation channels, the distribution of water, and the payment of compensation, and if so what form such provisions should take; and again, they wish to know if the law can be made applicable to the recovery of arrears of road cess and public works cess from rent free tenures. The Government of India very justly observes that some of these subjects would require separate legislation, though it requests the Government of Bengal to offer an opinion on them. Surely with such a large and difficult subject as the Tenancy Bill before them, it was hardly judicious to amplify the province of inquiry on such points as these. But the Select Committee also inquires if it is possible to improve the accuracy of the price lists which have been published during the past twelve years, with the view of basing a system of enhancement of rent mainly on these lists. It is really difficult to speak with becoming respect for this suggestion. The price lists in question are documents which have been prepared in a very haphazard manner, from week to week, and from month to month, by irresponsible subordinate officers of the Collectors' office and submitted, unchecked and unrevised, for publication in the "Government Gazette." They were supposed to be likely to be useful to traders and dealers and merchants—but they were seldom found to be sufficiently trustworthy to serve as a guide for any mercantile or trading purposes. Nevertheless, the Select Committee now suggests that these lists may be retrospectively improved, over a period of twelve years, so as to provide a basis for the enhancement of rents in the future. The mockery of such a suggestion is transparent.

The Government of India, in proceeding to comment on the report of the Select Committee, has taken a new opening which apparently comes from the Financial Department of Government, although the Legislative Secretary gives utterance to it. The Government of India enumerates a string of no less than eleven functions which will devolve on the existing revenue establishment in addition to their present onerous duties, if the Bill becomes law; and it plaintively inquires if the present Revenue Establishment will be equal to the discharge of their increased duties. It observes that even the eleven duties which are enumerated do not exhaust the list of the new duties to be delegated to revenue officers—and the Financial Department naturally anticipates the possibility of applications from the Bengal Government for additional collectors, and Deputy Collectors, and all the subordinate establishments which may be called into existence. It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of this inquiry as raising a material impediment to the further progress of the Bill. The Government of India is doubtless desirous that justice should be done, but it would rather see how justice is to be paid for, before it consents to give additional facilities for the administration of justice. Virtus post nummos is a very important consideration, and doubtless the Financial Department will be careful to trim the wings of the Legislature until all pecuniary difficulties are removed. Here is another grave occasion for inquiry and delay, and the progress of the Bill is not likely to be promoted until this obstacle disappears. We must reserve for another occasion our comments on many of the questions, some of them quite elementary, on which the Government of India challenges the Government of Bengal to further inquiry and discussion.

THE SPOILATION OF INDIA.

In the April number of the "Nineteenth Century," Mr. Seymour Keay says that England robs India of £41,000,000 yearly, viz., £21,000,000, her profit on her foreign trade, and £20,000,000, her actual loss on that trade.

To prove that £21,000,000 of profit is actually made, Mr. Keay produces, not the books of the merchants who made it, but trade returns, which show that the average excess of imports over exports for all European countries during the ten years from 1870 to 1880 was 19 per cent. on exports. He calls this profit, and claims for India the same rate of profit, that is £21,000,000. In reality there was not this excess in Europe; it is not profit; and it cannot occur in India.

If Mr. Keay had added to the exports of Europe, as he has to the imports of the United States £400,000,000, the value of United States bonds which have, he says, gone from Europe to America in those ten years, he would have found that the excess is under 14 per cent. and not 19.

The excess is not profit but earnings of capital, ships, and men sent abroad. The great bulk of it is made by Great Britain, Holland, Belgium, Sweden, Norway, Greece, and France. The rest of Europe did not make 8 per cent. Mr. Keay cites Turkey, but does not notice that she is bracketed with Greece and Switzerland.

India sends abroad neither capital nor ships, nor men. She cannot, therefore, expect any earnings to come in, and in fact none worth mentioning do come in. She is not robbed of her £21,000,000 profit, because she never had it.

Mr. Keay says that the producers of India are robbed of £15,000,000 yearly, being the excess in value of exports over imports. This is about 14 per cent., or one-seventh of the exports. He argues that because the exports that go out to India are replaced at the ports by six-sevenths of their value, the remaining seventh is lost to the producer, and goes as plunder to England. Take the case of wheat. In 1882, wheat was exported to the value of £8,870,000. There would not be more than £7,660,000 of imports to set against this, therefore, the wheat producers of India were robbed of £1,110,000.

Now the quantity of wheat exported was about 5,000,000 quarters, worth to the producer about 8s.; at the railway about 12s.; and at the port about 35s. 8d. Its value at the port was £8,870,000, but to the producer not more than £2,500,000. The producers would then get full value if they got imports worth to them £2,500,000. But such imports would, on the coast, be worth not more than £1,750,000, therefore, so far from the proper exchange to the producers for the wheat worth at the coast £8,870,000 being over £7,660,000, it is really only £1,750,000. Mr. Keay's figures prove, if they prove anything, that the producers get full value for their exports.

But there remains the fact, which doubtless is a fact, that there goes out of India yearly £20,000,000 more than there enters it, and the question arises, what can this be but plunder?

When Mr. Keay said that the merchants of India make a profit on her foreign trade of £21,000,000, he did not call this plunder from the outer world. Between plunder and earnings there is as much difference as between Nadir Shah's invasion of India referred to by Mr. Keay, and the annual invasion of England and Scotland by Irish reapers at harvest time.

As it would be unreasonable to think that Indian merchants can earn a profit on her foreign trade without working for it, so it would be unreasonable to believe that the railways, tramways, river steamers, dockyards, timber-yards, wharves, warehouses, foundries, coal mines, indigo factories, silk factories, tea gardens, coffee plantations, cinchona plantations, cotton mills, jute mills, paper mills, sugar mills, rice mills, saw mills, and other peaceful enterprises from which natives receive large employment and profit, should yield no return to those who made and conduct them; that the lawyers, doctors, journalists, engineers, teachers, brokers, and others whose knowledge and skill are used by the natives, should get nothing in return, or that the capital borrowed in England by the Government or by corporations, and expended in India for the good of the people, should not earn for its owners the very low interest agreed upon.

Mr. Keay quarrels with the Government for employing Europeans in its service. The Government has to answer for the liberties, peace, and welfare of all India; for the protection of those railways, canals, embankments, docks, roads, bridges, public buildings, telegraphs, forests, state lands and other real properties of which, acquired as they were by means of borrowed money or funds from the revenue, it is trustee on behalf of the public; for the protection of the large properties of corporations acquired under its auspices; of large properties of private firms and individuals, both European and native formed on the faith of its protection; for the protection and development of the industries which have sprung up and are springing up through the same faith; for the proper conduct of the great departments of public business—justice, education, police, the post office, telegraphs, and other works; for the assessment and collection of the taxes without oppression, and their spending without waste.

For all this, and more, the Government has to answer. By means of its mixed service of Europeans and natives, it has done fairly well. Mr. Keay says that, if Europeans be banished from its service, it will still do quite as well. But many think otherwise. Private firms have tried, for economy, to do without Europeans, and the plan did not answer. To many, not only Europeans but natives also, the withdrawal of European officials from the Indian service would have the same effect as the substitution of native for European officers in a P. and O. ship. Confidence would be withdrawn, and that would mean loss and disaster, however worthy the substitutes. This is what the Government of India, as manager and trustee of vast interests, has to face. Any movement in the direction of reducing its European staff must be made, if at all, slowly and cautiously.

Meantime, the European officials that it needs are engaged in the open market. They choose their career, like their neighbours, in the hope of making an honest living by honourable work. They work hard, at least, and it may surely be admitted that their earnings are not plunder, even if the Government which employs them is not at all points perfect.

If there are those among them who have extravagant admiration for their own work and service, that is an amiable weakness of human nature. Many of them see abuses, and point them out freely. They are listened to candidly by their superiors, who often learn truths from them. Occasionally, however, like Mr. Keay himself, they find mares' nests, and, on proclaiming their discovery, are snubbed.

HOME NEWS.

INDIAN TABLEAUX.—On June 10, at Prince's-hall, Piccadilly, an entertainment, consisting of Indian Tableaux, was given in aid of medical missions to the women of India. The tableaux, which were in illustration of a poem, entitled, "The Hindoo Widow's Story," were arranged by Mr. Val. Prinsep, A.R.A., and were exceedingly effective. The scene of the poem is laid in India thirty years ago. A Hindoo widow lady recounts her history from childhood. At girlhood she is secluded in the zenana, and is married to one she has never seen, and is carried away to his father's house. In the course of time she becomes the mother of a girl, instead of the son she had prayed for. This draws upon her the anger of her husband, who introduces a second wife into the zenana. In the hope of regaining her husband's affection the forsaken wife drowns her child in the Ganges, and returns home, only to find her husband dying. She claims her right to be burnt with her husband's body, but this is denied her, and she sees the favourite wife mount the funeral pyre amid the praises of the people. The story affords plentiful opportunities for striking tableaux, which were most effectually carried out, the first wife being personated by Miss Muir, her husband by Mr. Lambert, and Savitra by Miss Image. The recitation of the poem was entrusted to Miss Cowen, who, though indistinctly heard in the earlier part of the performance, contrived later to throw into her part considerable dramatic power.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMMUNICATION.—On Thursday the Select Committee of the House of Commons for considering the extension of railways in India resumed its sittings for the first time after the Whitsuntide recess, Mr. W. E. Baxter presiding. Mr. Samuelson, M.P., handed in a statement prepared by Mr. I. Lowthian Bell, the President of the British Iron Trade Association, showing that, so far as the cost of permanent way materials was concerned, the present is an exceptionally favourable time for the construction of railways in India. The statement also showed that the average cost of constructing railways in India, even including those of the earlier period, had been considerably less than the cost of railways in almost every European country, and that the average net results obtained from Indian railways were higher than those of any European country, thus affording great encouragement to extended enterprise in that direction. Reference was also made to the importance of developing the Indian coalfields and many other industries by further railway facilities. Mr. A. M. Rendel, consulting engineer to various Indian railways, said he had made a special study of the working of Indian railways. In 1870 he was a member of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for India to consider what the narrow gauge should be. The committee could not agree, and the result was that the metre gauge was adopted. He should say that railway construction on the broad gauge ought to be conducted in the future at a cost of about £6,000 per mile, and on the metre gauge at about £4,500. He did not think it desirable that the Government of India should undertake any part of the construction or the working of Indian railways. The Committee adjourned.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 25,00,000 in Bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on June 11 at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were:—In bills on Bombay, Rs. 20,000, average rate 1s. 7.75d., and Madras Rs. 61,000, average rate 1s. 7.687d., in telegraphic transfers on Calcutta, Rs. 6,00,000, average rate 1s. 7.75d.; on Bombay, Rs. 11,00,000, average rate 1s. 7.75d.; and on Madras, Rs. 1,50,000, average rate 1s. 7.75d.; or a total of Rs. 19,31,000. Tenders for bills on Bombay and Madras at 1s. 7.11-16d. and above, and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 7.3d., will receive in full. Subsequently bills for Rs. 30,000 on Calcutta were sold at 1s. 7.23-32d. per rupee. From the commencement of the financial year to June 10, the total remittances disposed of had amounted to Rs.3,83,93,000, and realised £3,169,818.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The Secretary of the Company states that at the annual general meeting, to be held in July next, the Board of Directors will recommend the payment of a dividend of £1 per cent. on the deferred annuity capital of the company, in addition to the guaranteed interest of £2 per cent. for the half-year.

OBITUARY.—Major General Daniel Henry Mackinnon, whose death has just been announced, was the son of Daniel Mackinnon, of Binfield, Berks, and grandson of the thirty-second chief of the clan. Having taken the classical premium in 1834, and graduated seventh on the Moderator List in 1836 at Dublin University, he proceeded with the 16th (Queen's Own) Lancers to India, where he served in the campaign in Afghanistan of 1838-9, under Lord Keane, and was present at the siege and capture of Ghuznee. He served also throughout the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6, and was present at the action of Buddiwall, the battle of Aliwall (at each of which a charger was killed under him), and the battle of Sohraon. He subsequently served in the Carabineers and the 43rd Light Infantry, and was Staff Officer of Pensioners at Enniskillen, Leicester, Woolwich, and London, till his retirement on the full-pay list in 1878. General Mackinnon, who was always known as the author of "Military Service in the Far East," "British Military Power in India," and other works, married, in 1847, Caroline, youngest daughter of the Hon. Thomas Robert, fourth Baron Dimsdale, of Camfield, Herts.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The half-yearly report of the directors of this company shows a gross revenue of £299,384, against £313,180; the receipts from passengers were £125,307 as compared with £135,141, and from goods £165,987 against £170,275. The working expenses were £182,384 against £192,579, the net revenue being £117,000 against £120,601.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.—The report of the directors of this company for the half-year ended December 31, 1883, states that the net results of the working show an increase of £42,538 19s. 8d., or 26.44 per cent. over the corresponding period of 1882; while the coaching traffic yielded £337 3s. 11d. less, the goods traffic added £48,336 19s. 9d., or 17.83 per cent., to the income, and the working expenses were only £5,460 16s. 2d. more. The total net revenue falls short of the guarantee by £73,492 12s. 4d. The proportion of expenditure to gross receipts is 57.14 per cent., compared with 62.29 per cent. in December, 1882, showing a reduction of 7.15 per cent. Maintenance of way and works absorbed of the receipts 12.53, locomotive expenses 22.53, carriage and wagon expenses 5.11, traffic expenses 9.60, general charges 6.70, steamboat service 0.33, special and miscellaneous expenditure 0.34. From a comparative statement of ordinary revenue and expenditure only, the excess income over the same period of 1882 was £39,470, or an increase of 9.4 per cent., while there was a decrease in expenditure of £2,115, or 0.9 per cent. All the bridges have stood well through the rains, and are now reported to be in a safe and sound condition. Upon further investigation it is found necessary that through booking will require an Act of Parliament. The directors believe that there will be no difficulty, with the sanction of the Secretary of State for India and the proprietors, in obtaining this, which will have the effect of placing the Indian railways in the position of doing that which the English railways have the power to perform. The traffic of the current half-year shows a decrease of £27,889, to the 3rd of May, 1884, as compared with the corresponding period of 1883.

SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY.—The tenth annual general meeting of this company was held on Tuesday, June 10, at the offices, 55, Gracechurch-street. Sir R. Macdonald Stephenson presided, and, in moving the adoption of the report, expressed regret at the absence of Mr. Chapman (the chairman of the company) for the first time during the past twenty years. With regard to the accounts, the total expenditure on capital account to date had been £4,146,917, or at the rate of £6,336 per mile, including the cost of rolling-stock, and the cost of converting 168 miles from the broad to the metre gauge. Although the results of the working of the line (showing a return of about 3½ per cent. on the capital outlay) were not such as had been hoped, it was to be borne in mind that the railway in its entire length of 655 miles had been opened for traffic for three years only. As to the reduction in the fares, it was satisfactory to find facilities afforded were taken advantage of by a continuously increasing number of passengers. During the first eighteen weeks of the current year the total receipts had been £133,992, as against £119,919 in the corresponding period of 1883. A conference of railway traffic officers had been held in Calcutta, the object being to frame a classification of goods and to settle the conditions on which they should be carried by Indian railways, with the object of simplifying the present system as far as possible. A code of rules had been drawn up for the approval of the Government and of the boards of the several guaranteed railway companies. With regard to the Select Committee on Indian Railways, he observed that some of the lines mentioned before the Committee, or which had been spoken of, were more in the nature of lines to tap the existing railways than feeders. Since the report of the directors had been issued they had received the report of their engineer on the re-survey of the Travancore extension, northern route, from Tinnevely, via Shencotta, to Quilon. The Travancore Government had expressed a decided preference for this route over that from Tinnevely, via the Arumboly Pass and Nagercoil to Trivandrum. The directors, in their report, dated June, 1883, had stated their reasons for being in favour of the southern route on engineering and commercial grounds. The motion was seconded and carried, and the retiring directors and auditor were afterwards re-elected.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The sixty-ninth half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Friday at the City Terminus Hotel. Colonel James Holland presided, and, in moving the adoption of the report, stated that there had been a falling off in their traffic of £67,000 as compared with the corresponding period of the previous year. This, however, was owing principally to exceptional circumstances. He did not call the falling off in the cotton crop exceptional, because they must always look for a variation in the crops. One of the items composing the deficit was the reduction in the amount of the internal grain carried, in contradistinction to wheat, which they looked on as external grain. This internal grain traffic was only carried when there was a deficiency in some quarters which they had to supply from the surplus in their own district, but last year the crops were exceptionally good all over India. Owing to the violent storms which had taken place, two of their bridges on the north-east line had been carried away, and for six weeks the through traffic beyond Bhoasawl, near which these bridges stood, was virtually suspended with the north-west of India. In the previous year, owing to the Egyptian War, they carried a large number of troops and a quantity of military stores, but this year there had been nothing of that kind, and in this item there had been a falling off of nearly £30,000. On the other hand, they had for the first time carried two new descriptions of traffic, which were regarded as of considerable importance in the future. One was moha flowers and moha seeds, from the carriage of which they had netted about £10,000. The moha flower was converted into an ardent spirit, which was drunk by the natives in Western India, and apparently the value of the seed had been discovered at Hamburg or elsewhere in Europe. The other fresh article of traffic was mineral oil, from the carriage of which they had received no less than £6,800. There had been a large addition to their passenger traffic, notwithstanding the reduction made last year in the fares of all classes. He alluded to the proposal, mentioned in the report, to extend the double line beyond Bhoasawl to Khundwa (76.76 miles) in the direction of Jubbulpore, and to Shegaum (63.83 miles) in the direction of Nagpore. They had been strongly advised by their officers to execute this work, and they had agreed to recommend the Government to consent to the proposal. The Bhopal branch had formed an important part of the deliberations of the Committee of the House of Commons which had been sitting for some time on the subject of Indian railways. Excepting Mr. Crawford, all the witnesses who had been examined had expressed themselves strongly in favour of the construction of the line; and the circular which the India Office had issued, stating that when it was made it would be on the broad gauge, showed, he thought, that that department were favourable to its construction. It would be a most valuable feeder to this company's line, whoever made it. A good deal had been said before the committee about their extravagant rates. They found, however, that the produce of the country was coming in every half year in larger quantities, except when there were special causes or decline, and as long as they found that to be the case they had no reason to suppose that they were unduly pressing the ryots. They, in fact, based their calculations of profits much more on the quantity they carried than on the amount they charged. Many of their rates, their grain rates especially, were he said, almost ruinously low. Having quoted from the report, signed by a Government official, on the Rajpootana-Malwa line, as to the low rates charged for the carriage of grain, he observed that if such remarks had emanated from this company there would have been a howl of dismay from the Chamber of Commerce of Bombay and all quarters. The directors meant to take due note of these remarks, and they intended to make no further reductions in their grain rates unless very good cause was shown why they should do so. Complaint had also been made of their cotton rates, but whereas in 1868 their average receipt per ton of all their cotton traffic was £4 7s. 8d., in the last year the average receipt had been only £2 16s. As to this traffic, too, in the five years from 1869 to 1873 they carried an average of 82,000 tons per annum, whereas in the five following years the average was 104,000 tons, and from 1878 to 1883 the average was 121,000 tons. Last year they carried 136,000 tons. Mr. H. W. Blake seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously. Resolutions were afterwards passed authorising the directors to borrow £1,000,000 on terms to be arranged between the Company and the Government, and re-electing the retiring directors and auditor. In reply to a question as to the prospects of the current half-year, the chairman stated that the returns they had received led them to believe that they would be able to pay 1 per cent. beyond the guaranteed 5 per cent., notwithstanding an estimated decline in the gross receipts of about £180,000, owing to the falling off in the wheat, cotton, and internal food grain traffic.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

TUESDAY.—A small amount of business has been done in bar silver at 50 15-16d. per ounce, showing an advance of 1-16d., but there have been no dealings in Mexican dollars. A trifling arrival of bars brought by the Don, and a larger remittance from Chili ex Aconagua, will be available to-morrow, while a consignment of coined silver per French Mexican steamer should be heard of at St. Nazaire in two or three days. There is no alteration in Eastern exchange rates, and Rupee Paper is practically unchanged, the Four per Cents. closing at 82 8¼, and the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. at 83½ 84¼. The India Council have sold six lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Bombay at 18. 7 25-32d. per rupee.

WEDNESDAY.—The amounts of bar silver received from Chili and the West Indies were placed on the markets to-day, and realised 50 15-16d. per ounce, showing no change. Later in the day the market was weaker, the change being due in a measure to the somewhat disappointing nature of the allotment of Council remittances, although the announcement of a reduction of 2 per cent. in the Bank of Bombay discount rate had perhaps a greater effect. The increased ease in the Indian Money Market is due to the approach of the monsoon. Matters are now in their normal condition, the discount rate in both Bombay and Calcutta being now 8 per cent. There is as yet, however, no change in the rates for telegraphic transfers, which are quoted 18. 7¼d. in both cities. No transactions in Mexican dollars can be reported, but the French steamer expected at St. Nazaire to-morrow has some on board. China exchange rates are unaltered. Four per Cent. Rupee Paper remains at 82 8¼, but the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. are ½ easier, at 83½ 84.

THURSDAY.—Nearly £40,000 worth of bar silver received from the River Plate was available this afternoon, but the price current yesterday was not obtainable, and 50¼d. per ounce had to be accepted. At that rate the amount which was offered was purchased for India. The Mexican dollars which have reached St. Nazaire have been taken on China account at 49¼d. per ounce, showing a slight advance on the last business price. The decline in the value of money in India has reached another stage to-day, the directors of the Bank of Bengal having reduced their discount rate from 8 to 7 per cent. The previous change from 9 to 8 per cent. was made on the 29th ult., while the present quotation marks a reduction of 4 per cent. since the commencement of May. Still, there is no practical change in the telegraphic transfer rates, which are quoted in Calcutta at 18. 7 23-32d., and in Bombay at 18. 7¼d. The China exchange quotations are also unaltered, and Rupee Paper has been quiet with no alteration in prices.

FRIDAY.—Cheaper money in India has at length caused a decline in the telegraphic transfer rates to 18. 7 11-16d. in both Bombay and Calcutta. The silver market, however, is unaltered, and business has been very quiet, bars being quoted at 50¼d., and Mexican dollars at 49¼d. per ounce. China exchange rates remain at 58. 2d. in Shanghai, and 68. 9d. in Hongkong. Transactions in Rupee Paper have been limited, and the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. have declined ¼ to 83½ 83¾; the Four per Cents. again closed at 82 8¼.

SATURDAY.—Small parcels of bar silver are wanted for India for immediate shipment at 50¼d. per ounce, but business has been very quiet. Scarcely anything has been done in Mexican dollars, which remain at 49¼d. Indian telegraphic transfer rates are dull at 18. 7 11-16d. in Bombay and 18. 7 21-32d. in Calcutta. This decline would in ordinary circumstances have been responded to by the China rates of exchange, but these are still maintained at 58. 2d. in Shanghai and 38. 9d. in Hong Kong, chiefly because the tea season is now in full swing, and also because the movement of the silk crop will soon begin. Rupee Paper has been very quiet at 83½ 83¾ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 82½ 82¾ for the Four per Cents.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

TUESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—To-day's auctions "without reserve" comprised about 25,000 packages, but of these a large proportion were boxes. Prices for the lower kinds of red and black leaf Congou were about steady, but all other grades, specially first crop teas, showed great depression and lower rates. Large quantities of "new season's" Canton teas in boxes sold flatly from 7¼d. to 10¼d. per lb.

SUGAR.—The market is extremely depressed, with a still downward tendency. At the public sales a portion of the crystallised Demerara found buyers at about 3d. decline, excepting for a few lots fine. Total quantity sold 141 casks, 3,000 barrels and bags—brown to low yellow, 20s. 6d.; middling to good, 21s. 6d. to 22s. 6d.; fine, 25s. to 26s.; other kinds almost neglected. Of 2,514 bags Natal a small part sold at 18s. 6d.;

3,222 bags Madras withdrawn. The price of beet has further given way about 6d. to 9d. since last Friday. In the Clyde market lower rates have been accepted for pieces.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—To-day's public sales, comprising 2,491 packages Indian, 236 packages Ceylon, and 1,648 packages Java tea, passed steadily, at previous rates. The private market for China tea continues very dull.

SUGAR.—There are no buyers of cane, and there has been an absence of business. Beet quiet, at yesterday's decline. In the Clyde market, pieces at 3d. to 6d. reduction for the week.

COFFEE.—At the sales of Java in Holland a general advance upon valuations has been paid, and our market is more steady. Colory kinds Plantation Ceylon advanced fully 1s.; common without change. 476 casks 127 barrels and bags sold—small to low middling, 51s. 6d. to 57s. 6d.; low to good middling, 61s. 6d. to 69s.; fine 71s. to 72s. 6d.; bold, 81s. 6d. to 96s.; a lot or two, 100s. to 104s. Of 80 cases 9 casks 1,413 bags East India a portion sold at the late decline—medium 59s. 6d. to 63s.; bold, 66s. to 67s.; small in proportion; 66 packages Jamaica sold—fair to fine ordinary, 45s. 6d. to 50s.; 65 half-frazils Mocha bought in, 80s.; 37 bags Savanilla sold, 49s. 6d. to 53s. 6d. per cwt.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that the markets do not as a rule exhibit any sign of recovery from the long existing depression, and supplies continue excessive. Some of the prices accepted during the week are again lower, but the Dutch Trading Company's sale of coffee yesterday showing a rise upon valuations, the downward tendency here appears to have been checked. Good ordinary Java went at about 29½ to 30 cents against 29 to 29½ cents in May. The leaf disease is spreading in Java, and a short yield may be anticipated. Later estimates awaited. The Rio crop of 1884-85 is likely to be moderate, viz., 3¼ million bags and that of Santos from 1¼ to 2 million bags. There has been no movement in the foreign markets, which are firm, although the European stocks continue largely in excess of previous seasons at same date. The tone here is now quiet, and Plantation Ceylon has sold at 1s. to 2s. advance. Current descriptions of East India are without improvement. The finest marks of Mysore have brought high prices. Mixed qualities sold with irregularity. Guatemala has met a steady demand at rather above the depressed rates last reported. Sugar remains exceedingly flat, and cane grown is at present unsaleable in quantity. Beet has sold at some further decline, next season's now quoted 15s. per cwt., f. o. b.; refined closes 6d. per cwt. easier in several cases. China tea by auction again went at rates in favour of the buyers for the lower kinds of Congou and new season's Canton makes. A quiet but steady market for Indian, there being little left to dispose of pending arrivals of the new crop. A cargo of Rangoon rice has sold at some reduction. The late extremely high rates of white pepper are not maintained. Black has been dull, and Singapore to arrive offers much below spot prices. At the weekly sales Cochín ginger went 1s. to 2s. per cwt. dearer. Other spices dull and unsettled.

SUGAR.—Sales continue upon a very small scale including a parcel of low Madras ex Tuesday's sale at 11s. A cargo of Java sold at 17s. 6d. for United Kingdom. There has not been any business done in West India. Dry refined goods are all lower. In the Clyde a moderate demand for prices at yesterday's decline. M. Bertrand Silz reports as follows, under date Paris, June 11:—"Our market is entirely directed by the different phases of the sugar question." The Parliamentary Commissions heard up till now are of very different opinions, and the future is still problematical. The Budget Commission on Monday pronounced against the raising of the surtax and the levy of a duty on beetroot, since then the Government seems to have accepted the project of the duty on beetroot, reserving the question of the surtax. Commerce has abandoned its fears or hopes relative to the surtax and has begun to sell at any price, so to speak, for forward delivery, say on next crop, prompt, July, August, or September. Yesterday evening the lowest price was 45l. 87½c., and to-day at the midday exchange, June delivery opened at 45l. 50c. At these prices buyers came forward, and we closed at 45l. 87½c., being 2l. fall on our prices of last Wednesday."

COFFEE.—The public sales have gone without animation, but prices are fairly steady, the supply consisting chiefly of foreign descriptions. 1,821 bags Costa Rica mostly sold. Good to fine ordinary, 48s. to 52s.; middling to good middling, 57s. 6d. to 60s. 6d.; fine colory, 78s. 6d.; 3,916 bags Guatemala chiefly sold—fair to fine ordinary, greenish, 48s. to 52s. 6d.; and grayish 55s. 6d. to 57s.; and colory, 61s. 6d. to 69s. 1,300 bags other foreign chiefly bought in, 44 cases 286 bags East India sold; Naidobatum medium, 59s. to 61s.; fine bold, 90s.; Georg, &c., medium to rather bold, 59s. 6d. to 63s. 6d.; small in proportion, 28 packages Plantation Ceylon sold, colory, small, 57s. to 58s.; middling, 67s. 6d.; fine, 81s. 6d. to 85s.; bold, 93s. to 96s. 214 packages Jamaica, good and fine ordinary, 40s. to 47s. 6d.; grayish, 52s. to 54s. per cwt.

RICE without further change, and the market remains dull.

SATURDAY EVENING.

TEA.—From Messrs. Hawes and Hertz's fortnightly report.—Indian.—A considerable proportion of the teas brought forward at auction consisted of imports of the end of last year or the commencement of this, and for these biddings have been very slow, and many parcels had to be withdrawn. Fine teas are in small supply, and met with good competition. Pekoes and broken Pekoes of the medium class are difficult of sale, and barely maintain former value. Souchongs and Pekoe Souchongs are in good inquiry at firm prices. Broken teas are in proportionately large supply, and show a slight decline in value. The first sale of 1884-1885 crop teas took place on the 5th inst., when a small invoice of Darjeeling tea realised—Pekoe, 12. 8d.; broken Pekoe, 2s. 0½d.; Pekoe Souchong, 1s. 2¼d.; broken tea, 1s. 0½d. Deliveries for last month amounted to 6,062,000lb., against 4,737,000lb. in May, 1883; and with light imports, stocks were reduced at the commencement of the month to 21,500,000lb., against 19,069,000lb. last year. Ceylon have come to hand in better assortment, though still a large proportion is sent over in small breaks, which prevents their realising market value, as many buyers do not sample less than 18

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS,
C C COLDS,
A B STOMA.
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE. — Dr. J. C.
BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff)
DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLO-RODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE IN-VENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr.
Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE. — Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS
BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.
— See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.
GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
London, REPORT that it ACTS as a
CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETE-LY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical
Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR, — We congratulate you upon
the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars;
and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and
Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia,
the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during
many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms
of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 330, Russell St., W.C.

IS
SPECIFIC
CHOLERA.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's,
from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis
Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith
on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. — We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE
PALLIATIVE in

NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of
EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts
short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION. — The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRU-PULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 23, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay June 2; Madras and Allahabad, May 2; Calcutta, May 1.

The Liberty and Property Defence League has now taken up the question of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and in alliance with the Indian Constitutional Association will combat the revolutionary measures of Lord Ripon's Government in real earnest. We trust that all Anglo-Indians who dislike confiscation, and who desire to maintain the traditional honour of the English name, will come to the meeting at St. James's Hall next Wednesday, June 25. The Right Hon. the Earl of Wemyss and March will take the chair at 2.45 p.m.; and will be supported by the Right Hon. Earl Fortescue, the Right Hon. Lord Stanley of Alderley, the Right Hon. Lord Bramwell, Mr. Denzil R. Onslow, M.P., Mr. W. T. Marriott, M.P., Mr. Cecil T. Forester, M.P., Mr. Storer, M.P., Mr. C. T. Buckland, Mr. J. Dacosta, Mr. Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., and the whole of the London Committee formed to oppose the Bill.

The movement against the annual exodus to Simla, and against the whole system of "government by picnic," is evidently gaining strength in India rapidly. Nor can this be wondered at. The English element in India has had an unpleasant experience of the results of the Simla system in the Ilbert Bill; the Native element is having a still more unpleasant experience in the Bengal Tenancy Bill. That both these Bills owe their origin largely to the obfuscation of Lord Ripon's mind, produced by Simla seclusion, in the society of Mr. Ilbert and Dr. Hunter, can no longer be doubted. In the more wholesome atmosphere of Calcutta, the first sparks of these mischievous measures would have been extinguished in laughter; but at Simla, Mr. Ilbert and Dr. Hunter were able to blow them into a flame before any body else knew what was going on in the Viceregal closet.

And the same thing must always happen whenever we chance to have a Viceroy of a reserved and unsocial nature, who confines his confidence to one or two favourites, and knows nothing of what is going on in the world outside, except through a distorted medium. In such a case, the Simla system involves a danger to the Empire, that is really of the first magnitude—as we have seen clearly enough in the storms and troubles of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty, which have been without exception due to the wrong-headedness of the Government, and in no way owing either to natural calamities or to foreign complications. We have deliberately wasted and misused the priceless gifts of nature during the period of the fat kine, in order to gratify Lord Ripon's weak vanity; and now if we get (as is always to be feared) once more the years of the lean kine—when the difficulties of the Indian Government will be real and unavoidable, and not merely arising out of their own incapacity—it must be admitted that we shall have to face those difficulties in a state of disorganisation and disunion that justifies the gravest apprehensions.

"It is stated that the tribes near Quetta are showing signs of disquietude," so telegraphs the Times correspondent at Calcutta. And then he proceeds, very properly, to give us the various excuses that are put forward by the Simla Foreign Office—the increase in the number of men employed on the railway, and so forth—the old, old story, to be found passim in all Mr. Gladstone's speeches on our ever recurring frontier troubles under the "scuttling" dispensation. Of course, it would never do to say that "the tribes near Quetta are showing signs of disquietude" because they are perceiving more and more clearly every day that England (under Mr. Gladstone and Lord Ripon, at least) is the retreating Power, always ready to run away and desert its allies, whilst Russia is the advancing Power, always prompt to reward a bold ally.

The Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market, corrected up to Saturday, May 31:—

"We have had rather a quiet week in our freight market since last mail, and quotations are about the same. Steamers for London are mostly holding out for an advance. For sailing tonnage the demand has been very quiet, and beyond filling up the loading ships for London, only one other ship has taken the berth. Two vessels have found employment for New York. Some forward steamer engagements are reported from July to October, chiefly for jute shipments, at an advance of 10s. per ton over rates prevailing at present. Our unfixed tonnage in port amounts to a total of 40,000 tons."

We take the following account of the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s Report:—

"There has been no further rain in Behar since our last Circular, and prospects are generally less favourable in consequence. The sowings effected on the rain reported in our last have died off to a great extent, and have also been attacked by grasshoppers and other insects. In Chumparun, where the rain fall was heavier than on the other Zillahs, the late sowings have so far stood pretty well, but Tirhoot has been less fortunate, and in Chuprah prospects are scarcely better than they were a month ago. Without speedy rain Behar will not do so well as was expected a week or so back. In Lower Bengal generally more rain is wanted, and without it manufacture is likely to be retarded. So far prospects are good in Jessore, fair in Cishnagur, and poor or indifferent in all the other Zillahs. We have no advices of interest either from the Benares or North-West Provinces."

The same firm gives the following on the Calcutta Tea Market:—

"Only one sale has been held since our last, on the 29th inst. The biddings were more animated than at the last auctions, but we quote no alterations in values. Manufacturing reports from all districts are generally more satisfactory."

The Times of India gives the following obituary till the departure of the Mail, June 3:—

"Lieut Godfrey Arthur Selwyn Dupuis, North Staffordshire Regiment; Mr. Thackoredas Atmaram, of Bombay; Mr. F. W. Going, A.V.D., attached 2nd Light Cavalry, Bellary."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

The following are the general remarks of the Agricultural Department on the state of the season and prospects of the crops for the week ended May 21:—

"Excepting a few local showers, there has been no rain during the past week in the North Western Provinces and Oudh, Punjab, Central Provinces, Central India, Rajputana, and Hyderabad. Rain continues to fall generally over Madras, Bengal, and Assam. Some districts in the southern portion of the Bombay Presidency and towards the Upper Sind Frontier have also had rain. No report has been received from British Burma. Harvesting is going on in Madras, and standing crops are in good condition. Agricultural operations are in active progress in Mysore. Rain is wanted in Coorg for the rabi crop which has been sown. The rabi harvest is over in the Bombay Presidency, and the ground is being prepared for ensuing crops in Dharwar and Kanara. Kharif operations continue in Berar, and prospects are good in Hyderabad. Hot winds prevail in Central India and Rajputana, and a scarcity of water is felt at Neemuch. Cattle are suffering from want of fodder in Ajmere. The rabi harvest is approaching completion in the Punjab; in the south-eastern districts the yield has been poor; elsewhere it promises to be above the average. Great scarcity of pasturage exists in Rotak, and in parts of Dera Ismail Khan, and many cattle have died. Temperature has increased in the North Western Provinces and Oudh, but the wind continues easterly in several districts. Preparations for the kharif are going on. The general condition of cattle is reported to be fair, though fodder is scarce in Moradabad and Jhansi. In the Central Provinces the rabi harvest is being winnowed in several districts, and ploughing for the kharif is in progress. In Bengal the rain has slightly damaged the standing crops in some places. More is wanted in Behar, Chota, Nagpur, and parts of Orissa. Ploughing and sowing of aus and amun crop is being pushed forward; and jute, sugarcane, and boro paddy promise well. In Assam sowings are well advanced, and prospects are good. Cholera and small-pox are still prevalent in the Southern Presidencies, but, with some local exceptions, appear to be abating in Bengal and Upper India. Prices are rising in the Punjab; elsewhere there is little change."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated June 22:—

"The Government has received a despatch from the Secretary of State calling for a return showing the cost of the annual migration to the hills for a series of years. The Comptroller General has been requested to furnish the figures from 1858. This return, which is being prepared in compliance with Mr. Gorst's motion in the House of Commons will, it is said, be very difficult of compilation, as no separate account has been kept of the expenditure caused by the yearly removal of the Supreme Government to Simla, the charges on that account being entered under the general head of 'Tour expenses.' It is believed, however, that the direct expenses of this removal to and from Simla average from seven to eight lakhs of rupees annually. If to this be added the expenses incurred by the local Governments, it will, doubtless, be found that the summer trip of her rulers costs India not less than £100,000 per annum. Add to this the expenditure on public buildings at the different hill capitals, the charges for extra telegrams, postage, and other indirect expenses necessitated by the absence of the Government from the capital, and some idea may be formed of the burden imposed upon India, in order to enable certain high officials to avoid the heat of the plains.

"Were it, however, only a question of cost, the matter would hardly be worth disputing about; but there are graver issues involved, and these the Calcutta and Madras newspapers are now pointing out daily. The European and native journals are unanimous on this subject, and one of the latter, the Hindoo Patriot, describes the Simla exodus as a 'shameless waste of public money, which must be put a stop to at once.' There is a strong feeling in Calcutta on the question, which will probably be expressed shortly at a public meeting. A second meeting has been held in Madras, composed entirely of natives, by which resolutions were passed condemning the removal of the Government. As the interests of European and natives are, in this matter, identical, the agitation will probably grow in strength and extend over the whole country.

"The Bombay Government has agreed to the request of the Exhibition Committee and promised to take over the buildings at a price of 75 per cent. on their cost. A difficulty which had threatened to prove fatal being thus surmounted, it seems likely that the Exhibition will be held after all, although it may perhaps be postponed until the winter of 1886-87. The Committee has declined an offer made by Mr. Joubert, promoter of the recent Calcutta Exhibition, to undertake the management of that at Bombay.

"The action, or rather inaction, of the Calcutta Corporation with respect to the sanitation of the town is attracting much attention. The Surgeon-General of Bengal, in a correspondence lately published, expressed the opinion, first, that the steps recently taken for sanitary improvements were inadequate; secondly, that the cholera and small-pox mortality during last March and April was abnormal and alarming, and that there was likely to be a recurrence of the same state of things next year; thirdly, that the Municipal Commissioners, as a body were not qualified to judge what special sanitary measures were most required, or to realise the responsibility under which they lay as regarded the condition of the unhealthy portions of the city; and fourthly, that the only hope of real improvement would consist in the appointment of a select body of experts, outside the Corporation, who would be capable of forming an opinion, at once scientific and independent, on the requirements of the case, and on the best practical manner of meeting them, and whose recommendations might be immediately carried out by order of the Government.

"The Lieutenant Governor recently offered to relieve the Corporation of a large portion of its contribution to the police fund, provided it would agree to raise a like amount for sanitary improvement. The majority of the Commissioners declined to accept this condition. It is generally believed that they, being largely composed of house proprietors, were actuated by the desire to avoid any additional burden upon themselves in the shape of an increased house-rate. Be this as it may, it is felt that the present system of municipal government in Calcutta has proved a failure, and that the sooner the Government interferes, as the law empowers it to do, the better for the city.

"Indigo prospects have greatly improved, several good falls of rain having been reported from Behar; and it is probable that the manufacture will begin shortly. The reports from the North West Provinces are also good. The heavy rainfall of the last three days would seem to indicate that the monsoon has now fairly set in.

"Disturbances have been for some time expected in Porebunder, a native State in the Bombay Presidency, owing to the oppression by the Rajah of a particular class of his subjects, called the Mhers. The Government has now ordered the lands of the Mhers to be surveyed, and their rights to be investigated, and registered in the Rajasthani Court. This prompt action will probably avert all danger of disturbance.

"It is stated that the tribes near Quetta are showing signs of disquietude. This movement is attributed by some to the increase in the number of men employed on the railway, and by others to the recent strengthening of the garrison. An attack is said to have been made on Gumbay, a cavalry outpost north of Thull Chotiala. No details of the affair have been received.

"The items of news received from Cabul are few and of minor importance. The report that the Governor of Farrah had been imprisoned is contradicted, and it is now stated that he has been summoned to Cabul to confer with the Ameer on the subject of the condition of his district.

"One of the Khans of Bogar, imprisoned by the Ameer, alleges that Ayoub Khan is lying dangerously ill at Teheran.

"A rumour is in circulation to the effect that the Russians are building barracks near Maimena. The Indian Government disbelieves the statement, and asserts that it has been current for six months past.

"The question whether the Anglo-Russian Commission for the delimitation of the Afghan frontier will be despatched next autumn continues to excite much interest. The Ameer has been officially informed that the appointment of such a commission may be expected. All the Indian newspapers unite in impressing upon the Government the necessity of insisting that India should be strongly represented on the commission, and all agree in pointing to General Macgregor as the person best qualified to be her principal representative. Among the other officers mentioned as well fitted to serve on the Commission, the most prominent are Colonels St. John and Stewart, the latter of whom is now on special duty on the Perso-Afghan frontier. There may be some differences of opinion as to the various measures which should be adopted in India and immediately beyond the frontier, for the purpose of guarding against the Russian menace, but in this country at least it is not disputed that it is absolutely and urgently necessary that a distinct boundary line should be laid down between Afghanistan and the Russian possessions, and that England should give Russia clearly to understand that any attempt to cross this line will be a casus belli.

"A Bombay newspaper gives currency to a report that the Government is about to subsidize the great Ghilzai tribe, but the authenticity of the rumour is doubtful.

"Colonel Lookhart, head of the Intelligence Department, has been recommended by the Indian Government for employment in Acheen in connection with the Nisero affair. Colonel Lookhart has twice visited Acheen, and is well known to the Dutch authorities there."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE GREAT REPUBLIC.

IN Mr. Justice Cunningham's amusing "Chronicles of Dustypore," there is a character named Des Vœux, of whom we are forcibly reminded in reading Sir Lepel Griffin's book on the United States. And we confess to a something—a Doctor-Fell-like feeling—for which it would be difficult to account, in reading through the bright little work. In spite of some inconsistencies, and not a few paradoxes, it is bold, original, and—on the whole—sound. But it has a sort of disparaging, curmudgeon tone which may account for a certain amount of shrinking. The railing at some things American, the minimising of others, usually admired; the medical details about the looks of the ladies; all help this repugnance. There is an unnecessary bitterness, too, in the language applied to the English—presumably the clever writer's own fellow-countrymen; and (among minor matters) a contemptuous attitude towards the great English writer who has just returned from the States—and whom, en passant, it would be in better taste to write of as "Mr." Matthew Arnold, and not as Sir Lepel usually does, without the courteous prefix.

Nor can we safely admit without qualification the whole of the political argument. For it is the apparent purpose of the chapters (which, though appearing from time to time as essays in a periodical, are now presented as an organic whole) to strike a side blow at the progress of popular institutions in this country from the point of view of American politics. Thus, in Chap. 6, we are told that Republics are incapable of producing "sweetness and light." But the whole argument seems based on a mistake. Ancient Greece was the home and source of nine-tenths of our existing culture; and the greatest models of poetry and sculpture, oratory and historical writing, were produced under Democracy. It is not in political institutions, per se that "America" differs from Athens; except in so far as the great extension of area and population has substituted representations for the tumultuous assemblies of the old Demos. In the seventh and eight chapters, again, we are bid to observe the corruption and bad administration generally that result from universal suffrage exercised by negroes, Irishmen, and other uneducated foreigners; and to draw a lesson from it while yet there is time. But the analogy is really very far from applicable to Great Britain. We have none of those classes in our constituencies, present or to come. It might perhaps have been better to make the power of at least signing one's name an indispensable preliminary to the exercise of the franchise. But Mr. Disraeli thought otherwise. Yet, almost ever since the introduction of household suffrage, education has been, in theory at least, compulsory. Every voter will soon be able to read and write, and the overwhelming majority are already patriotic citizens, with a respect for the law and confidence in the governing classes. The nationalisation laws of the United States and the premature enfranchisement of the negro are things with which the Americans will probably grapple when these evils become intolerable. In the meanwhile they are evils peculiar to them; and it is the extreme of pessimism to force these things into the service of a general denunciation of free government. As Sir Lepel's New York friend wrote to him of the Irish, "When they become lawless they will be shot down."

The tenth chapter on "The Cost of Democracy" is full of suggestive figures, but the same remark applies to it. The cost of American Democracy is due to corruption; and corruption is due to special causes, existing in the United States, which we have no call to reproduce here in England.

In the concluding chapter, which deals with the "Monroe Doctrine and the Foreign Policy of the United States," there is little to censure, and much to praise. It is the author's decided opinion that the spirit of the country is by no means hostile to Great Britain; that the platonic craze in favour of Russia is cured; that both sections of the English-speaking family are gravitating towards a healthy friendship with Russia; and that Canada is, from every point of view, safe.

"We may hope," concludes the book, "that the united Anglo-Saxon race, English and American, will join hands across the Atlantic; and, disdaining all possible occasion of quarrel, cement a lasting alliance which will insure the peace and progress of the world."

The manly enthusiasm of this chapter atones for much that was less agreeable in the earlier portions of the book; and one cannot but lay it down with a sigh of omnia si sic scripsisset!

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—By this mail I have received the enclosed paper on the grievances of the General List.

As the subject is one of great interest not only to those officers in India affected by these grievances, but also to their relatives in England, I venture to hope that you will find space in your columns for the paper in question, as it sets forth plainly the present condition of officers belonging to the General List and the excellent reasons they have for seeking redress.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A. E. F. ELIOT-JAMES.

Eaton-place, Brighton, June 15, 1884.

THE GRIEVANCES OF THE GENERAL LIST.

In order to understand fully the case of the officers of the General List, which seems likely once more to be brought into prominence, it is necessary to cast a retrospective glance over a period of twenty-five years, to the profound and placid calm which followed the stormy days of the Mutiny, and during which a succession of sweeping, wholesale, and necessarily crude reforms were hastily inaugurated and rapidly carried out in the administration of the country. The chief measure which occupied the attention of the Home authorities was the pressing necessity for providing for its future military tenure and disposing of the vast body of officers whose regiments had either mutinied or been subsequently disbanded. India had been transferred from the custody of "our affectionate friends John Shepherd and thirteen other directors" to the Crown; the Sepoy Army had ceased to exist; eighty-seven regiments had disappeared from the list, while the bulk of their officers still remained, for whom it became imperative to do something. At first it was contemplated to transfer the lot to the half-pay list at a swoop; from such a crushing measure, however, they were rescued, by the insertion of a saving clause in the Act of Parliament, which thenceforth has stood as the palladium of justice of the old Indian officer, and which has at the same time rendered the name of Mr. Henly, then member for Oxfordshire, famous in the annals of the military administration of the country. It is not, however, with these officers that we have at present to deal; our immediate concern is with a younger generation, whose claims are at the present day being energetically pressed upon the notice of Government, and bid fair to claim the recognition due to them at no very distant date. These are the large body of officers who were sent out to India by the Board of Directors of the Honourable East India Company to join an army which had virtually ceased to exist, but which still retained a local name and habitation in the pages of the official Army List, a veritable corps d'élite, consisting entirely of officers in the cadres of the old regiments.

To these skeleton regiments young officers continued as heretofore from time to time to be appointed on arrival in India. This arrangement continued in force until 1859, when it was determined to reorganise the entire native army on what was called the irregular system. During this period of transition, however, the Home authorities appear to have been in much doubt and perplexity regarding the disposal of these young officers, who had been shipped off to the East under their orders with no very definite career before them. As a precautionary measure, therefore, they compelled every cadet to sign a declaration at the India Office to the effect that "his appointment was subject to any alterations that might be subsequently ordered in his conditions of service." It is scarcely necessary to say that these documents placed before the lads were unhesitatingly signed by them without any reflection, and in most cases even without perusal, and in others simply as a matter of formal routine. It never occurred to them that they could be treated during their future professional career by a great Government in any but a just and generous manner.

Let us, however, see the subsequent workings of this declaration, and follow the career of these cadets from the date of entering the service to the present day. As a preliminary measure they were in the year 1859, under instructions from the Secretary of State for India, placed on what was called a General List of Cavalry and Infantry, pending the reorganisation of the Indian Army. In the year 1861 the reorganisation of the native army had been completed. The European troops in the late Company's service were formed into the new Cavalry and Infantry Line regiments, the Indian Artillery was brought on the Imperial establishment for general service, and the Staff Corps was formed on its present basis. In terms of the declaration already referred to it was optional with Government to dispose of the young General List officers in any way that might be considered most expedient at this stage of proceedings, but, prior to taking any definite action, the Government of India referred the question to the Secretary of State at home, who, in his despatch published in G.G.O. No. 960 of 1861, decided that the General List officers might be given the option, in common with other young officers of the Indian army, of volunteering for general or local service, or for the Staff Corps. Here we come to a very important stage. This option, it will be seen, at once rendered henceforth absolutely null and void the declaration signed by the young cadets at the India Office, and brought these officers under a fresh covenant, which placed them on an equal footing with all the Cavalry and Infantry officers of the Indian army. As a direct result of this concession the bulk of the General List officers at once joined the local or general service or entered the Staff Corps, as their several predilections led them. In the case of those who elected for general service or the Staff Corps, no distinction of any kind was made between them and the other officers of the old company's army; their case may, therefore, be dismissed from further consideration. We, however, come to those who preferred to join what was called the local service, a term which at the present time and to the present generation needs a brief explanation. At the time of the formation of the Staff Corps the officers of the Cavalry and Line regiments of the united army were all borne in cadres of their old corps, exactly as if the old Sepoy army was still in existence. In these regimental cadres they were promoted from grade to grade as vacancies occurred. On the organisation of the Staff Corps, however, the option was given to all to elect for it if they so desired; a great many availed themselves of the permission; their names, however, still continued to be borne in italics in the regimental cadres from which they had personally withdrawn, in order to regulate promotion, actual for those who remained, and nominal only for the others.

Those who elected to stand by the phantom colours of their defunct regiments were, as matters subsequently turned out, wise in their generation, so much so that the term "local" was synonymous with "lucky" for several years in the army. During the above explanatory digression we have, however, momentarily lost sight of our young friend whose case we are pleading. At this stage of affairs he reappears upon the scene. In common with many of the old officers of John Company's service, with their strong sense of regimental esprit de corps, he held aloof from the Staff Corps, his status and promotion being regulated as follows. To commence with, he was suffered to remain temporarily on the roll of the General List to which he belonged—cavalry or infantry as the case might be, but under the operations of G.G.O., No. 671 of 1865 he received promotion to the grade of captain as vacancies occurred in the various local cadres, the wording of the Secretary of State's despatch being as follows:—Officers of the General List have a prior claim to vacancies amongst the captains of the Indian regiments in which there are no subalterns, than subalterns of other corps." This ruling virtually placed the General List officer on exactly the same footing in every respect as the other local officers then serving in the local regiments or cadres. The benefit that many derived from this ruling was very great. Those who were fortunate enough to be gazetted to a cadre regiment in which a quick run of promotion took place, distanced many others senior to them who were officers of the late army, to say nothing of those who, joining the Staff Corps, had to wait for fixed periods. The main point, however, which we arrive at is this—the Secretary of State has transformed the General List officer into a "local" with obvious claims to all the rights and privileges thereunto appertaining. It must be remembered, however, that the option of joining the Staff Corps at a subsequent period, should he so wish, still remained with him until September, 1866, when this privilege was summarily withdrawn by G.G.O. No. 808, dated September 26, 1866.

As a local officer his position was still further confirmed and rendered unassailable by the wording of the following General Orders, viz., G.G.O. No. 1,115 of 1862:—"Promotion of General List Officers will be regulated by the established usages of the service," and again by G.G.O. No. 632 of 1864:—"The general promotion of Indian officers will be accelerated, and to every officer, including the cadet who entered the service so late as 1861, (i.e., General List officers), the promotion through every grade with the pay thereunto belonging, as if the whole Native Army had been kept up is assured, and the right to Indian pensions established." In the face of such clear and unmistakable assurances—the next stage of proceedings in which a volte face was made by Government in a manner which remains to this day incomprehensible—might well cause not only astonishment, but consternation and a feeling of insecurity to the unfortunate officers of the General List.

In 1867 a General Order, No. 866, was published, which laid down that their promotion was henceforth to be regulated according to Staff Corps rules! The only reason assignable for this arbitrary and unjustifiable proceeding was that the Home authorities were panic-stricken at the prospect of the rapid promotion taking place at the time amongst the local officers of the old army; they lost their heads, and permitted themselves to perpetrate an act of injustice and breach of faith with a large section of officers with a view to stem the tide of promotion which they were incapable of checking in any other way. It became necessary of course to cast about for some pretext for the justification of so unheard of and sweeping an order; and failing all else, the Secretary of State in desperation grasped at the declaration signed by the young cadet at the India Office which we have already alluded to. It was, however, forgotten apparently that, as we have shown above, the declaration was annulled by G.G.O. No. 961 of 1861 and the subsequent orders which we have quoted.

It is a matter of much regret that no decisive action was taken by the General List officers at the time to bring this unfair and arbitrary treatment before Parliament. Had they, however, anticipated the further harsh measures in store for them, there is no doubt that they would have risen in alarm and pressed for a recognition of their claims. In 1881-82 the new Pension Rules for the Indian Army were promulgated by G.G.O. No. 104, dated December 6, 1882. In these regulations it has been laid down that the General List officers shall be placed in a separate class as regards retiring allowances to officers of the Staff Corps and the old Local Army. Their claims to Colonel's allowances have been virtually swept away. That is to say, except in the case of a few fortunate seniors at the head of the list, the bulk of the General List officers must take their chance of attaining these allowances in the proportion of one in thirty. When it is remembered that they all entered the service between the years 1859 and 1861, it will be seen that their prospects in this respect are extremely doubtful, as, from an actuarial point of view, there is little or no difference in their chances of life. The prize therefore of the service to which they looked forward, and to which they had an equal claim with other officers of their own standing, has been snatched away from them.

Further, they have been brought upon a reduced scale of pension as compared with their contemporaries in the service. Thus:—

Officers who joined the Staff Corps, prior to September 12, 1866, receive after

|-------------------|-----|-----|-----|------------|

General List officers of exactly the same standing receive after

| 20 years' service | ... | ... | ... | £250 |

the reason alleged for placing these unfortunate officers on these reduced rates being that they failed to avail themselves of the option given to them to join the Staff Corps prior to September, 1866. It is, however, contended and with reason, that up to that date there was absolutely no object to gain in so doing, inasmuch as all Staff and other Army appointments were open to both classes alike. Further, that it had in no way been represented to them that their preference for the Local Service would involve any injurious after effects. They also point to the fact that, although the Staff Corps was finally closed to them in 1866, it was not till the following year that they were compelled to accept promotion according to Staff Corps rules, in supercession of those of the Local Service to which they had every reason to believe they belonged. Had they been aware that this step was in contemplation there is little doubt that they would have joined the Staff Corps en bloc prior to the 12th of September, 1866, in which case they would now be in the enjoyment of equal privileges with Staff Corps officers of their standing. The plea brought forward by the Secretary of State for his latest ruling regarding retiring allowances hinges once more on the declaration signed nearly a quarter of a century ago by the young cadets at the India Office. He, however, acknowledges "that although no pledge was given to these officers as to Colonel's allowances, it was no doubt always understood that they came under the general pension regulations of the day."

To sum briefly in conclusion, and in few as words as possible, the grievances of the General List officers, the case stands as follows:—

(a). Without being permitted any voice in the matter, they were in 1867 placed compulsorily on the Staff Corps scale of promotion.

(b). In consequence of this they have lost all prospects of rapid promotion which they had a right to expect in common with other officers of the Local Service.

(c). That although treated in the matter of promotion as Staff Corps officers, they are at the same time debarred from equal privileges in the matter of retiring allowances, in comparison with officers of their own standing in the Staff Corps.

(d). That in the matter of retirement they are in a worse position than many of their juniors in the service who joined the Staff Corps prior to the 12th September, 1866.

What they want is to be placed on an equal footing as regards retiring allowances with the officers who joined the Staff Corps prior to September, 1866. The other question of promotion, it is feared, could not after so great a lapse of time admit of any radical change without creating many complications and much confusion. The subject has been taken up by the Press at home, and we feel certain that the matter only needs ventilation, and placing in a clear light to ensure to these officers the restoration of at least a portion of the rights and privileges to which they justly lay claim.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Adverting to the statement made by the Landholders Association to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal on the occasion of his visit to Behar, about a year ago that "the selling price of small zemindaries has, since the agitation for changes in the rent-law has commenced, fallen from thirty-two years to sixteen years purchase, and there is a tendency to further decrease," I beg to state that this is a positive fact, and the anticipated decrease in the value of zemindary property in Bengal has now fallen to ten or twelve years purchase. During the last twelve months I was unable to dispose of a single zemindary, though I had a good number of very valuable ones on my list. None of the large capitalists in Calcutta would look at zemindary property, solely on account of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, the effects of which, they averred, would be to depreciate considerably the actual money value of the property, and also to introduce other more serious elements of discord and disturbance which they did not care to have to contend with, and they contented themselves with investing their capital in house property in Calcutta. Of course, the agitation in regard to this Bill had an equally disturbing and also depreciating effect in regard to money to be raised on mortgages of landed properties in Bengal, such mortgages being almost impossible to negotiate during the past twelve months. I enclose my card, and am, Sir, yours truly,

LATE A LANDED PROPERTY COMMISSIONER AGENT IN BENGAL.

Kensington, June 23, 1884.

The following officiating appointments have been sanctioned by the Government of India in the Ordnance Department, vice Major T. Walker, Royal Artillery, Commissary of Ordnance, first class, on furlough:—Captain H. P. Willoughby, Royal Artillery, Commissary of Ordnance, 2nd class, to officiate as Commissary of Ordnance, 1st class. Captain T. T. Vaughan, Royal Artillery, Commissary of Ordnance, 3rd class, to officiate as Commissary of Ordnance, 2nd class. Captain W.D.B. Fenton to officiate as Commissary of Ordnance, 3rd class.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

THE RUSSIAN OCCUPATION OF MERV.

THE rapidity with which the Russians are following up the advantage they have gained by the occupation of Merv is in contrast with their usual dilatory method of progression. When Russia has, from time to time, absorbed a fresh piece of territory, she has been accustomed to rest awhile, being apparently engaged in the digestion of the morsel. It was so in the case of Khiva, Khokand, and Tashkend, after she had established herself on the eastern shores of the Caspian, and for a short time after the fall of Geok Tepe. But the occupation of Merv has been followed by no period of rest. That event occurred in February, and within the brief period which has since elapsed the record of Russian activity in the neighbourhood of her new possession has been very full. The Russian outposts have been advanced close to Sarakhs, if indeed Persia has not been induced to altogether yield that town. The Saryk Turcomans, inhabiting the country south and south-west of Merv, have submitted to the Czar; and Major Alihanoff has probably established Russian authority about Panjden. All this has taken place in the short space of three months, and before any organised Government has been set up in Merv itself. It may be presumed that there exists some pressing reason for this exceptional activity; and it may not unreasonably be supposed that the reason is to be found in the negotiations which it is known are proceeding between the English and Russian foreign offices, with a view to bring about an arrangement for the demarcation of the northern frontier of Afghanistan. Russia having more than once admitted that she holds Afghanistan to be beyond the sphere of her influence, it is clearly desirable that there should be a definite understanding where Afghanistan ends and the country which is not Afghan begins. If the variance between English and Russian ideas on this matter were small, no doubt a satisfactory understanding could long ago have been arrived at by mutual concessions on either side; but it unfortunately happens that the difference of opinion is considerable. For instance, on English maps it will be found that Panjdeh and the country of the Saryk Turcomans are well within the northern boundary of Afghanistan. According to Russian ideas this region lies beyond Afghanistan, and, consequently, within the limits of the sphere of Russian influence. As was pointed out the other day, Russia holds that the northern boundary of Afghanistan in this region terminates with the northern slopes of the Safed Koh, whence it trends with a semi-circular contour to Khoja Saleh on the Oxus. In the settlement of this difference of opinion it is clear that, in attempting to maintain her pretensions, Russia will find herself much strengthened if she can confront England with a fait accompli. If she could inform the English Foreign Office that she found no Afghan authority existing in the country under dispute, and that Russian government had now been established there, Lord Granville would obviously find himself under difficulties in endeavouring to maintain the English view of the proper nationality of that region. It may be, therefore, that the abnormal activity of Russia in that quarter is put forth with a view to this denouement. Accomplished facts are hard things in diplomacy, and the aspect of affairs seems to indicate that Russia will carry her case as regards the delimitation of the Afghan border against the views and wishes of England.

THE CYCLONE AT RANGOON AND AKYAB.

THE correspondent of the Englishman writes from Rangoon, May 19:—

"On Friday and Saturday last a violent cyclone broke over the Bay of Bengal, and dashed with terrific fury on the coast of British Burma. Several of the steamers of B. I. S. N. Company were either in the Bay or about to go to sea from this port. On Friday morning the Purulia and Madras left. At the time the former was waiting for her passengers, it blew so hard in the harbour that several declined to trust themselves to the frail sampans, and preferred losing their passage to risking their lives. The latter steamer carried 710 deck passengers, and had barely got outside when she experienced the full force of the storm. On Friday night, it, if anything, increased, and she sprang a leak, two of her boats were smashed, and a third considerably damaged. The seas washed her fore and aft, and it was with the utmost difficulty and danger that the crowd of human beings that peopled her decks could be got below, but it was eventually managed, and the hatches were fastened down. It was now much easier to work the steamer, and as soon as it was possible, she put back, reaching Rangoon with six feet of water in her on Sunday morning. Up to this time it was feared that some of the coolies had been washed overboard, but it has since been ascertained that all are safe. On Monday morning the Rajputana arrived with the English mails, and brought an account of the gale. She has weathered it well, but her captain had to run about 140 miles out of his course to avoid the full force of it; as it was, he encountered most atrocious weather, shipping enormous seas that washed the steamer from stem to stern, and the passengers state that it is wonderful how all escaped. On her way she spoke the Pemba and signalled, but the latter could not return them, owing to the heavy weather she was working against. It was, however, thought that all was well. On the same day (yesterday) the S. S. Maharani arrived from Port Blair in a somewhat forlorn condition, owing to her engines having broken down. When signalled from Elephant Point assistance was asked to tow her up. More or less damage has been done in and about Rangoon. A couple of cargo boats were swamped. They were loaded with rice belonging to Messrs. Ainslie, Warren, and Co. The boats were saved but the rice will be useless. A godown belonging to Messrs. Strang, Steel was unroofed, and a deal of grain damaged. Trees have been blown down in all directions, and temporary dwellings have been cleared away. The worst news reached Rangoon to-day. The Rangoon Times says that Akyab has been subjected to a tremendous shock from the cyclone, and that immense losses have been sustained, owing to the number of houses that have been blown down. The mills, or rather most of them, have been considerably damaged, and the destruction to property is very great. Great havoc was caused among the shipping, and four ships—the Loch Learna, the Fiji, the Alexander, and the Rossini—have been driven ashore. This disaster happened on Saturday, and the news was communicated to some of the merchants on Sunday. It is not possible to give even a faint estimate of the losses from the meagre details to hand, but there can be no doubt that the damage done is very great."

S IRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

LORD LYTTON'S POLICY.

THAT accuracy of language is not Lord Kimberley's strong point, his lordship's interviews with Mr. Atkins demonstrated with distressing distinctness. The slight mistake of a few millions which he and Mr. Cross both made on a recent occasion, as to the capital outlay on Indian railways in 1883, might be condoned, as a detail to which Secretaries of State cannot be expected—even though it is the central point of a long and hotly contested controversy—to condescend. But the accusation against Lord Lytton is less easily excusable. Both branches of it are categorically denied by the noble lord whom it concerned. "I did not," Lord Lytton writes from Sorrento, "ask Lord Cranbrook for the exclusion of natives from the Civil Service, and I did not propose that, if this could not be done, the same result should be effected by lowering the standard of age." The untruthfulness of Lord Kimberley's statement is the more unfortunate because it is difficult not to understand it as intended to throw odium on a political opponent. Everybody who has the least acquaintance with Indian affairs, is aware that Lord Lytton, during his Viceroyalty, had occasion to consider seriously the best means by which the Statute 33 Vic. c. 3 (which permitted the Government to appoint non-civilian natives to posts held exclusively by members of the Civil Service) might no longer remain, as it had since 1870, a dead letter. In an article published in the Nineteenth Century in October last, Sir James Stephen writes: "When he was appointed Viceroy in 1876, Lord Lytton did me the honour to ask my advice on various subjects connected with India. I advised, among other things, a considerable increase in the admission of natives to the Civil Service. My advice was adopted and carried out, though not on so large a scale as I recommended, or, I believe, as Lord Lytton personally wished. In the face of facts notorious as this, Lord Kimberley's attempt to make a little political capital by a false statement about the former Viceroy, is a blunder which it is difficult to understand. As to this subject, there has never, we believe, been the slightest divergence in the policies of the two great parties, who have from time to time supplied Secretaries of State for India. Both have been anxious that natives should enjoy any emoluments and perform any public duties with which, having regard to the truest and highest interests of the country, it was considered right to entrust them. Lord Kimberley's suggestion that Lord Lytton recommended a reversal of this policy is as absurd as it is disingenuous. The policy has always been the same, but it happened that in Lord Lytton's day a decided step forwards was taken in carrying it into effect.—Pioneer."

THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE.

THE telegrams published this week announced the arrival of Prince Dondoukoff at Merv. This is important news, showing that Russia fully appreciates the value of her recent acquisition. Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff is the Governor General of the Caucasus, friend and confidant of the Czar. He was appointed to his Government in succession to the Grand Duke, the brother of the late Czar, after having held an important post in Roumelia. He is a man of about sixty-four years of age, though he looks much younger, and in his younger days he took part in the wars terminating in the conquest of the Caucasus. In May 1882 he visited Baku, the great petroleum city of South Russia, after an absence of twenty-five years. He was immensely struck with the gigantic strides the development of the petroleam industry had caused within the last fifteen years. When he first was in garrison at Baku there was half a marine battalion and a few ships of war in the harbour. The town was a small fishing village, and the trade insignificant. On his entry from the railway station at Baku to Government House the Prince realised the rapid increase of the town, by having to pass through three miles of streets bedecked with flags, maypoles, &c., in honour of his entry. There were fireworks in the evening and a grand banquet given by the Baku Municipality. The Prince, in speaking at this entertainment, announced that it was his intention to restore to the Mussulman community of Baku a Masjid that, since the taking of that town by the Russians, had been used as an arsenal. This news was received with applause by the company, and one Haji Tukieff stood up, and announced that then and there, in token of thanks for the Prince's concession, placed 40,000 roubles to the credit of the theatre fund for erecting a handsome theatre at Baku. Prince Dondoukoff then went across the Caspian, and visited the new Russian stations in Trans-Caspia, Askabad included. There he ordered a good mule road to be made over the mountains vid Garmah towards Beynurd. It will not be matter for surprise to learn, as the result of the Prince's visit to Merv, that the works on the Trans-Caspian Railway have been vigorously pushed on towards—shall we say Herat?—Englishman.

THE SIMLA PICNIC.

It is reported at Simla that Government is about to withdraw the gratuitous medical attendance and medicine hitherto allowed to the families of clerks in the different secretariat offices whilst at Simla. The compulsory emigration to Simla has never been popular amongst the Bengali clerks who constitute the majority employed in the different offices, and the Government seem determined to do their utmost to make it still more unpopular. It has already been announced that the house allowances hitherto granted are to be reduced to the amount actually paid by the tenant, and now that the medical allowances are to be abolished no one would be surprised to hear of a sudden strike amongst the poor clerks at Simla. No mention is made of any reduction in house allowances, medical allowances, or travelling allowances in the case of members of Council or other highly-paid officials.—Englishman.

DR. HUNTER'S MISSION.

THE selection of Dr. W. W. Hunter to represent the views of the Government of India to the Parliamentary Committee on Railways has, no doubt, been advisedly made. The Government have, it is to be presumed, satisfied themselves as to the character of the views which he purposes to expound to the committee, and we are assured by information, supposed to be official, that a clear understanding has been arrived at between the Government and its delegate. A large choice of weapons is permissible in warfare, and the war which the Government of India is at present carrying on against the India Office and its policy of obstruction in regard to Public Works is one in which it would be foolish to be too scrupulous in their selection. The alliance between the Government and Dr. Hunter is thus capable of explanation. Dr. Hunter has achieved a reputation in England, where he carries more weight than in this country, and whatever may be the value of his evidence, it is something to have saved him from the temptation of making common cause with the enemy. The conclusion, therefore, is that he is expected to advocate the blessings of railways in India, and to show how they are tending to enrich the trader and to raise the standard of agriculture. That he could do this very well, if not pressed too closely in cross-examination, there can be little doubt. That he will take this line is very probable. But is there not just a fear lest the tale of Balaam may be repeated, and the Government find itself cursed by the agent whom it has sent to bless? For Dr. Hunter has on more than one occasion displayed a wavering faith in the policy which is substituting the railway for primitive conveyances, and destroying the indigenous manufactures by cheapening the carriage between Manchester and Europe. He has been used as a witness by Mr. A. K. Connell in his vituperative book on the "Economic Revolution of India and the Public Works Policy," to show that railways are an utter mistake, and to prove that the ruin of the Deccan has resulted from the extinction of pack-bullocks. Mr. Connell quotes from certain speeches made by Dr. Hunter in the course of the debate on the Deccan Agriculturists Act, and it is interesting to refer to them at the present time. "The peasantry of the Deccan," said Dr. Hunter, "and indeed the Mahrattas of all classes in the Deccan, have been suffering from economic causes sufficient to break the spirit and ruin the fortune of any race." He then proceeded to enumerate these causes in regretful tones. First, the Mahrattas were now prevented from robbing other people with impunity. Secondly, their tax on other people's industry, the chauth, was no longer exacted. "Their third source of income was a great carrying trade by pack-bullocks partly from north to south, but chiefly down the ghats from the Deccan to the coast. The railway has destroyed the trade as completely as British rule has put a stop to internal wars and the Mahratta chauth. Their fourth source of income consisted of local and domestic manufactures,—hereditary hand-loom industries, now borne down by Manchester competition, as the old pack-bullock has disappeared before the railway." This, then, was Dr. Hunter's view of the situation. He deplored the extinction of the pack-bullock and of the hand-loom; and he equally deplores the suppression of brigandage and exaction. They were all features of the good old times, and the picturesque historian gratified his literary instincts and also earned the sympathies of the Native Press, by contrasting the good old times with the iron age in which he had the misfortune to live. This rhetoric is very agreeable reading for Mr. Connell and Mr. Seymour Keay, and Dr. Hunter has done them a useful service in thus showing how the benefits of good government and of commerce can be powerfully disparaged. But whether this is the line which the exponent of the views of the Indian Government should take is another matter. We presume that this is not the sort of evidence which Dr. Hunter is sent home at public expense to give. Whether his lament over the extinction of anarchy and pack-bullocks can be shared by sober-minded, sensible men is not the point in question. If it were, we should be inclined to refer to the cautiously expressed opinion of Mr. Benet, founded on the statistics of road-registration in this province, that while railways may have reduced, but not destroyed, cart traffic over long distances, they have immensely stimulated short distance traffic. The increase in carts found in the villages of the Deccan might also be referred to by us in corroboration of this opinion. But the point in question is whether the Government of India has been well advised in placing its trust in a witness whose declared sentiments are adverse to the railway policy, and who—at least quite recently—thought that it had done more harm than good. The reply of the Government would probably be that it knows its own business best; that the statements to which Mr. A. K. Connell and others have called attention were merely obiter dicta and not the matured conclusions of Dr. Hunter's mind; and, lastly, that official education in this country is a very rapid process, and often results in most unlooked-for conversions. It is, of course, quite possible that the Government could make out a good case for itself, if it deemed it right to explain all the grounds of its action, but, in the absence of such an explanation, we cannot but give expression to the doubts which are felt by the public. The public thinks that the railway policy of India is a question on which the opinion of the responsible administrators of the country is of more value than that of a literary expert, whose acquaintance with the subject is necessarily of the slightest description; and that the Government has been ill-advised in the course it has taken. Whether it will hereafter perceive its mistake is a question which will admit of an answer when the evidence of its delegate has been given to the world. Possibly, the best defence of the Government's selection lies in the fact that Dr. Hunter's services can be conveniently spared.—Pioneer.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on June 19, at the offices, Gresham House, Old Broad-street. Sir W. P. Andrew presided, and referred with regret to the death of Sir Bartle Frere, who, though not officially connected with the undertaking, was—he could say without exaggeration—one of its founders. When Commissioner at Scinde, Sir Bartle constantly advocated the formation and the construction of the Scinde Railway and branches extending to the Bolan and the Khyber. The improvements at Kurrachee Harbour, to which he alluded at their last meeting, were being still carried on, though not so quickly as could be desired. The wheat trade in India was progressing favourably, and the article maintained its high value in the London market. He was glad to state that the next revenue of the company was now approaching the amount of the guaranteed interest. As regard their branches, the Raewind line had been extended to the main channel of the Sutlej, but its value had not so far been put to the test. They proposed to work the Rupar branch for another year; the loss on its working in the past year had been less than in the previous year. Good progress was being made by them with the construction of the Rajpoota Putiala Railway. As far as they could see yet, the Parliamentary Committee which was now sitting on the subject of Indian Railways appeared to be favourable to the railways being left with companies, though such large guarantees as were formerly given could not be expected in future. The narrow gauge lines were very inefficient, and he trusted they would be converted into broad gauge. Mr. Edward Thornton, C.B., having seconded the motion, Sir T. Douglas Forsyth referred to his recent visit to India. He had been over the line and could speak in the highest terms of its condition and the efficiency of the staff. Mr. Thornton subsequently alluded to the great strides in prosperity which the Punjab had made, and spoke hopefully of the prospect of the company soon earning the full guaranteed interest. The motion was unanimously adopted, and the retiring directors and auditors were afterwards re-elected.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

INDIAN MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GIBSON asked the Under Secretary of State for India what is the proportion of officers in the administrative grade of the Indian Medical Department to that of the executive grade; has the number of administrative grade appointments been diminished within the last few years; has a recent alteration been made in the limit of age for compulsory retirement; and has this checked promotion.

Mr. J. K. CROSS: The proportion is one administrative officer to twenty-seven executive officers, in 1880, as shown in the Blue Book 2,921 of 1881, page 283. There was a reduction of the administrative officers. In 1880 the limits of age for compulsory retirement were fixed at fifty-five years for the new rank of brigade surgeons and surgeons major, and at sixty years for surgeons general and deputy surgeons-general, instead of at fifty-five and sixty-five years respectively. The effect of lowering the age for compulsory retirement in the higher grades must be to quicken, not to retard, promotion.

GOVERNMENTAL ABSENTEEISM IN INDIA.

Mr. J. McCARTHY asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been called to the fact that petitions to Parliament are being signed by vast numbers of natives, and circulated throughout every district in the Madras Presidency, complaining of the recent protracted Governmental absenteeism, the cost and impolicy of the same, the district official absenteeism, the lost touch of district officials with their ryots, and other allegations on the same subject; and whether the Secretary of State will anticipate the prayers of the petitioners by making immediate inquiries into these allegations.

Mr. J. K. CROSS: The India Office has no information as to the petitions referred to. But I gather from the newspapers that the subject of the residence of the various Governments in the Hills during the hot weather months has recently been attracting a good deal of attention in India. The Secretary of State has no present intention of taking any action in the matter.

INDIAN STAFF CORPS.

In reply to Sir T. Lawrence, Mr. J. K. CROSS said: No official communication has reached the India Office regarding any discontent or dissatisfaction at the present rate of promotion in the Indian Staff Corps. The promotion of officers of the line has recently been very rapid. The rate, it is understood, is abnormal, and is not likely to continue. The subject, however, so far at any rate as the qualifying period of promotion of lieutenants is concerned, is receiving consideration. I may add that whereas in the Line officers who are not selected for promotion at a given age are compulsorily retired, this is not the case in the Indian Army, in which officers enjoy continuous and unbroken service to the rank of full colonel.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

INDIAN RETIRING PENSIONS.

General FLELDEN asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether the leave restrictions with reference to retiring pensions retained by the late Secretary of State for India in his despatch, No. 407, to the Viceroy of India, dated December 8, 1881, impeded the retirement of officers of the Indian Army and induced them to serve on for the highest rate of pension, thus burdening the Service with superfluous field officers, and throwing a heavy prospective charge on the people of India; and whether it was in contemplation to take steps to facilitate the acceptance by officers of the Indian Army of the pensions fixed in the above named despatch.

Mr. CROSS: There is no information to show that a relaxation of the conditions of service for pension would induce officers to retire on the lower rates of pension. The general effect of such a relaxation would probably only be to give a few officers who have obtained an excessive amount of leave their pensions earlier than they should receive them. It is not proposed to make any change in the existing regulations.

LONDON PRODUCE MARKETS.

TUESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—To-day's sales consisted of 20,100 packages, 18,000 "without reserve," but many breaks were disposed of previous to the auctions. The sales passed heavily, and in many cases still more in favour of buyers. Numerous lines of new season's Canton teas in boxes sold from 7½d. to 11½d. per lb. Coochow Orange Pekoe realised 10d. to 10¼d. per lb. The private contract market is almost at a standstill. 20,000 packages of China tea, printed for to-day's auction "without reserve," were sold without improvement on previous low rates. At the sales of Indian tea, comprising 2,030 packages of Indian and 302 packages Ceylon tea, previous prices were well maintained. A small invoice, season 1884-1885, of indifferent quality realised from 11¼d. to 1s. 10¼d. per lb.

SUGAR.—There has been a very limited demand for cane sugars. Sales of West Indian amount to only 1,400 bags, part by auction—crystallised, 21s. 6d. to 24s.; other grainy, 19s. 6d. to 22s., being last week's rates. 165 casks Porto Rico, 1,826 bags Guatemala, and 713 bags Mauritius bought in. A cargo of 450 casks, 60 barrels, refining Porto Rico sold at 14s. 6d. for Dublin; Beet firmer, also refined; and in the Clyde pieces rather dearer.

COFFEE.—The public sales, which have been small, went flatly. Plantation Ceylon without alteration. East India in some cases rather easier. Of the former, 107 casks 40 barrels and bags, sold—small, 54s. to 58s. 6d.; middling 63s. to 66s. 6d.; good middling, 70s. to 74s. 6d.; fine, 80s. to 83s. 6d.; bold 85s. 6d. to 92s. 305 cases 1,098 bags East India, partly sold—Naidoohatum, 73s. to 75s.; fine bold, 88s.; Coorg, low to good medium, 58s. to 61s. 6d., small in proportion. 632 bags Costa Rica were chiefly bought, but a few colory lots realised steady value at 61s. to 66s. 339 bags Central American, sold, 48s. to 52s.; and 549 bags washed Rio, bought in, 42s. to 58s. per cwt.

BLACK PEPPER.—Business has been done in Singapore to arrive at 9½d., which is lower.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

TEA.—At to-day's Indian auction, comprising 1,776 packages, prices were fairly well maintained. The sale included about 250 packages of season 1884-1885 (228 packages Dooterjah estate, realising 1s. 6d. to 1s. 10¼d. per lb., 25 packages Poocong 1s. 8½d. and 2s. 3d.) 120 packages Java Tea sold without reserve at fully previous rates.

SUGAR.—There has been scarcely any business done in West India; the reported sales are only 50 casks. During the week some Barbados sold from second hands, and 100 tons Native Penang in baskets, the latter at 8s. to 8s. 6d. Beet unsettled with an easier tendency, closing 14s. to 14s. 1½d., June-July. In the Clyde market pieces met a steady demand at about yesterday's rates.

COFFEE.—The public sales have gone at steady prices for Plantation Ceylon, and at fully former rates for East India kinds. Of the former, 439 casks, 226 barrels and bags sold; small, 52s. 6d. to 57s.; low middling to middling, 62s. to 67s. 6d.; good middling to fine, 69s. to 75s.; rather bold to fine bold, 84s. to 98s.—one lot, 103s. Of East India, 337 casks, 2,529 bags mostly sold—low to good medium, at 59s.

6d. to 67s. 6d.; good medium to bold, 69s. 6d. to 74s.; fine ditto, including Mysore, 80s. to 95s. Guatemala is without alteration, 1,875 bags selling at 49s. to 53s. 6d. for fine ordinary to low middling. 639 bags Costa Rica withdrawn. 303 bags Columbian sold at 44s. to 49s.; 130 bags Java bought in at 74s. 3 casks, 133 barrels and bags Jamaica mostly sold—low middling, 57s. to 68s.; fine ordinary, 47s. 6d. to 59s.

THURSDAY EVENING.

TEA.—Further sales of about 5,000 packages took place to-day. These included some breaks of new Canton congous and two small invoices of "new season" Canton scented teas, which realised from 10d. to 1s. 2d. for scented Capers, and 9¼d. for a parcel of scented Pekoe. To-day's Indian auctions, comprising 1,745 packages Indian of superior quality, passed at firm prices. 480 packages Java tea of Bagelen Estate were sold at satisfactory rates. The China auctions, amounting to 5,891 packages show no quotable alterations excepting the low price of 4¼d. for one break of common red leaf. About 900 boxes scented Caper, season 1884-1885, of disappointing quality, fetched 1s. 0¼d. to 1s. 2d., excepting one lot, which went at 10d. per lb. From Messrs. Hawes and Hertz's fortnightly China report.—Auctions during the past fortnight have been heavy, comprising a total of about 56,000 packages. Prices have hardly undergone any quotable alterations, but the tone throughout has been one of great depression. Private transactions are on an exceedingly reduced sale. China advices to the 14th June, report the opening of the Foochow market on the 8th inst., the shipments of 35,000,000lbs. from Hankow, and 4,250,000lbs. from Foochow, which gives a total of about 5,000,000lbs. over the shipment at the same time last season. The following remarks are taken from Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson's review of the Indian tea trade:—The crop of 1883 upon the whole has compared favourably with those of other years; for while there have been few instances of districts producing tea of special quality throughout, the general average have been good; and, as we remarked last year, teas showing really faulty manufacture are a diminishing quantity. In reviewing the past season, the features affording the principal subject for comment as a general steadiness of the market, and the absence of the sudden fluctuations experienced in times of excitement or depression, which have periodically recurred in previous years. A variety of causes have contributed this—among them, the moderate range of price at which the market opened, continuous free supplies sold at a price sufficiently low to stimulate consumption, but not so low as to produce reaction; the general good quality of the crop, encouraging the trade to hold stocks; a growing conviction among dealers that Indian tea is the tea of the future, leading them to cultivate this branch of their business even more assiduously than before, and to watch the market more closely; from which has resulted the steadier competition and increased buying power which has been manifest during the past twelve months. Another, and a most satisfactory feature, has been the larger demand for the finest teas of every growth and every grade, evidenced by the comparatively good prices maintained throughout for the best qualities, notwithstanding increased supplies, and the slackness of trade in Ireland, at one time almost the only market for fine tea. This is doubtless largely due to the inferiority of the recent China crops—but we have reason to attribute it also to a reaction from the cry for "cheap tea," and to a growing demand from English consumers for a better article than they have been satisfied with in former years. If, as seems probable, the features to which we have drawn attention should characterise the market in the future, it will be possible to estimate with greater certainty than hitherto the average result of a season's operations; producers, as well as shippers, will be less liable to the disappointment of expectations based upon the results obtained during short periods of excitement, and they will be spared the inconvenience and loss associated with unsound and falling markets. The figures for the twelve months ending 31st May show an increase upon last year of 6¼ million lbs. imported, and 3¼ millions lbs. consumed, leaving the stock 2½ millions heavier, which surplus, however, may be somewhat reduced if the recent improvement in deliveries be maintained. If the estimated increase of five millions in the coming crop be realised, the total supply including the Ceylon tea, will not fall far short of seventy million lbs. To consume this an increase of about three-quarters of a million lbs. in each month's delivery will be necessary. Whether this can be attained without a material reduction of values remains to be seen. The result is dependent upon several circumstances, viz., the characters of the teas, the quality of the China crops, and the price of Congou as affected by heavy or moderate shipments; the chance of an expansion in the consumption of tea in the United Kingdom, such as took place in 1882-83; renewed demand for Indian tea from other markets; for the general conditions of the agricultural and manufacturing industries, as affecting the produce markets generally. The development of the industry in Ceylon is another important factor of the future. About 1½ million lbs. were received last year, and the current crop is estimated to reach 2¼ million lbs. We do not share the fear that Ceylon tea will prejudice the sale of Indian—in any greater degree, for instance, than Darjeeling tea interferes with Assam—for it is accounted by the trade as only another variety of Indian tea, although a distinct one; and is now of such a uniformly high type that it adds to, rather than detracts from, the reputation of Indian produce, and has created a demand which has probably benefited Indian tea. Java teas, to some extent, come into competition with the lowest sort of Indian, to which they are equal in style, although, while showing improvement, still inferior in strength, pungency, and flavour. The import has reached 3½ million lbs., of which a large portion is re-exported to the Continent and elsewhere, the amount consumed at home being barely sufficient to affect the price of any but the commonest kinds of Souchong and Pekoe.

SAGO quiet. Of 310 bags about a third sold at 15s. 6d. for large grain; 633 bags flour, at 7s. 9d. to 8s. 3d.; 1,084 bags pearl, 15,228 bags flake tapioca chiefly withdrawn.

Rice is quiet. A steamer cargo of Saigon is reported, sold at 6s. 10½d. for Holland.

MONDAY, JUNE 23, 1884.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ON THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

We commented last week on some of the leading points in the letters regarding the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which were addressed by Mr. Fitzpatrick, Secretary to the Government of India in the Legislative Department, to the Judges of the High Court of Calcutta, and to the Government of Bengal. There still remain some important points for consideration, and it is to be regretted that they are of such a technical character that it may not be very easy to explain them. But some of them are quite of an elementary character and go to the very root of the Bill, and it is obvious that whilst elementary questions are still in dispute, those who object to the passing of the Bill without full and impartial inquiry, are fully justified in their opposition.

It certainly is an elementary point in such a legislative proposal as the Tenancy Bill, that the Legislature should know its own mind regarding the difference between tenure holders and ryots; but Mr. Fitzpatrick says that the Government of India will be glad to learn "if the provisions of the Bill, as amended in Select Committee, will afford reasonable facilities for meeting the grave practical difficulty of deciding what holdings are, and what are not, tenures." It is probably well known that the tenure holder, in the primary sense of the word, is a middle-man. He rents land from the zemindar, or superior landlord, in order to sublet it, and collect the rents. On the other hand, the ryot is defined to be the person who rents land, for the purpose of cultivating it by himself, or his family, or by hired servants. Thereupon it might have been supposed, that the Bill would protect the interests of the ryots or cultivators of the soil in preference to those of the tenure-holders or middlemen. Not a bit of it,

In the first place a legal presumption is introduced that where a holding exceeds a hundred beegars (about thirty-three English acres) the tenant is a tenure holder, and not a ryot—and secondly it is proposed that if a ryot sublets more than one-half of his holding he shall become a tenure-holder. The Government of India points out that the tenure-holder (the converted tenure holder, as it styles him), is, in some ways in a better position than if he had never sublet; and the landlords also justly complain that the rights and privileges, which the law now presents as a gift, were formerly obtained from them by tenure-holders for a valuable consideration. It further appears that the avowed desire of the Select Committee was to discourage subletting. But the Government of India very reasonably doubts if the measures proposed are likely to have this effect. When any ryot who rents an acre of land can elevate himself into the position of a tenure holder by subletting half an acre of it, it is surely an encouragement to him to sublet. The law does not propose to give the superior landlord any choice in the matter; but an elaborate scheme of registration before Government officials is to be provided to which the ryot will have recourse to establish his new position as a tenure holder. Be it also noted, that this registration establishment will cost money, and the Government of India wishes to know where the money is to be found to pay for it. It will be hardly decent to call on the landlord to pay for the registration of a tenure against his will, and to his pecuniary injury. The converted tenure holder is not usually a man of substance, able to afford to pay the expense; and as the Government derives no benefit from the transaction it cannot be expected to carry on registration gratuitously. Altogether the Select Committee appear to have got into a very considerable muddle, both as regards the proposed law, and its future administration; and it will require great skill on the part of the Government of Bengal to show them a way out of their difficulty, as they are now invited to do by the Government of

It would be almost impossible to state within the limits of this article the details of the case affecting ryots holding at fixed rates, to whom, under Act 10. of 1859, the statutory presumption was given that if their rent had not been changed for twenty years, it should be, henceforth, unchangeable. A famous legislative Councillor when Act 10. of 1859 was passed, skilfully evaded the operation of this presumption, by changing the rents of his ryots, who gladly consented to the reduction of rent which he offered to them. But as soon as the ryot had been thus outmanœuvred, the legislator promptly enhanced the rents to a higher scale than the original figure. This statutory presumption was obviously unjust to the landlords ab initio, and the injustice has a tendency to increase rather than diminish. The Government of India now ask the Government of Bengal to consider the question, "as there cannot be a doubt but that, the presumption being cumulative, every year renders it less in accordance with the real facts, and also increases the landlords' difficulty of rebutting it." It is, however, very doubtful if the Government of Bengal will do anything in favour of the landlords by abolishing this unfair presumption.

The Government of India next discusses the provisions of the new law regarding occupancy ryots. The Bill confers the right of occupancy not only on those ryots who already have it, which seems superfluous legislation, but it attaches the right of occupancy to all the land held in any village or estate by any settled ryot in that village or estate. The word "estate" has a technical meaning in Bengal, in connection with the payment of Government Revenue, and is equally applicable to lands forming an estate of five acres and to lands forming an estate of fifty thousand acres. Here again a new difficulty arises, and the Government of India wants a new definition of the word estate to suit the new law. Some estates consist of numerous villages, far distant from one another. But as the Bill now stands drafted, a ryot in anyone village will be entitled to rights of occupancy as soon as he gets a bit of land in any other village in the estate, although he had no sort of previous connection with the other village. The Bengal Government must provide a remedy for this anomaly.

The Select Committee having agreed to omit the iniquitous Section 56 of the original Bill, by which a landlord was compelled to confer on a new tenant the occupancy right which he had just acquired by the purchase from the last insolvent tenant, the Government of India is pleased to express its opinion that justice to the landlords required the modification of the Bill in this particular. But the Government of India is not altogether content. It draws attention to Section 42 of the amended Bill, which is intended to prevent the enhancement of the rent of the land, when it is re-let except in pursuance of a registered contract. It would certainly seem to be rather hard on the landlord that he is not to be allowed to recoup himself in any way for the loss which he must have incurred from the default of the previous tenant, and from the cost of purchasing the occupancy right of the defaulter. But the Government of India looks deeply into the possibilities of the future. It assumes that a new ryot has been found who has agreed to register a covenant to pay an enhanced, or as it is invidiously called, a competition rent. If this new ryot should default, any successor to him will be bound to pay the same rent, and this course of action may have an extensive effect in the direction of raising the prevailing rates of occupancy ryot. "The tendency of these provisions to raise the prevailing rate has been noticed by Mr. Reynolds, a Bengal Member of the Legislative Council, and the Governor General would be glad to receive an expression of the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal as to whether the anticipated danger is not such as to require some safeguard, and should this be the case, in what way it might best be met." We feel bound to apologise for taxing the patience of our readers with such very questionable stuff as this. If the Government of India is desirous of making mountains out of molehills, how can it expect the legislative machinery to work? Stripped of technicalities, the case is perfectly simple. A piece of land is let to a ryot at a rent which he finds he cannot pay, and he throws it on the landlord's hands. The landlord finds a new ryot, who agrees to pay even a higher rent, but finds out his mistake, and the land is again thrown on the landlord's hands. Obviously, if another ryot can be found he will only take the land at a lower rent than that which his two predecessors failed to pay. This is the natural course of events, and no legislative enactment will succeed in forcing the rent up to an amount beyond the real value of the land, which is the alarming difficulty against which the Government of India wishes to provide.

The contents of the letter of the Government of India are not yet exhausted, but it must be reserved for a future occasion to explain the views which are enunciated by the Government regarding the enhancement of rents, and the commutation of grain-rents to money-rents, and the case of the non-occupancy ryots, and several other important subjects which are included in the omnivorous Bengal Tenancy Bill.

NOTES ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

[FROM AN OCCASIONAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

THE whole end, object, and meaning of the Bill is simply to transfer in an indirect but most complete manner all power and control over land, from the zemindar to the Government; and in its despotic completeness, and its lawless, arbitrary, and confiscating fulness, it bears a strong resemblance to the celebrated policy adopted by Lord Strafford, and known in history as the "Thorough." God grant the parallel may end here, and that the same results in the shape of revolution and rebellion may not follow; but if they do we shall have only ourselves to thank for it. This Bill is evidently only the thin end of the wedge; as the Oudh Tenancy Bill, framed on the general lines of the Bengal Bill, is only kept back till the fate of the latter is known, and it is certain that the other provinces of India will speedily be dealt with in the same fashion. The Bill is fraught with most serious political danger; as, once the Natives of India are taught that solemn pledges made by us can, under any circumstances whatever, be put aside and be treated as of no value at all, they lose faith in our word of honour as Englishmen. Then our reign in India is virtually at an end, and the downfall of our proud Empire is merely a matter of time. The Bill is a sham and a humbug as, at the very moment that the Government of India is so loudly and noisily professing to be so anxious to introduce amongst the natives of India the principles of local self-government and to gradually extend their powers in this direction they are insiduously robbing them by this most despotic and arbitrary Bill of all power and control of every kind over the land, and transferring it entirely to themselves.

Has the Government paused to think what the probable result of this Bill will be in causing widespread disaffection throughout the length and breadth of the land? If the solemn pledges contained in the Permanent Settlement which have been held sacred for so many years, can be thus easily put aside, what security have the great Independent Chiefs that we shall continue to recognise the treaties made with them? Are these treaties a bit more binding upon our honour and conscience than the great Permanent Settlement; and if the Government of India does not scruple to break faith with, and to rob, its own subjects in Bengal who have always been true and loyal to our rule, why should they be more tender-hearted or scrupulous towards these Independent Chiefs, if at any time they take it into their heads that any or all of their possessions are necessary for the "protection and welfare" of our Indian Empire and, that is to prevent some future officious "Ilbert" from legislating away their rights and territories as has been done with the rights and lands of the Bengal zemindars?

We would ask Lord Ripon if he is not aware that already a considerable amount of disaffection exists in India against our rule, and if this fact with proofs of it have not been reported secretly to him? During the Mutiny, which took place in 1857 our salvation, consisted chiefly in the fact that the great mass of the people themselves, if they did not actually side with us, were at all events neutral, and this was specially the case with regard to the zemindars and the great mass of the peasantry. But for this we should have been so fearfully outnumbered that the list of losses and calamities would have been a hundred times greater, and the difficulty of reconquering the country would have been ten times at least greater. Thanks to the policy which this Bill initiates, when the next disturbance takes place in India, it will not be military mutiny only, like the first one, but it will be a rebellion of the whole country against us, backed up by Russian influence and money, and for its leaders the whole of the independent Princes, and all the leading men in Bengal, and the whole mass of the rural population, from the greatest zemindar down to the poorest ryot. Lord Ripon is sowing the wind but he will leave it to his successors to reap the whirlwind. We would simply ask, putting aside all supposed advantages which this Bill is to confer on the ryot at the expense of the zemindar—advantages which have been clearly proved to exist only in the fertile brain of the author of this mischievous Bill—is it worth while, merely for the sake of increasing the already too despotic power of the Government, to create such a terrible feeling of distrust and disaffection as must almost inevitably sow the seeds of some great outbreak or revolution in the future?

Besides various members of his family, who followed as chief mourners, there were present several personal friends, including Mr. Ilbery (Delhi and London Bank), and Mr. Murray Johnson of the firm of Uptons, Johnson, and Co., and among his old colleagues in the Agra and Masterman's Bank (of which Mr. Balfour was formerly general manager); Mr. Samuel Cochrane, Mr. Hamilton Dunlop, Mr. Blackall, Mr. Treeve Edgcombe, barrister, &c.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.—At an extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this company, held last week at the City Terminus Hotel, Mr. R. Campbell presiding, a resolution was passed altering the articles of association of the company, so as to enable them to keep colonial registers, pursuant to the provisions of the Companies (Colonial Registers) Act, 1883.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The thirty-second annual general meeting of this company was held on Monday, June 16, at the City Terminus Hotel; Mr. G. Noble Taylor presided, and in moving the adoption of the report stated that although there had been a reduction in the receipts there was really no ground for discouragement. The gross revenue had shown a reduction of £14,000 as compared with the corresponding period of 1882, but the expenditure had been £10,000 less, and the net revenue had been £117,000, against £120,000. The reduction in the net receipts was thus £3,600, but as compared with the corresponding period of 1881 they showed an increase of £29,000. The proportion of expenditure to gross receipts was last half-year 60·92 per cent., as against 61·49 per cent. in 1882 and 68·84 per cent. in 1881. The sanction of the Government had not yet been obtained for the proposed extension of nine miles to Calicut; but he might say that all new projects were in suspense and that nothing was being done in the way of extensions pending the result of the Parliamentary Committee now sitting on the subject of Indian railways. There had been a decrease of about £4,000 in the passenger traffic, almost the whole of which had been in the third class, though they had carried about 104,000 more passengers. As in the case of former reductions they confidently looked to future results to justify the concession which had been made in the past half-year—namely, the issue of return tickets at three pence for the double journey to passengers travelling in all trains except the mails. The net decrease in the receipts from goods traffic had been only £4,000, but they had carried nearly 21,000 tons more, the traders on the line having been encouraged by the reduction of the rates to send more traffic. Their officers were sanguine that the loss in the receipts would be recovered in the current half-year. They were lengthening their platforms, improving the third-class waiting rooms, and strengthening their bridges. With regard to the projected diversion of the line at Beyapore, and the extension to Calicut, Mr. Grant Duff, the Governor of Madras, had stated that one of the worst errors of the alignment of their principal railway would be got rid of when this extension was completed. No doubt that was true, but he (the chairman) was inclined to think that too much importance was attached to what was called the faulty alignment of the Madras Railway. A compromise had at last, he said, been arrived at between the company and the Government as to the question of the land occupied by or required for houses for their staff, the Government agreeing to charge no rent for land now in the possession of the company and occupied by these houses, and the company agreeing to pay rent for any further land which might be required. They had stipulated that they were not to be precluded from re-opening the question when it might be of consequence to the shareholders to do so—that was, when they were earning more than the guaranteed interest. When the Oriental Bank failed they had only 10 rupees on deposit, belonging to the sick fund. Sir Thomas Pycroft seconded the motion, and in reply to questions the chairman stated that the earnings of the past half-year had been at the rate of about £2 3s. per cent. They were satisfied of the soundness of the policy of charging as low as possible for the carriage of passengers and goods, and until they were convinced that they were wrong they would continue to do so. The motion was then carried unanimously, and the retiring directors and auditor were subsequently re-elected.

OUDE AND ROHILKUND.—The forty-third ordinary general meeting of this company was held June 18 at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. Pender, M.P., presided, and, in moving the adoption of the report, stated that although the half-year under review, to Dec. 31 last, had been uneventful, the earnings showed an increase, over those of the corresponding period of 1882, of £48,396; and if they examined the full earnings for the whole of 1883 it would be seen that they were considerably larger than those of any previous year, notwithstanding that the expenditure in the earlier years did not include the heavy debits now made on account of carriage and revenue stores, loss of exchange, &c. It must also be remembered that they were progressing in the face of serious difficulties. There was no real reason why wheat should not be imported into England, from India, cheaper than from America, or elsewhere. The only obstacle was at present the want of cheap transport from the interior to the seaboard. Contrary to the opinion entertained in certain quarters, the directors were quite satisfied that they had adopted a wise course in raising the passenger rate from two to two and a-half pence per mile for the lower class passengers. There had been a decrease of £22,168 in their expenditure, the diminution extending to all departments; and in the previous half-year there was also a decrease of £19,504. Having eulogised the services of the officers and staff in connection with these reductions, he said he believed the shareholders would admit that the accounts, taken all round, afforded ground for much satisfaction. They had to contend with opposition and competition from their neighbour, the East Indian Railway Company, and he feared that in what he said at their last meeting on this point, he had unwittingly given offence, but he had merely echoed the representations of their agent and his staff in India. On that occasion he also referred to the concessions being given to this company of an independent line to Calcutta starting from Benares, and passing through the rich provinces of Chota Nagpore; and to this subject exception had also been taken by the chairman and agent of the East Indian Company. He would merely say now that the more he examined the details of the project, the more it recommended itself, and the more necessary did it appear to him that the line should be constructed. If, as had been proposed, the line referred to were extended to the coast at Pooree, the passenger traffic, principally pilgrims, would be very considerable, and, what would be of more importance still, a new outlet for the transport of wheat to the coast would be provided. With regard to the best mode of extending railways in India, he felt certain that a moderate guarantee, placed in competent hands, would secure all the capital required while the present favourable period lasted. Apart from financial considerations, which were also favourable, everything connected with the manufacture of railway material was cheap, and freights were also lower. The works on the northern extension, to connect Moradabad, their present northern terminus, with Saharanpore, on the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, were being pushed forward. It had been expected that the first section of the line, from Moradabad to Nageena, would be ready for opening in the spring of this year, but the opening would now be deferred until the close of the rainy season. At the Benares Bridge Works, steady though somewhat slow progress continued to be made; but many unforeseen difficulties, which it was hoped had now been overcome, had been encountered in sinking the piers. The superstructure of the bridge, which was made with steel throughout, was already in India. The net earnings for the past year had been 3·58 per cent., but if the debenture interest on the £500,000 raised for the Benares Bridge works, and on the £500,000 raised for the northern extension—none of which was yet earning interest—were excluded, the net earnings would have been a little over 4 per cent. With respect to the current half-year, up to the 12th of April, or for fifteen weeks, the returns showed an increase of £26,899 over those of the corresponding period of 1883. General Beadle seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously, and the retiring director and auditors were afterwards re-elected.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

MONDAY.—Indian rates for telegraphic transfers are 1-32d. weaker at 1s. 7⁵/₆d. in Calcutta, and 1s. 7²¹/₃₂d., in Bombay. Owing to this continued decline in the Eastern exchanges, the silver market, so far as bars are concerned, is scarcely so steady as it was, although there is no actual change in the price, because recent arrivals have all been cleared. In the almost complete absence of business bars are quoted at 50¹/₂d., and Mexican dollars at 49¹/₂d. per ounce. China exchange rates and Rupee Paper show no alteration.

TUESDAY.—A small amount of bar silver has to-day been realised at 50 13-16d. per ounce, showing a reduction of 1-16d.; but no business has been done in Mexican dollars, in the absence of supplies. The Indian exchanges are steadier at yesterday's quotations, but the Shanghai rate has fallen $\frac{1}{4}$ d. to 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Rupee Paper is unaltered in price, and has again been very quiet.

WEDNESDAY.—The discount rate of the Bank of Bombay was reduced to-day to 7 per cent., having been reduced a week ago from 10 to 8 per cent. The rate current at that institution is thus on a level with the rate charged by the directors of the Bank of Bengal. In consequence of this increased ease in the value of money in India, exchange rates keep dull at 1s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and the Silver Market is consequently not strong, although 50 13-16d. is still the quotation for fine bars, a very small amount of business having been done at that rate. The reason for this steadiness in the price is that available supplies are very short. No business has been done in Mexican dollars, and only a nominal quotation was obtainable for them. China exchange rates and Rupee Paper are unaltered.

THURSDAY.—Although the price of bar silver has receded to 50 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. per ounce, the fall has not brought in buyers, and the tendency of the market is still dull in response to a further reduction in the discount rate of the Bank of Bengal from 7 to 6 per cent. Indian exchange rates are unchanged at 1s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. No actual price for Mexican dollars can yet be given, and China rates of exchange as well as Rupee paper are again unaltered.

FRIDAY.—Business in Mexican dollars remains at an absolute standstill, and the position of the market for bar silver is much as it was yesterday. There are sellers of the latter at 50 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. per ounce, but they are not believed to have much on hand. There is no change of any kind in either the Indian or China rates of exchange, or in Rupee Paper.

SATURDAY.—Trade in India is now much restricted, owing to the bursting of the monsoon. Money is cheap compared with the high rates which were lately quoted, the exchange rates are dwindling, being now no higher than 1s. 7 10-32d., and the inquiry for bar silver has fallen off so much that the market is weak to-day at 50 11-16d. per ounce, a very trifling amount having been placed at that rate. The remittance per Magellan, from Chili, cannot be available before Tuesday. Mexican dollars remain scarce, no fresh arrival being due until the end of next week, when the royal mail steamer Nile is expected, and there has again been a complete absence of business. China exchange rates show no change in quotations. As regards Rupee Paper, the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. are $\frac{1}{2}$ higher at 83 $\frac{3}{4}$ 84, the Four per Cents. remaining at 82 $\frac{1}{4}$ 82.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
 TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE
 OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intractable; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied
 by publishing, FORTNIGHTLY (in Bombay) a magazine
 somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings
 thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence
 no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout
 England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.
